FALSE ALARM CASE WAS DISMISSED

Evidence Was Produced to Show That a House Was in Danger of Being Burned

When William Moher, who is charged with sending in a false alarm Thursday afternoon was called, this morning at ten o'clock, there was no response but his mother who was present stated that he had gone to bring a witness to court. The case was enlarged until eleven o'clock. When young Moher presented himself at eleven o'clock he pleaded not guilty to the charge.

Mr G N Gordon appeared in the interests of the accused.

Sheriff Hall acted for the prosecution in the absence of Attorney Wood.

After hearing the evidence the Magistrate dismissed the case.

THE EVIDENCE.

Chief Howard was the first witness called. He said that Thursday afternoon at 1.20 p.m. an alarm was sent in from box 31, at the corner of Sherbrooke and Park streets. He was at home at the time having dinner. His house was near the box. He ran over in the direction of the box and noticed the defendant running away from the alarm box. He questioned him about the locality of the fire but the boy replied there wasn't any as it was all out. Asked as to who had sent the alarm, the boy said he had done it. He asked to be taken to the place where the fire had been, and the accused said it had been on Patterson street. Accompanied by the boy he went down to Patterson St., but before reaching the place where the fire was supposed to have occurred he found fence on fire on the same street. He did not think there was sufficient cause in either case for an alarm to be sent in.

Christopher McGrath when next called stated he did not see who set fire to the grass nor did he know who sent in the alarm. He was playing in a yard and only knew about the fire when the brigade arrived.

A young lady residing at 505 Patterson street was called and stated that the grass was burning about 25 feet from her home. She did not see who set fire to the grass.

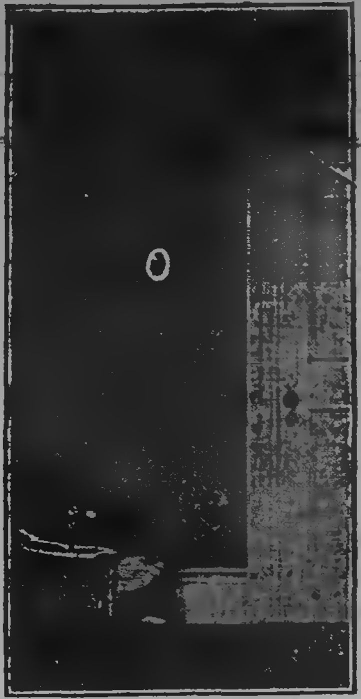
Moher along with some other boys were trying to put the fire out and were using brooms and water for the purpose. There was a fence leading up to her house and it had caught fire and was burning briskly towards the house. The boys had asked if she thought an alarm should be sent in and she told them to do so as the house was in danger. There was nobody else in the house who would have been able to assist her so she thought she was perfectly right in in telling the boys to ring in an alarm.

This was all the evidence taken.

Mr G N Gordon argued that there had been enough evidence brought forth to show that the sending in of the alarm was justifiable as the house was in danger of catching fire.

The Magistrate dismissed the defendant but intimated that the first case proven that a false alarm had been sent in he would give a heavy punishment to the offender.

Caruso declares his voice is not permanently impaired.



Cressman's Department Stores

The color scheme is the first point to aim at in the artistic decorating of a room, but there is another very important point that should not be overlooked—the pattern effect—both to give the proper lines of an artistic room treatment. —Cressman's.

Our Beautiful Stock of Room Fixings and Furnishings is at Your Service.

CONSULT US TO-DAY

Ready?—If you are liable to need Homefurnishings or Wall Papers this Spring you will do well to consult us before you decide. Do not jump at conclusions haphazard and take for granted that because a wall paper has blue in it or red, it will go with a rug that you think has the same shades in the color scheme—buy your Paper and Home Furnishings where there is easy access to each and a thorough comparison is made possible. These two departments are on the same floor (third) and both stocks are the pride of the store. In buying Wall Paper we try to select stock that will blend both in color and pattern scheme with our draperies and floor coverings. Isn't this a consideration?—No extra cost associated with such a benefit and an artistic, well balanced effect can be had for the choosing. Look to these for your Spring needs in Homefurnishings—there may be just something you were going to buy.

Pupils Will Return to Their Studies—No Cases of Scarlet Fever Have Been Reported

The schools of the city will re-open on Monday, when the students will return to their studies invigorated by their ten days vacation. In the Public schools there will be a number of new pupils in the primary departments, and it is desirable that the little ones who will attend school for the first time should be present on the opening day.

During the holidays the schools have been thoroughly cleaned, and will be fresh and bright for the return of the students.

There have been no cases of scarlet fever reported during the month of April, and apparently the contagion is pretty well stamped out.

Rev. J. G. Potter, of St. Andrew's church celebrated his birthday last night by entertaining sixty boys of the congregation to tea in the Sunday school room. The boys gathered around the festive board about 6.30 o'clock and thoroughly enjoyed the spread which the pastor had provided. Rev. Mr. Potter takes a great interest in the boys of the congregation. After supper the guests with their host proceeded in a body to the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall, where they heard Mr. C. R. Drum's lecture on "That Boy."

Before leaving the Sunday school hall, Messrs. John M. Laing and John Hill made short speeches, congratulating Mr. Potter on attaining another birthday.

TO IMPROVE SPOT THAT IS UNSIGHTLY

Ald. Turner Draws Attention of Board of Works to an Eyesore on Water Street

At last there is a movement on foot to have something done to do away with that eye-sore on Water street on the shore of the "goose pond." This place has been used as a dumping ground and is a most unsightly spot. At last night's meeting of the Board of Works Ald. Turner brought up the matter and suggested that the city engineer make an estimate of what it would cost to have a cement embankment put in and the side of the street filled in. Ald. Turner said the spot was a disgrace to the city and that something should be done to remedy the evil.

It was decided to inspect the place in question, when the Board makes its annual tour in a few days and see what can be done towards making an improvement.

Ald. Buller drew the attention of the Board to the condition of the embankment along Crescent street and this will also be inspected.

SAID TO HAVE STOLEN MONEY IN BARRIE

Young Man Arrested Yesterday Afternoon by P. C. Newhall

Fred Pearson, a pleasant-faced young man was arrested yesterday afternoon on Park street by P. C. Newhall and taken to the police court.

He is wanted by the authorities in Barrie, and is charged with stealing a considerable sum of money in that place.

Word was sent here for the local police to be on the look out for him, and he was caught yesterday.

He appeared in the police court this morning and was remanded until Monday morning as Chief Roszel received a telegram notifying him that a constable would arrive here to take charge of the prisoner.

PARK STREET DEDICATION

Rev. W. A. Cameron, of Bloor street Baptist church, Toronto, will be the preacher at the dedication services of the new Park street Baptist church on Sunday, May 9th. OPENING OF C. O. F. HALL

The major part of the entertainment in connection with the opening of the C.O.F. Hall, Bridgenorth, last night, was provided by Peterborough talent. Those from this city contributing to the programme were: Messrs. Oscar Waring, and Ed. Gardiner, who gave a delightful sketch, "Forget Me Not," which was received with continuous applause.

Mr. George Chandler sang in splendid voice, and Halpany's orchestra played several much-appreciated selections.

Mr. Waring gave a recitation, for which he received a triple recall.

Miss Sanderson acted as accompanist for Mr. Chandler.

At the conclusion of the concert a banquet was given in the hall.

BOYS CAUSE ANNOYANCE

Four small boys, probably around 11 or 12 years of age, who are in the habit of promiscuously collecting rubbers, bones, iron and other articles from yards in the city, are liable to get themselves into trouble. They make their visitations without the sanction of the householders, and their trespassing is not appreciated.

Yesterday they came from Weller street to Homewood avenue, and the residents of the last named avenue have complained of their annoyances, and wish to warn them that their liberties will not be tolerated any longer.

PRESENTED WITH A SUIT CASE

A pleasant occasion at the manufactory of Messrs J J Turner & Sons was the presentation of a solid leather suit case to Mr A E Lucas, head cutter of the awning department. Mr Lucas is leaving shortly for Winnipeg where he has accepted a position with a well known western firm.

The presentation was made on behalf of the firm and Mr Lucas' fellow employees, Mr J J Turner making the address in connection with it. He stated he was sorry to lose the valued services of Mr Lucas and wished him prosperity in the Canadian West. Mr Lucas made appropriate acknowledgement.

PERSONAL

Mr J. W. Sanders, Port Hope, is at the Oriental.

Mr. Blain M.P., and Mr. Thoburn, M.P., are in the city to-day.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Faux and their little son, Bruce, of Boston, Mass., have been spending the past few days at the home of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Faux, 215 Rubidge street. Mr. and Mrs. W. Faux intend taking up their home in the west.

Enlarged Until Tuesday

Judgment was not given in the forgery case, which was to have come up before Magistrate Edmison yesterday afternoon. The case was enlarged until Tuesday afternoon, April 20th at 3 p.m., as neither defendant or complainant or their counsel were present, and High Constable Cochrane asked for an enlargement until Tuesday.

A Noted Speaker

Mr. Alexander Marshall, who speaks at the "Crystal," to-morrow afternoon at 4 and 7 o'clock, is an able speaker and a man of distinguished literary ability. He is the author of many noted publications having written the Wondrous Globe series, Safe at Home at Last, and many others. It is expected that he will be heard by a large assembly as everywhere he speaks he attracts large numbers.

SPORTING NEWS

"FOR AMATEUR SPORT," HANDS ROAST TO PROFESSIONALISM

Peterborough, April 17.

Sporting Editor Review.

Dear Sir,—How is it that you devote so much space to professional sport? In your paper and almost every other paper in this country I see palatable notices about professional runners, professional fighters, professional walkers, professional wrestlers, and athletes making their living in other branches of professional sport.

When a man leaves the amateur ranks to turn professional he enters a business. He is no longer in the game for the love of the sport, but simply because he wants to make money he can and it certainly can't be denied, that in running, and wrestling, particularly some very unscrupulous and dishonest methods are employed to get the money. Fakes to get two gates are worked while the cheering and unsuspecting public encourages the winner and sympathizes with the loser. I have been associated with many branches of amateur sport in England and in Halifax, Canada, and know what I am talking about.

The people like to hear of professional races and other events alright but the papers waste altogether too much space in eulogising the competitors and managers and giving their columns over to straight and easy advertising of a money-making proposition. The promoters are quite often engaged in a business where publicity and popularity count for everything.

These professional athletes and their managers outside of making their living don't give a rap for the papers the public or anything else as is often shown by the schemes they work to bamboozle the public and get their money by fraudulent contests.

Yours truly,
For Amateur Sport

(The Review publishes this letter but does not desire any epistles of the above character which have a dictatory tone and suggest a different policy in the management of the sporting department than the one this and other papers see fit to employ now.—Sporting Editor.)

WAS EASY FOR GENE

Hurtubise Defeated Chris. Miller in Two Straight Falls.

Gene Hurtubise had a comparatively easy time in his bout with Chris Miller the German champion at the Star theatre, Toronto, last night, winning in straight falls in sixteen and two minutes.

Toronto dispatches say:

Eugene Hurtubise, the big Peterborough grappler, had an easy time beating Chris Miller in their match at the Star last night. Hurtubise was on the aggressive throughout and won in straight falls. The first fall took sixteen minutes and the second two minutes. Both falls were secured with the crotch hold. Kid Batten refereed.

Hurtubise won from Miller, the German at the Star Theatre last night by two straight falls the first in sixteen minutes and the second in two minutes. There was a small house on account of the rain but the match was a good one. Kid Batten refereed. It was Miller's initiation into the wrestling game.

RESULTS IN Y.M.C.A. RACES

The mile races for junior and senior YMCA boys provided some excellent sport. Quite a crowd assembled at the YMCA building to witness the starters get away and to see them finish. The course was from the building along Murray street to Water street to Smith to George and down George to the finish.

There were eleven competitors in the race for boys under 14 years of age. Nagle Phelen won, Harold Hill was second, Ross Laing third and Harold Morrow fourth. The time was 6 minutes, 20 seconds.

Three started in the senior race, W Eastwood finishing first, Ray Scott second and Bruce Lees third. The time was 6.20 1-5.

THE BOARD OF WORKS HAD BUSY SESSION LAST NIGHT

The Board of Works had a busy session last night and disposed of a large amount of business. Several deputations were heard, mostly in reference to sidewalks and sewers.

Those present were; Ald. Phelan, chairman; Aldermen McIntyre, Gillespie, Bradburn, Butler, Duncan and Mayor Rush.

Mr Taylor appeared again to urge upon the Board of Works the necessity of a sewer on Benson avenue, where he has several new houses.

The Board will take this matter up as soon as possible.

Mr. Paquette, who has several new houses on Patterson street, was present and complained about the manhole on the sewer past his place being too high. He claimed it was altogether too high.

City Engineer Hays explained that this was necessary so that the street could be raised. At present that part of the street is a miniature lake in the spring. The engineer said it was intention to raise the sidewalk and the road.

Mr. Paquette also asked to have the sidewalk built this year. There is a petition on fyle and the chairman stated that it would be taken up in due course.

The deputation having been disposed of the Board proceeded with the regular business. The first matter taken up was the street watering contracts. Reference to this will be found in another column.

Mr. T. J. Moore was present in reference to grading Bethune street. He stated that the City Engineer had been there and he stated that very little could be done until the street was graded. There are five new houses there now and they have no sidewalk. They want a grade struck so that they can build their private walks.

The city engineer was instructed to take up the matter of grading Bethune street north of Smith at once and prepare a plan for the sewers etc., and report to the council at once.

Messrs. Huffman and Armstrong were present. Mr. Huffman said he understood that there had been an order passed a couple of years ago for a sidewalk on the north side of King street. He would like to ask for that now and have the walk built at once. There were several new houses there now, and all the people want the walk.

The chairman said that the committee would consider this walk when they went around this spring and he did not doubt but that the walk would be built.

A letter was received from Messrs. G. Walter Greene & Co. Ltd., putting in a tender the castings etc., for the season of 1909.

The Wm. Hamilton Co. also had a tender in, and as the prices were the same the work will be divided up.

Sewer pipes for 1909 will be purchased from the Ontario Sewer Pipe Co. at a couple of cents per foot less than was paid last year. This tender was 6 cents per foot f.o.b. Mimico. The Hamilton Sewer Pipe Co. tendered 6 9-10c per foot f.o.b. Hamilton.

On the suggestion of Ald. Turner the chairman will get prices from local hardware men, and if they can give the same prices the order will be given to them.

The claim of the Cameron Septic Tank Co. in connection with the alleged infringement of a patent was referred to the city solicitor he to write Mr. Chipman who prepared the plans for the septic tank here. Mr. Chipman is in British Columbia at the present time.

THE 57th BAND HAS SOME EXCELLENT NEW NUMBERS

The 57th band always gives good programmes at its summer concerts at Victoria park but this year it will have an especially attractive repertoire of standard and popular compositions. Mr Gliddon, the conductor, has been busy corresponding with the metropolitan music publishers and has secured the cream of the most popular song numbers and selections of the leading song and music houses.

The heavier numbers such as appeal to lovers of deeper music have not been overlooked and several very fine overtures and classical selections have been added. Prominent among them are the overture from Rossini's "Barber of Seville" and "Stradella."

A descriptive piece that should enjoy a wide popularity is Paris Chamber's delightful "Reminiscences of the Plantation." Chambers composed this specially for John Philip Sousa when he took his band on its first visit to England and it was played at Sandringham Palace, England, by His Majesty's command. Another particularly appealing selection is the grand pastoral and hunting scene "La Fremberg." Canon Davidson heard "La Fremberg" played by leading English bands on his visit to the old country last summer in connection with the Pan Anglican Congress. He was so impressed with its tunefulness and striking, descriptive qualities that he told Mr Gliddon of it and the 57th's bandmaster now has it for Peterborough's band.

Another excellent descriptive selection which should meet with the favor of band concert audiences this summer is the "Death of Custer."

"Reminiscences of Ireland," and "Reminiscences of Scotland" have been heard locally many times but as equally a fine arrangement of "Reminiscences of England" will be heard for the first time at the park concerts this year.

"Under the British Flag" should appeal to the patriotic instincts of its hearers. The selection embraces the national airs of all the different colonies in the British Empire.

SOLO NUMBERS

The solo playing of Bandsmen Cronk and Sergeant Hughes always a delight at the weekly concerts, will be heard to advantage this year in some fascinating solos.

Three new euphonium solos will be introduced by Bandsman Cronk — "Une Serenade," with variations; "The Honeysuckle Polka" and "Bonnie Scotland." Among the cornet solo numbers that Sergeant Hughes will play will be "Sing me to Sleep," "Culver Polka," and a very pretty melody "Flirtation."

The concert mazurka "La Boulangese" for the band is certain to be well received and the novelty numbers will probably prove as popular as any in the entire range of selections. Among these will be the patrol, "Old settlers on parade" written by the composer of the "Old Kentucky Home" fantasy played so successfully by the band last year. The hits from the big music publishing house of Jerome H Remick and Company always catch the popular fancy and some of the most whistleable and jingling strains of the day are written by Remick's staff of composers. The 57th band has the 1909 arrangement and it will probably make an instantaneous hit and stand repeating on several occasions. "Don't Take Me Home," is a medely including a number of Harry Von Telzer's latest and most popular song successes. There are some lingering tunes in the arrangement. Kenry Mills never wrote a happier melody than when he originated the one for "Rainbow" and the intermezzo is a most acceptable band selection.

The best of the new concert marches will be played and there are some winners among them.

The first concert will be given on Friday evening, June 1st.

THE WALK HAS BEEN POSTPONED

THEATRICAL EFFECTS HAVE BEEN RELEASED

To-day's Osgoode Hall notes contains the following:

An order was made by Mr. Justice Riddell for the release of the scenery, costumes and paraphernalia of the Charles Mack "Come Back to Erin" Company, seized by J. J. Turner and sons, Grand Opera House, Peterborough, on payment into court by Mr. Mack of $40. The effects were seized on the refusal of Mr. Mack to continue the show when the leasees of the theatre declined to pay him his share of the receipts, which he figured at $500, after the first act.

CUPID LAUGHS AT JUSTICE NOW

Providence, April 17.—Miss Christina Palmieri, an Italian girl of 20 years, was married yesterday to Camillo Desisto, who on March 8 last shot and wounded her during a fit of jealousy. In order to marry the young man, who was in jail awaiting trial, the girl had his bail bond reduced and then furnished the securities herself. As she was the only witness to the shooting and cannot now be compelled to testify, the charge against Desisto cannot be prosecuted.

MUST NOT HIT THE POLITICIANS

Fredericton, N.B., April 17.—Police Magistrate Marsh yesterday convicted A. E. Hanson, land surveyor, of this city, on a charge of assaulting O. S. Crockett, M.P., on the street, and sentenced him to one month's imprisonment without the option of a fine. Defendant was ordered to pay costs amounting to $55. His worship explained that he had imposed a severe penalty because he thought it was the duty of the courts to protect public men from being subjected to personal violence for statements made in Parliament. Defendant's counsel applied for a stay of proceedings and will appeal the case.

The "Mayor and Corporation" proposed by A C Dunlop and responded to by Mayor Scott.

The ladies of Ashburnham provided the eatables for the dinner and the battalion band rendered appropriate music under the direction of Mr Rackett.

NEW ARMOURIES COULD NOT BE IMPROVED UPON

The construction work on the new Armouries has been performed with dispatch and it has all been done in the most approved manner. It is only a year since the laying of the corner stone by the Minister of Militia and since then an army of working men have been busily engaged in the various departments of the work in connection with the erection of the building.

When the tearing down of the old drill shed is effected, a splendid view of the Armouries can be had from George street. The main entrance faces east and Central Park with two such fine buildings as the Collegiate Institute and the Armouries situated on it, it will be one of the city's most attractive centres. Both are handsome and stately structures. The latter has a frontage of 169 feet, extending back along Murray street 250 feet. The building throughout is a model one, every known convenience and comfort for all arms of the militia having apparently been provided. One of the pleasing features is that the quarters of the three branches, the infantry, cavalry and artillery, are distinct, each having their own entrance, and thus the work of one will in no way conflict with that of the others. The south side is allotted to the infantry, the north is given to the cavalry and the quarters of the artillery are at the rear. These, of course, all lead off from the parade hall. It is 176 by 80 feet in size. It has a cement floor and will make an exceedingly fine place for drilling.

Adequate accommodation for bowling and shooting is given in the basement. The alleys and a gallery are separated by a wall. The young men of Peterborough who are attached to any section of the militia in Peterborough are indeed fortunate, as ample provision has been made at the Armouries for them to spend their evenings in a profitable and enjoyable manner. In the basement, too, is, of course, the furnace room. The building will be well heated, each room being fitted with steam-heating appliances. Splendid lavatories for the men are fitted up in the basement.

On entering the south-east door one comes to the Infantry Quartermaster's rooms, adjoining these which are two in number, is the Adjutant's room. Then along the south side are eight company rooms. All are bright and commodious. On the north-east end of this floor are the cavalry quarters, including a mobilization store room, commanding officer's room, cavalry orderly room, cavalry Armouries and harness room.

The south-west end of the building is for the artillery. Here, too, are commanding officer's room, artillery orderly room and store rooms. Then there is the main gun shed, 81x42 feet. To the north of this, is the waggon shed, 40x44 feet and also quarters for the stretcher bearer companies.

MESS AND RECREATION ROOMS.

The 57th officers' mess rooms are situated on the second floor in the south-east corner. They are bright and spacious, and leading from them is a billiard room. They are fitted up with lavatories. Galleries are at either end of the parade hall and will afford splendid accommodation for the public who desire to watch the manoeuvres of the soldiers. The Sergeants will also have mess rooms at the east end of the building. A large lecture room for the garrison is situated immediately to the south of the Sergeants' quarters, and on the north-east corner of the second floor are the caretakers' rooms, fitted with all modern conveniences.

The recreation room will no doubt be greatly appreciated. Henceforth any companies desiring to hold smokers or concerts will not have to go out of the Armouries to procure a suitable hall. One is provided for them. It is situated above the artillery quarters. It is fitted with a platform with dressing rooms leading from it. The band room is on the north-west end and is about 40 feet square. The bugle band also has a room adjoining.

Thus it is seen that everything has been provided for the comfort of officers and men who no doubt are anxious to get settled in their new "home." A revival in military matters is looked for, with such handsome Armouries.

The superintendent of the construction was Mr. G. T. Proctor, son of the contractor. He has looked after the work in a most satisfactory manner. The sub-contractors have all been competent men and the best that could be obtained. They were:

Masonry and brickwork, Mr. Alfred Simpson. Painting and decorating, Duncan and Doupe. Plumbing and Lighting, F. R. J. MacPherson Co., Ltd. Plastering, Saxby and Hill.

The Galt Art Metal Co. did the galvanized iron work and Bennett and Wright had the contract for the heating.

"Look here," said he. "What are you driving at?"

"I'm a 'blood,'" she declared recklessly, "and I want to know what people think of me. The men around here have never made me feel conscious of it, but"—

"You're afraid of these new people who are coming, eh? Well, don't worry about that, miss. It wouldn't make any difference to me or to any of your friends whether you were red, white, black or yellow."

"But it would make a difference with some people," insisted the girl.

"Oh, I reckon it would with eastern people. They look at things kind of funny. But we're not in the east."

"That's what I wanted to know. Nice people back there wouldn't tolerate a girl like me for a moment, would they?"

He shrugged his shoulders. "I guess you'd have a hard time breaking in among the 'boutonners.' But what's the use of thinking about it? This is your country, and these are your people."

A morbid desire was upon her to track down this intangible racial distinction, but she saw Runnion, whom she could not bear, coming toward them, so thanked Stark hurriedly and went on her way.

"Been making friends with that squaw, eh?" remarked Runnion casually.

"Yes," replied Stark. "She's a nice little girl, and I like her. I told her I didn't have any part in that miners' meeting affair."

"Huh! What's the matter with you? It was all your doing."

"I know it was, but I didn't aim it at her. I wanted that ground next to Lee's, and I wanted to throw a jolt into Old Man Gale. I couldn't let the girl stand in my way, but now that it's over I'm willing to be friends with her."

"Me too. By heaven, she's as graceful as a fawn. She's white too. Nobody would ever know she was a breed."

"She's a good girl," said Stark musingly in a gentle tone that Runnion had never heard before.

"Getting kind of mushy, ain't you? I thought you had passed that stage, old man."

"No; I don't like her in that way."

"I'll lay you a little eight to five that Burrell has thrown her down," chuckled Runnion.

"I never thought of that. You may be right."

"If it's true I'll shuffle up a hand for that soldier."

Meanwhile Necia had passed on out of the town and through the Indian village at the mouth of the creek until high up on the slopes she saw Alluna and the little ones. She climbed up to them and seated herself where she could look far out over the westward valley, with the great stream flowing half a mile beneath her. She stayed there all the morning, and, although the day was bright and the bushes bending with their burden of blue, she picked no berries, but fought resolutely through a dozen varying moods that mirrored themselves in her delicate face. It was her first soul struggle, but in time the buoyancy of youth and the almighty optimism of early love prevailed. And so she was in a happier frame of mind when the little company made their descent at mid day.

As they approached the town they heard the familiar cry of "Steam bo-o-o-at!" and by the time they had reached home the little camp was noisy with the plaint of wolf dogs. There were few men to join in the welcome today, every ablebodied inhabitant having disappeared into the hills, but the animals came trooping lazily to the bank and sat down on their haunches watching the approaching steamer, in their soft eyes the sadness of a canine race of slaves.

The deserted aspect of the town puzzled the captain of the steamer, and upon landing he made his way at once to John Gale's store, where he learned from the trader of the strike and of the stampede that had resulted. Before the recital was finished a man approached and spoke excitedly:

"Captain, my ticket reads to Dawson, but I'm getting off here. Won't you have my outfit put ashore?" He was followed by a group of fellow passengers, who made a similar request.

"This place is good enough for me," one of them said.

"Me, too," another volunteered. "This strike is new, and we've hit her just in time."

Outside a dozen men had crowded "No Creek" Lee against the wall of the store and were clamoring to hear about his find.

Stark wasted no time. With money in his hands, he secured a dozen men who were willing to work for hire, for there are always those who prefer the surety of ten coined dollars to the hope of a hundred. He swooped down with these helpers on his pile of merchandise that had lain beneath tarpauline on the river bank since the day he and Runnion landed, and by midafternoon a great tent had been stretched over a framework of peeled poles built on the lot where he and Necia had stood earlier in the day. Before dark his saloon was running. To be sure, there was no floor, and his polished fixtures looked strangely new and incongruous, but the town at large had assumed a similar air of incompleteness and crude immaturity, and little wonder, for it had grown threefold in half a day. Stark swiftly unpacked his gambling implements, keen to scent every advantage, and out of the handful of pale faced jackals who follow at the heels of a healthy herd he hired men to run them and to deal.

By night Flambeau was a mining camp.

CHAPTER X.

MEADE BURRELL FINDS A PATH IN THE MOONLIGHT.

"NO CREEK" LEE had come into his own at last and was a hero, for the story of his long ill luck was common gossip now, and men praised him for his courage. He had never been praised for anything before and was uncertain just how to take it.

"Say, are these people kiddin' me?" he inquired confidentially of Poleon.

"W'y? W'at you mean?"

"Well, there's a feller makin' a speech about me down by the landin'."

"W'at he say?"

"It ain't nothin' to fight over. He says I'm another Dan'l Boom, leadin' the march of empire westward. Certainly sounds good, but is it on the level?"

"Waal, I guess so," admitted Poleon. The prospector swelled with indignation. "Then why in h—l didn't you fellers tell me long ago?"

The scanty ounce or two of gold from his claim lay in the scales at the post, where every newcomer might examine it, and, realizing that he was a never ending source of information, they fawned on him for his tips, bribing him with newspapers worth $1 each or with cigars, which he wrapped up carefully and placed in his mackinaw till every pocket of the rusty garment bulged so that he could not sit without losing them. They dwelt upon his lightest word and stood him up beside the bar, where they filled him with proofs of friendliness until he shed tears from his one good eye.

Cautiously at first he let out his wit, which was logy from long disuse and as heavy on its feet as the jumping frog of Calaveras, but when they laughed at its labored leaps and sallies his confidence grew. With the regularity of a clock he planted cigars and ordered "a little more hard stuff," while his roving eye rejoiced in lachrymose profusion, its overburden losing itself in the tangle of his careless beard. By and by he wandered through the town, trailed by a troop of tenderfeet, till the women marked him, whereupon he fled back to the post and hugged the bar, for he was a bashful man. When Stark's new place opened it offered him another retreat, of which he availed himself for some time. But late in the evening he reappeared at Old Man Gale's store, walking a bit unsteadily, and as he mounted the flight of logs to the door he stepped once too often.

"What's become of that fourth step?" he demanded sharply of Poleon.

"Dere she is," said the Frenchman.

"I'm blamed if it is. You moved it since I was here."

"I'll have 'im put back," laughed the other.

"Say, it's a grand thing to be rich, ain't it?"

"I don't know. I ain' never try it."

"Well, it is, and now that I've arrived I'm goin' to change my ways complete. No more extravagance in mine. I'll never lend another cent."

"W'at's dat?" ejaculated Doret in amazement.

"No more hard luck stories and 'hurry ups' for mine. I'm the stony hearted jailer, I am, from now, henceforth, world 'thout end, amen! No busted miners need apply. I've been a good thing, but tonight I turn on the time lock."

"Ba gosh! You're fonny feller," laughed Poleon, who had lent the one eyed man much money in the past and, like others, regarded him not merely as a bad risk, but as a total loss. "Mebbe you t'ink you've been a spen'-t'rif' all dese year."

PRESENTED WITH FOUNTAIN PEN

Mr. Warden Brown Honored by Friends Before Departing for the West

A party of young people visited the home of Mr. Warden Brown last evening for the purpose of saying good-bye to him before he leaves for the west in the near future. The visit was a total surprise to Mr. Brown but a most enjoyable evening was whiled away in games music, etc. After the guests had partaken of a dainty supper Mr. Brown was presented with a handsomely finished fountain pen as a token of his friends' regard for him. The address read as follows;—

Peterborough, April 16th, 1909.

Dear Friend,—We sometimes think it hard that we are compelled to part from those with whom we have been in constant and friendly association from day to day and from one, on whose counsel and comradeship we have learned to place our confidence. Yet the inevitable is sure to happen, and we cannot help but congratulate you on your enterprise in seeking out such a grand field for success as the west, for which place you are soon to take your departure.

Whilst we, as a body of your best friends, find it impossible to exclude completely, the regret we all feel, engendered by your leaving us you may heartily assure yourself of our good wishes and hopes for your success which you will carry with you, to your new field of employment. We sincerely hope, that amid new surroundings and strange people, that you will not forget the many enjoyable occasions we have spent together during the time we have known you. We feel that as a body we cannot express in words the sentiments we entertain for you, and, therefore, we would ask you to accept this little memento of our friendship, as embodying in a very small degree, our attitude towards you and we hope that through its medium you may keep in touch with old friends and that you will always cherish the kindliest recollections of its donors. Signed on behalf of the bunch.

Norman Allison, Harry Rae,
Ernest Warne, Clarence Henry,
Chester Frowde, Holly Mollmoyle,
Arthur Elliott, Norman Rae,
Harry Myles.

Mr. Brown to whom the gift came as a total surprise thanked the party for their kindness. Before the affair came to an end a flash-light photo of the group was taken by Mr. Ernie Wilson. Mr. Brown will carry with him to the west the best wishes for success of a host of friends.

Better, Healthier Women

are known to exist in this country by thousands because freed from pain and suffering by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Could such a record be made without actual and superior merit? Read what this woman says, and realize that the results secured in her case could not have been made except by a very good medicine.

Winnipeg, Man.—"Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth in the uterus. The doctors said it was a tumor, and could not be removed, as it would cause instant death. They found that other organs were affected and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in. After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. Orilla Bradley, 284 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Science in surgery and electricity has advanced much in the past 30 years, but the treatment of disease by the old fashioned roots and herbs method has never been improved upon. The fact that this leader of them all—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—is to-day the largest seller of any similar medicine in the world, is proof positive of its value and superiority, for with all our enterprise and advertising we could not keep fooling the people for 30 years. Merit and merit alone is what has made Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the standard medicine for treating diseases peculiar to women.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

The six-year-old son of Harry Paynter, Ogilvie, Man., was accidentally shot by his brother, who was playing with a 22 calibre rifle.

Harry Evans, an Englishman, arrested at Fort Erie while trying to pass a $50 Confederate bill, was let go when he pleaded he did not know the bill was bad.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Prince Albert, who made a fortune in real estate there, and who was a niece of William Mackenzie, of the C.N.R., is dead.

"THAT BOY" WAS ABLY CHAMPIONED BY MR. C. R. DRUM LAST NIGHT

His Peculiarities and Disposition Were Interestingly Portrayed at Collegiate Institute to an Appreciative Audience

The lecture of Mr. C. R. Drum on "That Boy" at the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute last evening proved to be very interesting, and the mothers and fathers who were present, as well as the large number of these same boys, must have profited from the remarks of the speaker.

Mr. J. C. Shook acted as chairman, and after he had called upon Mr. W. McIlroy to render a solo, which was much enjoyed, the speaker was introduced to the audience.

Mr. Drum, in commencing his address, said that juvenile crime was on the increase in all countries. The statistics of thirty-seven of our largest cities tell us that the number of suicides among young people between the age of eleven and nineteen has increased ten per cent. We are reminded by the papers of the crime that is caused by young boys going to the theatre without guardians, and also by young girls who are out at late hours on the streets.

What is the cause of the large increase in crime among young people? Numerous institutions are doing good work in combatting against it, but is the home at fault? These young people come from the homes of the workmen and rich alike, and why is it so many young men go wrong? Is it due to the parents doing all the work and leaving the children with nothing to keep them busy? and is the boy forgotten in the rush of business and commercial pursuits?

He is led away at nights to the club rooms, and as parents do, we feel the responsibility that rests with us. The mother can dress her children well, take them to Sunday school, but do they give them any higher development. There are three stages of development in a boy. The first is in infancy, from one year to six being vegetable stage. The second is from six to thirteen, the animal stage; and the third from thirteen up, called the savage stage. A baby has many instincts when it comes into this world, two of which are the fighting and imitating instincts.

The fighting instinct in a boy should not be discouraged, as it is necessary, and a boy is not much good unless he can fight, although he should be taught to fight for something worth while. Roosevelt and Hughes were fighters, but they made it worth while, and we need more men who would fight for a good purpose. In imitating, children watch other young people more so that adults. We must be careful of the language used in the presence of young children, as it is then that the seed is sown that is to spring up and bear fruit; and care should be taken that they are not brought under any contaminating influencies. The case of a father staying home from church makes the boy wonder why he does it.

Boys are alive, and have some rights which should be tolerated by the parents. The many little things which the boys do, such as asking foolish questions, teasing the cat, and making all the fuss he can, are not crimes, as they are the rights of every Canadian and American boy. What we want is long-suffering patience, and it is an absolute necessity in home life. The children should be taught to memorize the many beautiful things, and although not able to fully understand them, they will be led to appreciate them in days to come. Parents should be true to the boy, and this can only be done by leading a noble life, so that he will have confidence in his father and mother. A mistake which parents sometimes make is that they lead their children to believe they are perfect angels when such is not the case. It does good to confess some of the things that were done when father and mother were children. One thing that should not occur is disagreements between the parents, as ninety per cent. of the criminal cases come from the homes where this exists. We cannot be too careful to see that differences between father and mother do not come to the hearing of the child, as it naturally thinks his father the best in the land, and the child's confidence takes a drop if he hears of any differences with the parents from a third person, which is very often the case in these affairs.

As to punishing a child it was sometimes necessary to use the rod, as obedience must be demanded, but before subjecting the children to punishment, three days should be taken to think it over. Sometimes parents who punish when angry, would not do so if they stopped to think, and as a result the child's heart becomes hardened. The boys need more of a father's society and more time should be spent at home in companionship with the children at their games.

The third stage of a boy's life is the most interesting. A great change takes place in his body, and a hundred per cent. more patience is needed by the parents. He becomes unselfish; he begins to think of others and associates with girls and other boys. Most boys join what is called a gang, and it is the first step from individual life to that of social. The gang always had a leader, who is generally chosen by his fighting ability. Meetings are held in different places and under different conditions. One of the fundamental principles of this that "you stand up for me and I'll stand up for you." Activity and excitement are what the boys are after. It is our duty to get in touch with the gang and suggest activities that will bring the boys along the right channel. Most of the members of these gangs, if given the right kind of treatment, develop into noble characters, and the Y.M.C.A. holds the solution of this problem. The boy generally has some ideal that he looks up to, and we should see that the right models are brought to his notice. He should be taken into confidence as regards things concerning the home, and given a chance to speak his opinion in regards to these matters. Show him that confidence is placed in him by his parents. The children should be given religious training, although some educational writers do say that wrong conceptions may be made by the boys and girls in early life in regard to religious affairs. The most important of all is that the boy secure spiritual training, and we should so live that an ideal could be set up for the boy to look up to and follow.

BOYS' WORK IS BOOMING AT Y.M.C.A.

Boys' Secretary is Very Busy at Present Time — Some of the Features of the Work

There are big doings around the Boys' Department at the Y. M. C. A. these days.

Mr. G. T. Evans, the boys' secretary, has kept them on the jump during their school holidays. The boys have been around the building in large numbers, and their holidays are slipping away all too soon.

On Monday and Tuesday the boys enjoyed themselves in the gymnasium, playing basketball, baseball and many other gym games. On Wednesday morning a paper chase was run, there being a large number of boys out, and the run was very much enjoyed.

On Thursday about fifteen boys were entered in the wrestling matches and a number of interesting bouts were pulled off.

On Friday the fun was finished up with two one mile races—one for boys 14 years and under, and one for boys over fourteen. The course was from the Y.M.C.A. up Murray to Water to Smith to George, and finished at the Y.M.C.A.

There were fifteen boys entered in these races, and two good races resulted.

In the junior race the entries were: N. Phelan, H. Hill, R. Laing, R. Morrow, R. Donoghue, H. Smith, L. Soden, W. Howland, A. Austin and O. Cavanah, and the boys finished in the order named. Phelan, the winner, ran a fine race. He took the lead at Smith street, and finished in 6 min. 20 sec. H. Hill, who finished second, ran a well-judged race, and R. Laing finished third with a strong sprint.

In the senior race W. Eastwood finished first, Ray Scott second, and B. Lees third. Time, 6.20 1-5. The course was the same as in the junior race. Eastwood took the lead at the start and was never headed. He increased his lead at Smith street on the return journey, and finished an easy winner. His time was 1-5 second slower than the junior race.

R. Scott finished second after a hard run. Little Bruce Lees came in third and finished with a great sprint.

On Tuesday, 27th, the Business Boys will hold a mile race, and on Thursday, the 29th they will have a wrestling tournament.

Things are booming in the Boys' Department, and boys who are not members are missing a whole lot of fun. There is a membership campaign on now and a number of new members are coming in. Now is the best time to join. The fee is $3.00 a year, and all boys twelve years or over are eligible for membership. The Boys' Department annual banquet will be held on Friday, April 23rd, and it promises to be one of the biggest affairs ever held in the Boys' Department.

MARKET PRICES WERE STATIONARY THIS MORNING

There was a big supply of maple syrup on the market this morning but it was not sold in any large quantities. The price asked this morning was 30 cents per quart, but it is still too steep for most people who prefer to wait for the price to take a drop. Other produce prices remained stationery. In the market hall eggs and butter were offered in large quantities, the eggs bringing 16 and 17 cents while butter brought from 22 to 25 cents. Chickens were sold from $1 to $1.25 per pair or singly at 60 cents. Other prices remained the same as has prevailed lately.

GANANOQUE PARTY LOSE LIVES FROM SKIFF IN RIVER

Young Married Pair and a Friend Are Thrown Into Water by Overturning of Boat and Sink Before Aid Can Get to Them

Gananoque, April 19.—As a result of the capsizing of a skiff Mr. and Mrs. R. Robbins and J. M. Taylor, popular young couple of this town, were drowned in the River St. Lawrence Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Robbins was 23 years of age and his wife only 17 years, while Taylor was a youth of 18.

The bodies of Mrs. Robbins and Taylor were recovered about four o'clock yesterday afternoon in 20 feet of water, several miles from the shore of Clayton, N.Y., which is nine miles from here.

The coroner of Jefferson County, N.Y., viewed the bodies and granted permission for their removal to Gananoque. They arrived here in a launch about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and were taken to the morgue.

The first notification of a tragedy was received here late Saturday afternoon, when word came from Clayton, N.Y., that a skiff had been found opposite the summer home of May Irwin, three miles from Clayton. Description revealed that it was a skiff that had left Gananoque at 1.10 o'clock Saturday afternoon with Mr. and Mrs. Robbins and Taylor.

A man named Pelow, working on Club Island, heard a call for help and saw an overturned skiff with two persons clinging to it. He started to the rescue in a skiff, and when he looked again only the youth, Taylor, was to be seen. When the rescuer was only a few feet away, Taylor released his hold and sank, not coming again to the surface. Pelow dropped an anchor to mark the spot and then returned to summon aid.

AN ONTARIO MAN SLAIN IN JEALOUSLY

Sailor Pays With Life for Flirtation with Captain's Wife---Shot in Hotel

Port Huron, Mich., April 19.—Geo. Birrell McKinnon, aged 21 years, of Mooretown, Lambton County, Ont., was shot by Captain Ralph Pringle, aged 32, of St. Clair, in the latter city shortly after midnight yesterday morning. McKinnon died yesterday afternoon at four o'clock, after remaining in an unconscious condition almost until the last.

According to eye-witnesses, Captain Pringle entered the saloon known as the 'Hole in the Wall," and seeing McKinnon for the first time in three years declared that the town was not big enough for both of them. The two men entered a side room and an instant later three shots were fired and McKinnon fell to the floor unconscious.

Captain Pringle told the officers when brought to the jail here that McKinnon had flirted with his wife three years ago and that he had vowed to get even. Neither of the men were intoxicated at the time.

Captain Pringle is a well-known lake captain. This year he expected to sail the steamer William A. Young.

McKinnon had sailed for two years as a first mate. Last season he was on the steamer Rosemount, of Montreal, and this year he had agreed to sail on the steamer Adriatic.

Before breathing his last at the hospital McKinnon said that Pringle had no reason for shooting him. He would have said more, but he was too weak. He died before he could be revived.

HAMILTON HAS ANOTHER CRIME NOW

Ross Wallace Stabbed and a Murder Case May be Result---Prisoner Denies Guilt

Hamilton, April 19.—What may turn out to be murder occurred yesterday morning at 10 o'clock when Ross Wallace, 22 East Hunter street, was stabbed over the heart. The doctors at the city hospital said last night that his chances of recovery were doubtful. Thomas Simpson, 152 South John street, his brother-in-law, has been locked up on the charge of doing the stabbing. The affair took place at Wallace's home. There were no witnesses, but from what the police have been able to learn, Wallace's wife was absent in Toronto on Saturday night, and Simpson's wife remained out late, not coming home until midnight. She says she could not get in, and went to Wallace's house to spend the rest of the night. Simpson went to Wallace's twice early yesterday morning, but could not find his wife. About 10 o'clock, he located her at Wallace's and as he came in she ran out. A short time after the tenants who live under Wallace's room heard a noise, and went to his room to find that Wallace had been stabbed. Simpson was under the influence of drink when arrested and the police say that he told them that he was glad he put his brother-in-law out of the way.

Yesterday afternoon the magistrate, crown attorney and Inspector McMahon went to the hospital and took Wallace's ante-mortem statement, in which he accused Simpson of stabbing him. The statement was made in the presence of the prisoner, who vigorously denied his guilt.

COMMISSION IS NAMED TO MANAGE INTERCOLONIAL

David Pottinger, and E. Tiffin, Now of the Road, Deputy Minister Butler and Frank P. Brady of the C. P. R. Have Been Appointed

Montreal, April 19.—At a banquet here by the Reform Club Saturday evening to Hon. George Graham, Minister of Railways, the announcement was made that David Pottinger and E. Tiffin of the Intercolonial Railway, Deputy Minister Butler of the Department of Railways, Frank P. Brady, divisional superintendent of the C.P.R., had been appointed a commission to run the Government railway system.

The Minister of Railways said he would not discuss the advisability of leasing the I.C.R. at the present juncture as he was determined to give the newly-appointed commission a fair trial for a year at least.

Regarding the Dreadnought question, Hon. L. R. Brodeur stated that he and Sir Fred Borden were going to England to interview the Imperial naval authorities as to the best means to adopt to bring about the protection of the Canadian coasts.

The Imperial authorities did not want the Canadian Ministry to build Dreadnoughts.

Matthew J. Butler, Deputy Minister and chief engineer of the Department of Railways, who is expected to be chairman of the commission, was born at Deseronto, Ont., and educated at Toronto University. He started his railway career in 1879 as transitman on the Pembroke extension of the Kingston & Pembroke Railway. Later he was chief engineer on the construction of the Thousand Islands Railway and the Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec Railway. In 1889 he was appointed assistant chief engineer of the Atchison, Topeka & Sante Fe. Returning to Canada in 1891 he became chief engineer of the Bay of Quinte Railway & Navigation Co., and in 1903 was appointed chief engineer of the Locomotive & Machine Co. of Montreal and designed and built their shops here. In 1904 he was appointed assistant chief engineer to the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, and a year later succeeded Collingwood Schreiber as Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. Mr. Butler also studied law, and in 1897 was admitted to practice at the Illinois Bar.

David Pottinger is also a Canadian, born in 1843 at Pictou, N.S. He started railway work in 1863 as a clerk for the Nova Scotia Railway at Halifax, becoming cashier of the road. In 1872 he became station master of the Intercolonial at Halifax, two years later being promoted to general storekeeper, in 1879 he was chief superintendant and in 1892 was promoted to be general manager of Government railways.

E. Tiffin was born at Hamilton, Ont., 1849, and started railway work with the old Great Western in 1863. He worked his way up and in 1871-5 was made station master at Brantford. Later he joined the Credit Valley Railway as general freight agent. Later he went to the States as southwestern agent of the Commercial Express fast freight line at St. Louis, Mo. Returning to Canada in 1886, he joined the C.P.R. as general freight agent of the Atlantic division. In 1901 he was appointed traffic manager of the Intercolonial and in 1903 became general traffic manager of the Government railways.

E. P. Brady was born in 1862, and educated at Newbury, Vt., served some time with the Passumpsic and other American railways. In 1888 he entered the service of the Canadian Pacific as train master, being later promoted assistant superintendent of the C.P.R. at Winnipeg, and in the following year was promoted as general superintendent of the Lake Superior division at North Bay. He resigned from the service last year, since which time he has not been connected with any railway.

CLUES IN A MURDER CASE

Beauharnois Mystery is Being Slowly Solved--Men Seen With Shot Gun

Beauharnois, Que., April 19.—The murder of Domina Pelletier, farmer, of St. Etienne de Beauharnois, on Tuesday is losing some of its mystery. The murderer is still at liberty, but there are indications that an important arrest will be made shortly.

The additional data of the tragedy is as follows:

Domina Pelletier was shot with a charge (possibly a couple of charges) from a No. 12 shotgun loaded with No. 2 shot.

His widow swore at the inquest that he was on bad terms with her people.

On the morning of the murder two men were seen with a shotgun in the neighborhood of the Pelletier farm.

Albini Hebert, a neighbor, declares that he distinctly heard two shots, fired in quick succession, and three wads were found.

About three weeks ago Aime Houle, brother of Mrs. Pelletier, visited Grumont's store in Beauharnois and bought twenty-five No. 12 cartridges. Of course this fact does not necessarily have to do with the murder.

On Wednesday morning Aime Houle took the 10.45 train from Beauharnois to Valleyfield en route for Ogdensburg to join the boat "Bennington." He was noticed at the station to be rather excited, although be is usually calm.

On Thursday morning Wm. Houle, another brother, also left Beauharnois with the avowed intention of going to the lumber camps.

A gun has been found in the Houle home.

WILD RIOT AT A FOOTBALL MATCH

Glasgow, April 19.—Sixty thousand spectators who attended a football match here Saturday joined in a wild riot because a second attempt to play off a championship tie resulted in a draw and the teams refused to continue.

The crowd rushed on to the field and tore up the goal posts. They also attacked the pavilion and set fire to the pay boxes and barricades.

A large force of mounted and foot police attempted to quell the disturbance and a savage fight resulted, in which all available missiles were used. Forty injured persons were taken to the hospital. When the firemen attempted to quell the flames the crowd cut their hose.

The football authorities intend to withhold the championship cup as a punishment for all concerned.

Gander Broke Girl's Neck.

Windsor, April 19.—Hearing his baby girl scream out in the yard while he was eating supper, William Winkelman of Monroe, Mich., rushed out and found the child lying motionless on the ground, with a large gander standing nearby. Investigation showed the child's neck was broken, and it is believed the gander had beaten the little one with its wings so severely as to cause the injury.

THE TURMOIL IS SPREADING

Rebellion in Turkey is Extending Throughout Country---The Latest Developments

Constantinople, April 19.—Turkey is aflame on both sides of the Bosphorous.

According to the latest reports, the anti-Christian feeling in Asia Minor is spreading to such widely-separated cities as Beirut and Erzerouin. The Musselman's are persecuting Christians without discrimination — but their hatred is directed principally against the Armenians—looting and burning their homes and putting them to the sword. The Turkish Government has said it is taking every possible measure to maintain order, but still it is doubtful if this outburst of racial passion can be subdued at once.

The situation in Asia Minor is quite distinct from the political turmoil that has invaded European Turkey. The former is racial and religious and bears a strong resemblance to the appalling Armenian massacres of ten years ago. The latter is an outcome of Turkish efforts at popular constitutional government.

THE SULTAN.

The Young Turkey party, controlled by the committee of union and progress, has been practically driven to cover by the strong movement against it, as first manifested among the troops at Constantinople. But the Young Turks claim to have the support of a large proportion of the army, particularly the Third Army Corps, and declare that during the coming week they will take steps to maintain Parliament and punish the rebels.

Significant developments for the next seven days may be expected to arise from the general concentration of troops on Constantinople. Without orders from the Ministry of War, indeed without orders from their superior officers, Turkish troops in large numbers are moving in the direction of the capital from Saloniki, Adrianople and other points in European Turkey. The various battalions and regiments fraternize as they meet, and the forthcoming week will disclose what is the read purpose of this remarkable advance.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Duty on Pork.

Ottawa, April 19.—What means Mr. Fielding will employ to bolster up the failing revenue must, of course, remain a Cabinet secret till Tuesday, but that there will be considerable changes in the tariff is the view of keen observers.

It is confidently expected that Mr. Fielding will place a high duty on pork, though if that were high enough to be prohibitive, the revenue would not benefit.

A readjustment of the tariff is looked for to expand the revenues, for that seems to be the prime consideration with the Finance Minister just now.

Exhume Body to Collect Expenses.

London, April 19.—A row has developed over the refusal of Mrs. Nuthins, wife of ex-Ald. Nuthins, to pay the funeral expenses of her mother, Mrs. Margaret Bayley, who died in the Aged People's Home on Sept. 27 of last year. John Ferguson, undertaker, stated at the meeting of the finance committee of the City Council that if the money is not paid at once, he will exhume the body and send it to a medical school.

Shoots Five, Two Fatally.

Geneva, N.Y., April 19—Ricco Mandazzi shot and killed his wife and her sister, Mrs. Serafina Defelica, at 8 o'clock Saturday night, and fired a bullet through the head of the latter's husband. He also shot and slightly wounded a man and woman whom he passed in leaving the premises. Jealousy is said to have been his motive.

Merge Lloyd and Hamburg Line.

New York, April 19.—A special Berlin cable to The Times says: Reports are current that proposals will be brought forward at the annual shareholders' meeting of the North German Lloyd at Bremen on April 24, with a view to effecting the amalgamation of that line with the Hamburg-American Line.

To Electrify the G.T.P.

Fredericton, N.B., April 19.—The Legislature on Saturday discussed at great length the idea of taking steps to compel, if possible, the Grand Trunk Pacific to run all trains through New Brunswick by means of electricity, and thus prevent forest fires.

The G.T.P. passes through a densely wooded section of the province and timber there is very valuable.

Premier Hazen and several others spoke strongly on the matter and a resolution was adopted with that end in view.

Stevedore's Fall to Death.

Halifax, N.S., April 19.—Within view of hundreds of people, James Travers, a stevedore, fell to his death on board the Allan Liner Hesperian at Deepwater last night. He was engaged in moving a hatch in the rear of the steamer when he lost his balance and fell down the hold, 50 feet, alighting on his head.

U.S. Official Suicides.

Paris, April 19.—William E. Bainbridge, a special agent of the United States Treasury Department, who has been attached to the consulate here, committed suicide yesterday by shooting. It is believed he was temporarily insane. Bainbridge was second secretary of the Legation at Pekin eight years ago.

Joan of Arc Now a Saint.

Rome, April 19.—In the presence of 30,000 French pilgrims practically all the bishops of France, many cardinals and descendants of the new martyr, the solemn ceremonies of the beatification of Joan of Arc were carried out in St. Peters yesterday.

According to the rule, the Pope does not attend beatifications in person, but a a mark of special devotion, he assisted yesterday afternoon at a solemn benediction, which replaced the ceremony of the veneration of relics, none existing in this case.

ALDERMEN ARE DISQUALIFIED

Court Unseats Montreal City Fathers --- Committee Wiped Out

Montreal, April 19.—Seven leading members of the City Council disqualified and the finance committee wiped out of official existence, is the result of a judgment given Saturday in the Court of Review by Judges Martineau and Monette.

Some months ago Mayor Payette and the deputy clerk, R. Beausette, went on a journey to Paris. Miss Payette and Mrs. Beausette being of the party. Before they started the City Council voted $1,500 for the mayor's expenses, and when he and the deputy returned they presented a further account, amounting to $4,000, the finance committee authorizing the payment of the same.

A man named Laurin, who was, of course, a prete nom, took action against Ald. L. A. Lapointe, chairman, Lavallee, Sadler, Guay, Robinson, J. B. A. Martin and Alex. Fraser, asking that they be disqualified and that they be compelled to return the $4,000 to the city treasury, from which it had been unlawfully taken for the European jaunt.

The case was argued before Justice Charbonneau, who dismissed it, with costs, but the plaintiff went to the Court of Review with a greater amount of luck. Judgment was rendered disqualifying the aldermen mentioned above and condemning them at the same time to pay back the amount they had got from the civic treasury. Judge Bruneau dissented, but the finding of the court created a perfect whirlwind of excitement at the Court House and City Hall.

TENOR SINGER AT CRYSTAL

Mr. Brethol Fawcett, a well-known Toronto tenor, has been engaged by Mr. Edwards to sing at the Crystal. Mr. Fawcett has a voice of pleasing quality, and will no doubt be popular with the patrons of the Crystal.

BULLS AND BEARS WILL WRESTLE IN WHEAT FIELD

Fight Will be Between Those Who Believe in U. S. Crop Report and Those Who Think Jas. A. Patten Knows the State of the Coming Yield

Chicago, April 19.—The wheat market is expected to furnish the feature news of the week, so far as America is concerned.

The non-speculative consumer is assured by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson that there is sufficient wheat in the country at normal prices to supply the demand until the new crop is marketed, and that present prices are artificial. On the other hand, Jas. A. Patten, head of the bull pool in Chicago, insists that the present prices are naturally fixed by the law of supply and demand.

Flour men and bakers are anxious, and if prices continue to soar this week a somewhat general increase in prices, through the States at any rate, or a cutting down of the size of the loaf of bread, is predicted.

Saturday, Mr. Patten personally left the market to its fate, which fate, from the view of the Patten crowd, improved considerably, as prices advanced over a cent in May and July options, Mr. Patten paid his respects to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, declaring that the latter's estimate of available supplies is a joke, and lectured reporters who, he alleges, have been more entertaining than accurate in their stories.

As to talk of removing the tariff on wheat as a slap at manipulators, Mr. Patten was for it.

"I am in favor of removing it, right now, because we will have to do it inside of ten years at any rate. It would not affect the price of wheat a penny, for the markets of the world are on a parity right now. Take off the duty on corn, oats and live stock, too, for it will not be long before we have to import them. I have said this before and "Jim" Hill has been preaching it to the farmers along his railroads for the last three or four years

"As to Mr. Wilson, he is absolutely incorrect. There was not 143,000,000 bushels on farms on March 1. It was nearer 100,000,000 bushels. My information is better than his. But don't take it from me; go to any big trader who pays his money for accurate information on which to risk his capital. They say I have a corner in wheat. I have not. The wheat I have would not feed the world for one day."

The week's place in speculative history is due to the practical passing of the so-called "May deal" and the active engagement of bulls and bears all along the line concerning the proper price of July contracts for wheat.

From this time on the price of May may fluctuate erratically, but it is stated that there will be little trading in it. The bears admit that Patten won in that struggle and that he is arbiter of the price. However, few settlements of this delivery, it is said, remain to be made. The price during the week ranged between 125 3-8 and 128 7-8, and closed Saturday at 128 1-8. July wheat, which went to 114 3-8, under tremendous pressure on Thursday, closed Saturday within a shade of the best price of the week, at 118 3-8.

Whether this price is too high or too low cannot, of course, be known until the time for delivery on contracts. Both Secretary Wilson and Mr. Patten have remarked that "time will tell," and "time" in the present instance means two months and a half from the present. That the fight between opposing interests will be one of the most exciting in the history of the Board of Trade, no one doubts. In the aggregate, it will be waged between those who believe in the accuracy of the Government reports and those who pin their faith to the Patten view.

"OPPORTUNITY:" A TIMELY AND INTERESTING PAPER

Miss Eva Tangney was the essayist on Friday evening at the regular meeting of the Ladies' Literary Society of St. Peter's T A. S., and she chose as her subject, "Opportunity." She defined it as a favorable time, or place, for learning or saying or doing a thing, and divided her subject into two parts Opportunity in the moral, or higher sense of the word, and opportunity in its material sense.

Occasions of becoming and doing good are always with us, and wherever we be there is opportunity of turning to gold the dust of daily happenings. It is true that few can utter words of wisdom, but opportunity to speak kind words is offered to everyone. Our home, our books, our city, our work, the people who love us, and those who hate us, what is all this but opportunity. Whatever can help us to think and love, whatever give us strength and patience, whatever can make us humble and serviceable though it be a trifle light as air is opportunity. Even the senses are opportunities inviting us to look that we may see and know, to listen that we may hear and understand. As life is of inestimable value, no occasion by which it may be improved can be small. There is place and means for all but we lack faith, hope, earnestness, we lack aim and purpose. Let a person but have an aim and opportunities to attain that end shall start forth like buds at the kiss of spring. The important thing is to pursue it with perseverance. Success is but a command to attempt still higher things, and failure is but an exhortation to make another attempt.

What use is to be made of opportunity, depends on the person to whom it is offered. They may adore, or they may mock, they may get understanding, or steep themselves in denser ignorance. "Nothing" says St. Bernard, "can work me damage except myself—the harm I sustain I carry about me, and never am a real sufferer, but by my own faults."

How often in our daily intercourse with humanity, do we allow numberless occasions to slip by, unheeded as it were, and in looking backward through years that have gone by, do not lost opportunities rise before us; but the past is irrecoverable, and therefore we must do what we can here and now. The wise heed no voice that bids them lose heart. This brings us to the material sense of opportunity.

We live in a golden age, where as it were, opportunity knocks at our door looks in at our windows, shoulders as as we pass along the street, and suggests to us new chances for useful life. The fact of the matter is that opportunities are so near to us that we fail to appreciate them in the proper manner, and thus let slip by days that can never be recalled. "Man," says Matthews, "is to a great extent the child of opportunity. It was a saying of Disraeli "that the secret of success in life is for a person to be ready for, the occasion when it comes. The writer brightened her essay with numerous anecdotes of famous men who owed their success in life to their appreciation of opportunity. She told the story of Ole Bull, the famous violinist, of Ontario, the Scullion boy, who is known to the sculptor world as Canova; of John Grant and Herbert Vrieland. We must often make our opportunity, as Lincoln made his in the log cabin in the wilderness, as the shepherd boy Ferguson made his; when he calculated the distance of the star with a handful of beads on a string, as George Stephenson made his, when he mastered the rules of mathematics with a bit of chalk on the sides of the coal waggon in the mines. We must make ours as the deaf and blind. Helen Keller made hers, or as everyone must who would accomplish anything worth the effort.

During the evening Miss Nora Coughlin presided and presented a splendid musical programme. The next meeting will be held on April 30, and will be the last meeting of the year.

"CLUB LIFE TOO FREQUENTLY RUINS MEN" SAYS PASTOR

At the Murray street Baptist church last night Rev. J. R. Webb gave an interesting and pointed address to young men on "The Brother in the Home."

The reverend gentleman said that because the brother in the home was strong he had a great many difficulties to contend with. He also has great opportunities and great responsibilities. The home nowadays is not made the social centre it ought to be. There is nothing that will so impress the young men of the rising generation as our impressing them with the fact that they ought to be a pillar in some home, either their father's or their own, preferably their own. One of the chief aims of the young man should be to establish himself in a home.

The fashionable club which attracts so many young fellows should never take the place of the home, and it ought not to be allowed to. Instead of preparing young men for life's battle the club too frequently ruins them.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

The Government will probably accept the waterways treaty with the United States Senate amendment.

Nearly two hundred cases of tinned meat from Chicago were seized and destroyed by the food inspector at Montreal.

A lot of damage was done at Niagara-on-the-Lake and the lower reaches of the Niagara river by ice and high water.

Mr. F. D. Monk, M.P., accepted the Conservative leadership for Quebec at a banquet given him by the Lafontaine Club of Montreal.

James A. Patten and his followers, of Chicago, have made a profit of nearly five million dollars as a result of the rise in the price of wheat.

KILLED A MAN WITH PHILTRE

Pittsburg, Pa., April 19.—After having surrendered to the local police authorities, Miss Emma Baker, aged 28 years, of North East, Pa., will be examined some time to-day for the purpose of determining her sanity. While it is believed the woman will be found to be mentally unbalanced, advices received yesterday from North East partially confirm her story.

Miss Baker, who is of refined appearance, is under the impression that she caused the death of William Anderson of North East, ten months ago, by administering a philtre to him in a cup of coffee.

Liners May Drop Queenstown.

London, April 19.—There seems some likelihood of Queenstown being dropped as a port of call by the steamers Mauretania and Lusitania on their westward journeys. The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has taken up with energy a proposal to deliver the New York mail on the fifth day from Liverpool, and Postmaster-General Buxton has promised to see what can be done. The Irish opposition to this proposal doubtless will be keen.

MISSIONARIES MEET DEATH

Reports of Death of Americans at Adana are Verified

Beirut, Syria, April 19.—A terrible uprising has occurred in Adana. Street fighting has been going on for three days and at least one thousand persons have been killed.

The city has been practically destroyed by fire.

American missionaries named Rogers and Maurer, the latter from Hadpi, are dead.

All the other Americans are safe.

The British vice-consul, Major Daughty-Wylie, was shot through the arm.

At Tarsus there was less loss of life. The Armenian quarter was destroyed. Four thousand refugees are housed in the American mission.

The need of relief is great, for shortly the fugitives will be on the verge of starvation.

Conditions in the Vilayet of Alexandretta are most serious.

A MENTAL DISORDER

A curious state of things seems to exist in the politics of Newfoundland as the following from the "Outlook" will show: "As is well known, the executive is always formed on denominational lines, and the various departments in the ministry divided in the same way. The executive has heretofore been composed of three Methodists, three Catholics and three Anglicans. In the cabinet which Morris has just announced only two Methodists are in evidence, Messrs Bishop and Crosbie and while Methodists may not relish such a representative as Crosbie, nevertheless he must be ranked nominally as a Methodist. This still leaves the Methodists with but two representatives against three as formerly. But this contemptuous treatment of the Methodist body does not end here. The six departmental portfolios have heretofore been divided equally among the three leading denominations, viz. two Methodists, two Catholics and two Anglicans. In the present ministry there is not one Methodist minister." The "Outlook" declares with vehemence that this double outrage must be resented by the whole Methodist body. "We believe that the authorities of the Methodist church will not tamely submit to being deprived of their rightful representation in the cabinet, and in the ministry, and we look for some action to be taken by them in this regard." One would look for less ribald slangwhanging than characterizes Newfoundland political controversy and for fewer attributions of every base political crime in a country so piously governed. As it is, the system of denominational representation does not seem to secure that the churches get just the sort of representatives they would themselves choose. If the government of Newfoundland was a body dealing with affairs ecclesiastical there would be reason for each denomination demanding its share in it. But when we begin to speak of such representation as a matter of right one is set wondering whether these are the only types of Christians on the island. Are there no Presbyterians, and no Baptists, denominations which bulk so large in Nova Scotia? Has the Salvation Army no rights? It seems to be live enough there. Which of the ministers is charged with the interests of the Christian Scientists and the Jews, and so forth?—Witness.

It will be pretty generally agreed that the plan advocated by The Outlook for Newfoundland or any other place is worse than crude. It is subversive of all good government and human brotherhood. Religion and race seem to be the two great rocks towards which the narrowminded and selfish are forever trying to steer the barques in their control. One fortunate thing about it however, is that in these days people will no longer submit to being hived for the benefit of their "leaders." This pretty trick will be done away with for good one of these days. It is the pet subterfuge of the politico-religious office-seeker who alone profits by keeping up the everlasting tumult.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Mr. Birrell prophesies that in a few years Ireland will no longer be regarded as the Cinderella of the United Kingdom. Its trade in 1907 amounted to £122,000,000. The export of cattle was close on Ten and a half millions' sterling and more than a million in excess of the preceding year.

The smartest youngster in the world of creation is the old hen's chick. Provided with a pointed bit of bone on the end of its beak it cuts it way out of the shell steps full-fledged upon Mother Earth and immediately proceeds to peck and scratch for a living as if it had been trained to do the task. In all winds it knows a hawk from a handsaw and though it never heard its mother's cluck-cluck will scamper under her wing on the slightest alarm.

"One of the most striking phenomena of the nineteenth century was the great rise of science and the loosening of religious ties coincident with a marked improvement in general morality. As it has for centuries been generally taught that morals depend upon religion this phenomenon has to many appeared inexplicable. The decadence of theology accompanying the rise of science is no mere coincidence. The general enlightenment of the age which has been brought about by the scientific method has undermined the Christian theology, and indeed all theology, in two ways: it has on the one hand, seriously impaired the authority of the Bible as an errorless Book; and, on the other hand, in a far more important way, it has revolutionized the world by exalting reason rather than faith. What may be called the scientific habit of mind is incompatible with the blind acceptance of statements unsupported by evidence. Science has justified, moreover, by the enormous contributions it has made to human happiness in the last half century. The question is, having thus undermined religious beliefs what has science to offer in the place of religion as a basis of morals?"—Prof. Matthews University of Chicago.

1. In the Sunday World for April 4th a correspondent, replying to "Catholic Layman," with regard to the interpretation of the text: "And I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church," etc., claims that the rock refers to Christ, not to Peter, as "Catholic Layman" holds. What do you think?

The large majority of the fathers of the church believed that the rock referred to Peter, e.g., Origen, St. Hilary, St. John Chrysostom, St. Agustine, St. Cyril, of Alexandria, and many others; and this would seem to be the most obvious meaning. However, it matters not whether the "rock" refers to Christ or St. Peter. The fact of the matter is that even if Christ did mean to say that He himself was the Rock on which the Church was built—and doubtless He is the primary foundation—yet the point to be remembered is that He had a special message for Peter, and it was this: "I will give unto thee (Peter) the keys of the kingdom of heaven; whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth," etc. The question, therefore, is not as to who is the rock, for everyone knows that Christ is the ultimate rock; but the question is did Christ—no matter whether He referred to Peter as a rock or not—did He call Peter apart and give him special prerogatives. He certainly did. For even granting that the rock applied to Christ, we have Christ giving to Peter, and to Peter alone, all the instruction about the Church found in St. Matt. xvi. Unless the words "thee" and "thou" in the text quoted above, be also twisted around to refer to Christ, it will be quite clear that St. Peter was made head of the Church.—The Catholic Register.

Nero in a New Light.

Nero was the persecutor who first shed Christian blood, yet "of we consider the tendency he represented in Roman history one could hardly classify him among the great enemies of Christianity." This is one of Ferrero's brilliant reversals of commonplace historical judgments. He goes on to point out that in reality both Augustus and Tiberius were greater enemies of the Christian teachings than he, although they never even heard of these teachings. They "sought by all means to reinforce the great Roman tradition and struggled against everything that should one day form the essence of Christianity; cosmopolitism, mysticism, the domination of intellectual people the influence of the philosophical and metaphysical spirit of life." But Nero declares this young Italian historian was a powerful collaborator of future Christian propaganda because, contrary to what his predecessors had tried to accomplish he endeavored to spread Orientalism in Rome. The masses of the Empire Ferrero asserts in McClure's (April), "only became Christian because they had first been imbued with Oriental spirit." Further:

"Nero and St. Paul, the man that wished to enjoy all and the man that suffered all were, in their own time, two extreme antitheses; but little by little with the passing of centuries they became collaborators. While one suffered hunger and persecution to preach the doctrine of redemption the other, to amuse himself, called to Rome and to Italy the goldsmiths, weavers, sculptors, painters architects, musicians, whom Rome had always rebuffed."

"Both men disappeared, cut off by the violent current of their epoch; centuries went by; the name of the Emperor grew infamous and that of the tent-maker radiated glory. But in the midst of the immense disorder that accompanied the dissolution of the Roman Empire when the bonds amongst men relaxed and the human mind seemed to become incapable of reasoning and understanding, the disciples of the saint realised that the goldsmiths, weavers, sculptors, painters architects and musicians of the Emperor could collect the masses around the churches and make them patiently listen to what they could still comprehend of St. Paul's sublime morality. When you regard St. Mark's or Notre Dame or any other stupendous cathedral of the Middle Ages like museums for the works of art they hold, you see beam in the sunshine the luminous symbol of this paradoxical alliance between victim and executioner.

"Only through the alliance of Paul and Nero could the Church have dominated the disorder of the Middle Ages and, from antiquity to the modern world, have carried through that formidable storm the essential principles from which our civilization was originated; a decisive proof that, if history in its details is a continuous strife, in its whole it is the inevitable final reconciliation of antagonistic forces obtained in spite of the resistance of individuals and through their sacrifice."—Literary Digest.

THE BIGGEST COHAN SUCCESS

Is Forty-five Minutes From Broadway --- An Expensive Production

In an interesting and enlightening article on musical comedy and musical comedy production George M. Cohan says in part in the Saturday Evening Post;—

The scenery of a musical comedy must be built big, so that the people will have plenty of room to move about. Then the producer must find out what kind of costumes are being worn in other shows and make his as different from these as possible—yet pleasing to the eye. An exceptionally good play does not require to be supplemented by extraordinarily varied costumes and scenery.

As a matter of fact one of the biggest successes I ever made, Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway cost me only forty-four hundred dollars to produce while other managers were spending from forty to fifty thousand dollars on their shows. The costumes for this play consisted of eight gingham frocks and eight travelling dresses. Fay Templeton's outfit, one sailor dress—cost four dollars. That show ran fifty-two weeks the first year and made a hundred and seventy-seven thousand dollars. We played three one-night stands, then went to Chicago. By the time we got there our production was paid for. Just think of it—we had but eight chorus girls eight chorus boys, and four songs. Musical comedy men who went up to Columbus to see it said it would never do at all. We went to the Iroquois Theatre, where, on account of the fire nobody would play before that, played there six months, and made Chicago a "run" city. I had the thing planned knew that the time was ripe sprung it and got away with it. That sort of thing us due every now and then now if a fellow had a unique idea for a little musical show he could hit the public right between the eyes with it.

There is a tendency at present toward the vulgarization of musical comedies. Many plays are drawing big houses to-day to which I'd be ashamed to put my name. The wholesome thing about it is the public is that the public quickly tires of that sort of thing. Musical shows to last must be clean—and wholesome—must be inviting to women and children since it is upon them the producers depend almost entirely for patronage.

ALMOST SENSATIONAL

There is General Surprise at the Great Number of Persons in Peterboro' Who Praise Booth's Kidney Pills.

It's but a short time since the first box of Booth's Kidney Pills came to Peterborough.

What a work this stranger has accomplished. Dozens of residents benefitted and cured of lame, weak and aching backs, urinary and kidney troubles. It is remarkable; the reason for it is Booth's Kidney Pills are a new blend of vegetable ingredients, having a peculiar action on the kidney tissue that brings quick help.

Mrs. M. J. Cook, 494 Aylmer street, Peterborough, Ont., says;—

"I always find quick relief in Booth's Kidney Pills. They strengthen and relieve my back of a dull, heavy pain which settles in the small of it and extends into my shoulders. For years I had suffered with these symptoms of kidney trouble and could find no relief. I would have frequent spells of dizziness and headaches. I was restless and weak and would often awake more tired than on going to bed. I had never found relief for these painful and weakening symptoms of kidney trouble until I used Booth's Kidney Pills procured at McDermid & Jury's Pharmacy. I have had little trouble since as I use Booth's Kidney Pills occasionally and they keep me in the best of health."

"THE ALASKAN" IS A SUCCESS

Harry Girard's Opera Making Hit in Chicago--Pretty Score

That Harry Girard, the owner of the Imperial Opera Company, which appeared here in productions of "San Toy," and "Floradora," is meeting with good fortune in the field of operatic composition, is shown by a long and favorable notice in the Chicago News of his work. "The Alaskan," presented last Monday at the Gret Northern Theatre, says the News: "The original musical score, composed by Harry Girard, a well-known comic opera baritone, is tuneful, melodious and sufficiently catchy to insure its immediate popularity."

A "PEEPING TOM" AT FENELON FALLS

His Obnoxious Behaviour is Annoying to Ladies at That Town

Fenelon Falls, April 17.—There's a "peeper" in town, that's the information the police have received from several residents in the town.

For over a year ladies have been subjected to obnoxious behaviour after dark by a stranger in parts of the town, and it has got to such a state now that the ladies cannot be induced to venture out when the clouds of night have fallen.

Besides making himself obnoxious to ladies this stranger has been indulging his curiosity by peeping, for householders say that wherever blinds have by mistake not been drawn down, there a man has been seen peeping.

The man has been seen by several well-known residents and his description given to the police.

TO DANCE TILL THEY DROP IS LATEST SLOGAN

Mysterious Lady Dancer at Montreal Says "We are to Waltz to a Finish"

She was plump and she was pretty, and she did not look in the least like a Marathon athlete trained to the minute.

There was no fear of her going stale, and there were no signs of a rigorous diet.

No daily grind seemed to worry her, and she smilingly looked forward to the sixth of May when she was to dance to a finish.

She was the mysterious lady Marathon dancer, who is to be the partner of Champion Vineberg, who claims the honors at long distance dancing for the province of Ontario, and who is to meet Champion Lasalle of the province of Quebec and lady on the night of May sixth in Stanley Hall, in Montreal in a four hour Marathon dance.

They are going to ask Mayor Payette to open the ball and they are going to dance till they drop.

"Aren't you afraid of the fatigue" the mysterious lady was asked.

"Not a bit," she replied, "but it is rather hard on the gentleman."

"How is the match to be decided?"

"The couple who are on their feet at the end of four hours win."

"Suppose both couples are on their feet?"

"Then we will have to dance till one of us drops."

And then she went off to make a selection from the score or so of men who had volunteered to act as referee.

BEATIFICATION OF JOAN OF ARC TOOK PLACE YESTERDAY

Sixty French Bishops and Many From Great Britain Were to Gather to See the Interesting Ceremony at Rome.

Yesterday, April 18, large numbers of English and French people gathered at St. Peter's in Rome to witness a ceremony which is of interest to both nations, the beatification of Joan of Arc, who nearly 500 years ago fought for her country against England, and who was put to death at Rouen.

When the deed was done it is recorded that one of the English soldiers said, "We have burned a saint."

After the ceremony, April 18, she will be called the "Blessed Joan of Arc," and perhaps ten years hence, if the church so decrees, may be again promoted, and become "St. Joan." The process of making a saint is an interesting one, and there are always a few names under consideration.

CLAIMS OF PIUS IX. PRESENTED.

For instance, the claims of Pope Pius IX. are now being considered, and within the next few years it is possible that the "process" as it is called, will have been carried through, and he also will be beatified or canonised. The "process" may be called a series of trials at which all known details of the life of the person are discussed.

As a rule it is the bishop of the town in which the person was born who makes the first moves. He obtains the support of a number of other bishops who sign a petition to the Pope, asking permission for the "trial."

If the Pope gives his sanction the moving bishop calls a meeting of influential dignitaries, priests and laymen, who may have special knowledge. At the first meeting, methods may be discussed for obtaining the necessary evidence. In the case of Joan of Arc, ten years were spent in gathering the facts; in all cases an immense amount of information must be collected.

In the course of time a report is prepared, which is sent to Rome and is considered by the congregation of Rites. More delay will come here. Possibly the report may be referred back to the makers for more information; but even if this is not necessary, the Congregation of Rites may keep it under consideration for four or five years. They may decide that the life of the person was a very worthy and very holy one, but they require much more than that. It must be proved to their satisfaction that "miracles" have been performed.

The Congregation of Rites requires evidence of not fewer than three miracles. In the case of "miraculous cures" it must be shown that doctors have pronounced the cases hopeless, or that diseases have been cured which doctors call incurable.

Usually the report contains particulars of a number of "miracles" from which the Congregation of Rites may make a selection.

CREDITED WITH CURING NUNS

The three chosen among those attributed to Joan of Arc relate to the curing of nuns belonging to different communities who are said to have obtained relief from their diseases by her intercession.

One of these nuns had suffered for years from cancer and was on the point of death when, it was claimed, she was instantly cured by a prayer of Joan of Arc.

When the Congregation of Rites has been satisfied as to the authenticity of three miracles they prepare their report which is submitted to the Pope, who considers it. There is then a gathering at the Vatican to which the public is admitted. Cardinals and bishops are present and a lawyer of the papal courts reads out the decision.

After this the ceremony of beatification generally takes place within a few months. It is held at St Peter's at about nine o'clock in the morning in the presence of the Congregation of Rites and numerous other dignitaries. The ceremony is performed before the altar of the chair of St Peter's, and as a rule it attracts a large number of people.

In the case of Joan of Arc it is expected that sixty French bishops will be present besides many hundreds of laymen who will travel to Rome especially for the ceremony. It is also quite possible that England will send a larger representation, consisting of Catholic bishops, clergy, and laymen, with perhaps the Archbishop of Westminster at their head.

The actual decree of beatification is read out by the "Notary." It contains a brief account of the trial, and also a short history of the life and announces that the Holy Father declares that this person is worthy of the worship in the correct technical sense, of the church and that henceforth the words "beata" (blessed), will be placed before the name.

When the ceremony of beatifying Joan of Arc takes place a big picture of the "Maid" will be placed in front of the altar. This will be surrounded by flowers and electric lights and will be covered with curtains until the decree has been read.

It will then be unveiled and the electric lamps will throw a glare of light upon it while the Te Deum is sung and high mass celebrated.

In the afternoon of the same day the Pope will go to pray before the picture and will assist at the benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, which will be given by one of the bishops.

The flowers, the electric lights, the cardinals in red and the bishops in violet, will make an imposing scene in the magnificent cathedral, and it will probably be watched by large numbers of English people, both Catholic and Protestant, who rarely have an opportunity of witnessing such a ceremony.

SECOND STE PIN MAKING A SAINT.

Although the process described seems bellion.
elaborate, it is only the first setp in the making of a saint.

Perhaps ten or fifteen years hence, Joan of Arc may be canonized, but before this can be done all the old routine must be passed again.

More evidence of holiness will be required, three more miracles of the first order making six in all, must be proved and more elaborate reports must be prepared.

At the final ceremony of canonization the Pope will be present and the entire service will probably last for five or six hours.

Then and not till then will Joan of Arc be a saint and be publicly venerated as such by Roman Catholics.

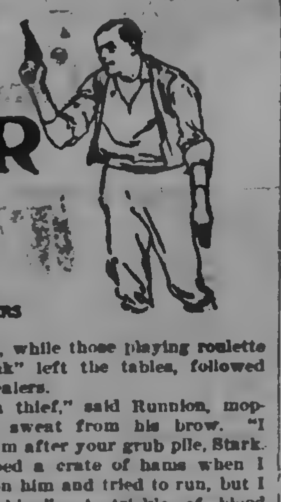
THE BARRIER

BY REX BEACH



COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

Doret took the hero of the day by the arm and led him to the rear of the store, where he bedded him on a pile of flour sacks, but he had hardly returned to the bar when Lee came veering out of the dimness, making for the light like a ship tacking toward a beacon.

"What kind of flour is that?" he spluttered.

"Dat's just plain w'eat flour."

"Not on your life," said the miner, with the firmness of a great conviction. "It's full of yeast powders. Why, it's r'arin' and risin' like a buckin' hoss. I'm plumb seasick." He laid a zigzag course for the door.

"W'ere you goin'?" asked Poleon.

"I'm goin' to get somethin' for this stomach trouble. It's fierce." He descended into the darkness boldly and stepped off with confidence—this time too soon. Poleon heard him floundering about, his indignant voice raised irascibly, albeit with a note of triumph.

"Wha'd I tell you? You put that step back while I was ashleep." Then, whistling blithely, if somewhat out of tune, he steered for the new saloon to get something for his "stomach trouble."

At Stark's he found a large crowd of the new men, who welcomed him heartily, plying him with countless questions and barking to his maudlin tales of this new country which to him was old. He had followed the muddy river from Crater lake to the delta, searching the bars and creek beds in a tireless quest till he knew each stream and tributary, and, like Gale, he had lived these many years ahead of the law, where each man was his own court of appeals and where crime was unknown.

"Oh, there's lots of countries worse'n this," he declared. "We may not be very han'some to the naked eye, and we may not wear our handk'chiefs in our shirt cuffs, but there ain't no widders and orphans doin' our washin', and a man can walk away from his house, stay a month and find it there when he comes back."

"Those days are past," said Stark. "There's too many new people coming in for all to be honest."

"They'd better be," said Lee aggressively. "We ain't got no room for stealers. Why, I had a hand in makin' the bylaws of this camp myself, 'long with John Gale, and they stip'lates that any person caught robbin' a cache is to be publicly whipped in front of the tradin' post; then, if it's winter time, he's to be turned loose on the ice barefooted, or, if it's summer, he's to be set adrift on a log with his shirt off."

"Say, are these people kiddin' me?" he inquired.

"Either would mean certain death," said a stranger—"frost in winter, mosquitoes in summer!"

"That's all right," another bystander declared. "A man's life depends on his grub up here, and I'd be in favor of enforcing that punishment to the letter."

"All the same, I take no chances," said Stark. "There's too many strangers here. Just to show you how I stand, I've put Runnion on guard over my pile of stuff, and I'll be glad when it's under cover. It isn't the severity of punishment that keeps a man from going wrong; it's the certainty of it."

"Well, he'd sure get it, and get it proper, in this camp," declared Lee, and at that moment, as if his words had been a challenge, the flaps of the great tent were thrust aside, and Runnion half led, half threw a man into the open space before the bar.

"Let's have a look at you," he panted. "Well, if it ain't a nigger!"

"What's up?" cried the men crowding about the prisoner, who crouched, terror stricken, in the trampled mud and moss, while those playing roulette and "bank" left the tables, followed by the dealers.

"He's a thief," said Runnion, mopping the sweat from his brow. "I caught him after your grub pile, Stark. He dropped a crate of hams when I came upon him and tried to run, but I dropped him." A trickle of blood from the negro's head showed how he had been felled.

"Why didn't you shoot?" growled Stark angrily, at which the negro half arose and broke into excited denials of his guilt. Runnion kicked him savagely, while the crowd murmured approval.

"Le' me see him," said Lee, elbowing his way through the others. Fixing his one eye upon the wretch, he spoke impressively.

"You're the first downright thief I ever seen. Was you hungry?"

"No; he's got plenty," answered one of the tenderfeet. "He's got a bigger outfit than I have."

"Then I reckon it's a divine manifestation," said "No Creek" Lee tearfully. "This black party is goin' to furnish an example as will elevate the moral tone of our community for a year."

"What y'all aim to do?" whined the thief.

"We're goin' to try you," announced the one eyed miner, "and if you're found guilty, as you certainly are goin' to be, you'll be flogged, after which predicament you'll have a nice ride downstream on a saw log without your laundry."

"But the mosquitoes"—

"Too bad you didn't think of them before. Let's get at this, boys, and have it over with."

A miners' meeting was called on the spot and a messenger sent hurrying to the post for the book in which was recorded the laws of the men who had made the camp. The crowd was determined that this should be done legally and as prescribed by ancient custom up and down the river. There was no defense for the culprit, and he offered none, being too scared to do more than plead. The proceedings were quiet and grim and were well nigh over when Lieutenant Burrell walked into the saloon. He had been in his quarters all day, fighting a fight with himself, and in the late evening, rebelling against his war with his conscience, he had sallied out and, drawn by the crowd in Stark's place, had entered.

A man replied to his whispered question, giving him the story, for the meeting was under Lee's domination, and the miners maintained an orderly and businesslike procedure. The matter of fact, relentless expedition of the affair shocked Burrell inexpressibly, and, seeing Poleon and Gale near by, he edged toward them, thinking that they surely could not be in sympathy with this barbarous procedure.

"You don't understand, lieutenant," said Gale in a low voice. "This nigger is a thief!"

"Gentlemen," announced Burrell, standing near the ashen gray wretch and facing the tentful of men, "this man is a thief, but you can't kill him!"

Stark leaned across the bar, his eyes blazing, and touched the lieutenant on the shoulder.

"Do you mean to take a hand in all of my affairs?"

"This isn't your affair. It's mine," said the officer. "This is what I was sent here for, and it's my particular business. You seem to have overlooked that important fact."

"He stole my stuff, and he'll take his medicine."

"I say he won't!"

For the second time in their brief acquaintance these two men looked fair into each other's eyes. Few men had dared to look at Stark thus and live, for when a man has once shed the blood of his fellow a mania obsesses him, a disease obtains that is incurable.

The two men battled with their eyes for an opening. Lee and the others mastered their surprise at the interruption and then began to babble until Burrell turned from the gambler and threw up his arm for silence.

"There's no use arguing," he told the mob. "You can't do it. I'll hold him till the next boat comes; then I'll send him down river to St. Michael's."

He laid his hand upon the negro and made for the door, with face set and eyes watchful and alert, knowing that a hair's weight might shift the balance and cause these men to rive him like wolves.

Lee's indignation at this miscarriage of justice had him so by the throat as to strangle expostulation for a moment till he saw the soldier actually bearing off his quarry.

"Stop that!" he bellowed. "To h—l with your law! We're goin' accordin' to our own!" An ominous echo arose, and in the midst of it the miner in his blind fury, forgetting this exalted position, took a step too near the edge of the bar and fell off into the body of the meeting. With him fell the dignity of the assemblage. Some one laughed, another took it up, the nervous tension broke, and a man cried:

"The soldier is right! You can't blame a dinge for stealing!" And another: "Sure! Hogs and chickens are legitimate prey!"

To Regulate Railways.

Washington, April 17.—The feasibility of establishing some form of quasi-official organization which shall act as a medium between the railroads of the country and the Federal Government is being seriously considered by the Attorney-General, the Secretaries of the Interior and Commerce and Labor and the Solicitor-General, to whom the President has confided the responsibility of working out his plans with regard to Federal control of the railroads.

The suggestion is made that these marks indicated a suicide club, to which the young women might have belonged.

THREE THOUSAND CLAIMS IN THE GOW GANDA CAMP

Mr. Frank O'Connor Has Returned From New Mining Centre—The Principal Mines—Splendid Success of the Mine Owners.

After prospecting five weeks in the latest New Ontario mining district, Gowganda, Mr. Frank O'Connor of this city returned home on Saturday evening for a visit here of three weeks. He has been working some claims in conjunction with Messrs Dave and Frank Conroy of Ashburnham and the local prospectors are well satisfied with the result of their mining operations.

In Gowganda camp the principal mines being worked and the ones upon which the most work has been performed and which are situated on the west shore of Gowganda's lake in the continued silver belt running west from Cobalt are, the Bartlett mines, on which the greatest amount of work has been done and from which or is ready to be shipped. Owing to the inconvenience of getting it out for shipment the ore will not be shipped this summer. The owners of the Blackburn have also ore ready for shipment and have made a splendid showing on their claims. The Mann mines are being successfully worked and a shaft has been sunk to a depth of sixty feet.

The Reeves, Dobbie, with an English syndicate of capitalists behind is a promising mine and the Armstrong fraction has made one of the best showings in Gowganda. It is on an eight acre piece of ground. The Boyd-Gordon is one of the best properties in Gowganda and the working of it is accomplishing most satisfactory results.

ABOUT 3000 CLAIMS

The mines mentioned above are only the principal ones of the camp. There are about 3000 claims altogether, covering a very large area. In the neighborhood of 4000 prospectors are working them and they are situated mostly in the districts between Shining Tree and Le Roy Lake. This country embraces Gowganda and Elkhorn territory.

Mr. O'Connor met Mr Dick O'Brien a former well known local boy who is trying his luck in the new mineral country. Dick is prospecting and is meeting with success.

THE PUBLIC WILL NOT BE ADMITTED TO ARMOURIES; ARE NOT COMPLETED YET

The occupying of the armories tonight by the 57th will not be in the nature of a formal opening of the armories as the regiment is simply moving into the new quarters because the old drill hall will soon be torn down. The work of demantling it will probably be commenced to-morrow, and it is for that reason that the regiment have been forced to move out.

The company's store rooms and regimental store rooms are not yet completed, and a considerable quantity of property will have to be left lying around in the armories unprotected by lock and key. On account of this the officers find it will be impossible to admit the public this evening.

The formal opening of the armories will, in all probability, take place on May 24th.

OLD FAITH AND THE NEW PHILOSOPHY ARE COMPATIBLE

At St. Luke's church last evening Rev. Dr. Langfeldt preached the first of a series of evening sermons on "The Old Faith and the New Philosophy." In an able discourse, Dr. Langfeldt said he would endeavor to point out in the series of sermons that the old faith and the new philosophy were compatible, and that they could be harmonized. The church, he said, had withstood worse storms than the one it was now passing through, and would come out of the present conflict stronger than ever and sober of the experience. Until the conflict was over judgment should be suspended.

There ere six coaches on the special train, all carrying immigrants.

Since the season opened on the 15th a close watch has been kept on the local waters. On Thursday a Peterborough man will appear in the police court on the charge of obstructing Fishery Inspector Watt while that official was performing the duties in connection with his position.

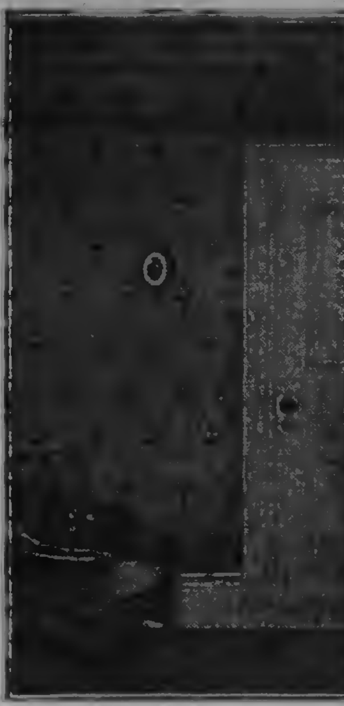
Cressman's Department Stores

The color scheme is the first point to aim at in the artistic decorating of a room, but there is another very important point that should not be overlooked—the pattern effect—both to give the proper lines of an artistic room treatment. —Cressman's.

Our Beautiful Stock of Room Fixings and Furnishings is at Your Service.

—CONSULT US NOW—



Ready?—If you are liable to need Homefurnishings or Wall Papers this Spring you will do well to consult us before you decide. Do not jump at conclusions haphazard and take for granted that because a wall paper has blue in it or red, it will go with a rug that you think has the same shades in the color scheme—buy your Paper and Home Furnishings where there is easy access to each and a thorough comparison is made possible. These two departments are on the same floor (third) and both stocks are the pride of the store. In buying Wall Paper we try to select stock that will blend both in color and pattern scheme with our draperies and floor coverings. Isn't this a consideration?—No extra cost associated with such a benefit and an artistic, well balanced effect can be had for the choosing. Look to these for your Spring needs in Homefurnishings—there may be just something you were going to buy.

RAIN DID NOT PLEASE THEM ALL YESTERDAY

The downpour of rain of yesterday, as is usual when the weatherman cuts loose, satisfied some people and dissatisfied others. The congregations of the churches were very small at both services and for those who felt in the humour for taking a constitutional stroll the conditions were not very favorable. As a result of the rain the small creeks are considerably swollen and the river has risen to a considerable height. At some corners of the streets where the water could not drain away on account of the grates becoming choked, pedestrians were considerably inconvenienced. Especially so was it at Charlotte street where the street car track crosses the railway streets. The sidewalk was completely flooded for a considerable distance and Bethune street between Charlotte and Simcoe, looked like a miniature lake.

The house wives who have Monday as a washing day, rejoiced this morning when they found their rain barrels filled with soft water. The farmers and gardeners are also wearing a broad smile and as a result maple sugar may take a big drop in price this week. Anyway the rain came, and everybody should be glad that there wasn't a snow storm.

DEADMAN'S ISLAND WILL BE LIVELY

Theodore Ludgate, Former Peterboro' Man, Has Big Scheme Under Weigh

One of the liveliest places in Canada one of these days will be Deadman's Island, if the schemes of Mr. Theodore Ludgate, the lessee of the island, are carried out. This island lies at the western end of Vancouver harbor. Mr Ludgate expects to build a wharf seven hundred feet long; to build an electric railway from the wharf to Coal Harbor Bridge — part of a line projected from the present terminus of the CPR. On the Vancouver side of the island a long wharf where vessels of moderate draught may unload will be built —with a forest of warehouses. All this will be part of the programme on Deadman's Island, where the squatters now hold sway—if the needed arrangements between the lessee and the city of Vancouver can be carried out.—Canadian Courier.

DECREASE IN TRADE

The Dominion Government returns being the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Canada for January, 1909, provides food for reflection. The total exports (free and dutiable) for January, 1906, amounted to $18,509,275.00, for 1907, to $17,644,428.00, for 1908, to $21,676,782, but for 1909, to $15,985,733.00, a steady falling off. In the totals for the twelve-month, we are practically standing still. Manifestly since the Government expenditure is so enormous our trade cannot afford to merely mark time. One rift in the dark cloud is provided, however, by the decrease in imports for the twelve-months preceding by $80,000,000.00. This may help home-industry to at least a portion of it. But the extraordinary feature of our trade both at present and heretofore is that it does not really compare at all favourably with that of Australia or the South American principalities. To develop this trade our Governments must do as their Governments do, viz: Spend much on the development of agriculture and other forms of industry and less in feeding grafters and fortune hunters. The people would do their share in the development of both home and foreign trade if given half a chance.

These will be awarded in the open class. In the club class, open only to members of the Peterborough Camera Club, Mr. Louis Mendel presented a silver medal, to be known as the Mendel medal. Mr. Howard Taylor, of the Tate, Taylor Optical Co., has presented a bronze medal, to be known as the Taylor medal. The Examiner Printing Co. has offered a year's subscription to the Daily Examiner for the best collection of 12 post cards of local views, and the Review Printing Co. have offered one year's subscription to the Review for the best landscape view, taken within four miles of Peterborough.

Several other medals are required, and it is expected that some of the citizens interested in photography will donate them. Any of the local merchants wishing to donate a prize of any kind to be awarded to local amateurs, may notify the secretary, Mr. N. A. Howard Moore, or telephone to the Examiner or Review.

Among the last entries is one from Kingston, received on Saturday. The complete programme of the exhibition will be arranged by Thursday on that day. It is learned that the Peterborough Club's pictures are good and the whole exhibition is a guaranteed treat.

A meeting of the executive of the Club will be held on Monday evening at 8.40 o'clock, at the residence of Dr. Morgan.

DIED FROM THE BITE OF WOMAN

Struggle During an Operation Resulted Fatally for London Physician

London, April 18.—"It is another life sacrificed in the interests of other people, said Mr. Wynne Baxter, the coroner at the inquest held yesterday at the London Hospital on the body of Mr. Angus Wilson, one of the house surgeons at the hospital.

Whilst he was attending a woman suffering from laudanum poisoning, she, in her struggles, bit his thumb. Blood poisoning followed, and Mr. Wilson died within a week. The jury returned a verdict of death by misadventure.

After evidence of identification had been given, Mr. M. A. Nicholson, a house surgeon at the hospital, stated that on March 25 the deceased had a high temperature, and next day was suffering from blood poisoning.

He showed the witness a healed wound on the thumb, said to have been caused by a bite from a woman on whom he was attending. Death took place last Wednesday morning.

It was necessary to gag the woman whilst she was undergoing the operation, said Mr. H. H. Jones, also a house surgeon, and she struggled all the time.

She jumped up and tried to push away all the medical men who were standing round her, but was restrained. She jumped up again, pushed the gag from her mouth, and, seizing the deceased's thumb between her teeth, bit it.

The coroner—Were the struggles of the woman due to the effects of the poison or because of her determination to take her life?

Witness—I think it was because of her determination to take her life.

"We have now lost four doctors during the year; Mr. Evan Spicer was the last before Dr. Wilson.

"Doctors run a great risk, and often get hurt, but the public know nothing of it. They only hear in a case of death. Scratches and bites are quite everyday matters."

TEAMSTERS STRIKE ON IN NEW YORK

New York, April 19.—Disorder occurred here Saturday in connection with the strike which members of the International Association of Teamsters have instituted against certain trucking firms, the men demanding higher wages and recognition of their organizations. An attack was made on a wagon belonging to Jackson Bros., 220 of whose men have struck, but the attacking party was frightened off by two shots from a revolver fired in the air by a special policeman. Cornelius Shea, who looked after the interests of the striking teamsters in Chicago two years ago, has assumed charge of the teamsters affairs here.

"Parsifal" will appear at the Grand Opera House on May 8th.

Kathryn Osterman played to a $1,561 house in Urbana, Ill., on St. Patrick's night, and the house manager kept $1,061 of the amount. For that night the manager was Rev. Father J. H. Cannon, of St. Patrick's church, and instead of the worn-out church fair he buys out an attraction one night each year for the benefit of the church, thus helping a worthy profession and saving the members of his congregation much work.

PETERBORO' RACER SENT TO OTTAWA

Canoe Built by Peterboro' Canoe Co. Will be Pitted Against One of Dey Bros.' Boats

Ottawa, April 19—Messrs Hurd and McBride have received a fine racing single from the Peterborough Canoe Company which will be turned over to the New Edinburgh Club and pitted against the fastest canoe the Capital Boat Works, of Ottawa, can turn out. The latter is a present to the club by Mr L N Bate.

Both canoes, however, are given specially for the use of Horace Merrill, amateur paddling champion of Canada. The Peterborough Club offered a racer to Merrill if he would use it in championship races. The New Edinburgh Club notified the Peterborough Company they would accept the single on one condition only, that it is faster than the Dey boat. The Peterborough people agreed to these terms and the craft is here as a result.

BURNS APPEARED STRONG WHEN POLICE INTERFERED

Pictures of Fight Shown at Grand on Saturday—Johnson Had Better of Argument But Canadian Was Game and Willing—Much In-Fighting

Outside of the original a photograph is the next best thing to go by and the moving pictures of the Burns-Johnson fight would appear to bear out Tommy Burns' contention that he was not by any means all in in the unlucky 14th round when the inspector of police at Sydney, jumped into the ring and ordered the big smoke to cease his guelling punishment of the Canadian. Shortly before this a smashing drive to the jaw had sent Tommy to the floor but when police interference put an end to the battle he walked unwaveringly to his corner and seemed quite strong and in a condition to continue. The pictures of the fight were shown at the Grand Opera House on Saturday to interested matinee and night audiences among which were many local followers of the fighting game. The general opinion was that Burns was not beaten, judging from the pictures, when he was forced to quit and he might have been able to last the 20 rounds. This latter view however is one on which there is a wide difference of opinion and in any event Johnson could have been given the decision.

JOHNSON'S GOOD GENERALSHIP.

The negro fought a wily battle. In spite of the fact that he was so much bigger than Tommy he did practically no leading and his game and shifty opponent forced the fighting all through and was on the aggressive right up to the time the police thought the most humane thing to do was to put an end to the contest.

As is mentioned above Johnson was wary but showed good generalship in the policy he adopted. In some of the rushes of the order that have been effective against Moir, Squires and other big and droway pugilists. He planted his man stiffly to the face and jaw. Several times he flashed out with straight smashes that must have shook the bulldog Tommy from his teeth to his toes, but he came back for more and fought a wonderfully plucky battle against hopless odds.

A LOT OF IN-FIGHTING.

For the first few rounds Burns was about even-up with the negro or in any event the black only had a light advantage. As the fight progressed, however, it could be seen that Tommy did not have a chance. He seemed to be working himself to death in his efforts to beat down the negro's guard The attack was futile however, for the black champion slid out of danger and covered up in splendid fashion

There was a great deal of in-fighting and the match would have undoubtedly been a faster one for the spectators had clean breakaways been the order. But by special arrangement, Referee Hugh McIntosh's powers of interference with the men were limited to such an extent that they did considerable jabbing when they were in half wrestling embraces. At close quarters Johnson repeatedly jarred Burns with savage right upper cuts. These were delivered with such frequency that they undoubtedly did much damage and had considerable to do with the defeat of the former champion.

Johnson boxes cleverly and is a smooth and rangy performer. There's no question that he has more science than Burns and while he does so in a quiet way, varies his style of fighting to greater extent than the Canadian who moves pretty nearly on the same plan all the time.

HOAGLAND AND WEST ARE TIED FOR SECOND PLACE; FENTON IS THERE TOO

A special from Oswego says:

The crowd that attended the opening of the big four day walking match at the Armory last night got their money's worth. Although Bill Hoagland was the only veteran walker in the contest the youngsters gave as pretty and speedy an exhibition as one would want to see. They essayed to trim the old man but Bill was just a little bit faster than any of them. Young Brown of Auburn made the best showing last night, Hoagland gaining but three laps of the ten that he allowed as a handicap. West also proved himself a masterful walker,

HOT PACE AT START

The enthusiasts were on hand early but there was considerable delay owing to the walkers not being ready and it was 8.27 o'clock before Referee William B. Shasty of New York, lined the men up for the start. At a signal given by Walter Bonsteel, judge, the men started off with West in the lead followed by Brown, Hoagland, Blake, the Syracuse negro, Howell, Adle and Fenton. The men hit up a mighty pace and kept whirling around the track at a terrific gait for nearly two miles. For a time they were bunched but they strung out after a time and each walked his own race after that.

Hoagland allowed the aspiring youngsters a full half mile and it was not long before he decided to get on even terms. He picked up three laps on Howell in the first mile and at ten miles he had gained the handicap on all the other walkers with the exception of Brown and West. When time was called for last night at 10.57 he had passed West but had only part of a lap on him. Brown's time for the ten miles was 1.25, West 1.27 and Hoagland 1.29.

"HUNGRY" A SURPRISE

There were many furious sprints during the early part of the race, in which Bill Hoagland and Borwn were the conspicuous figures. The veteran was hard pushed at times but he managed to land in front. Bill Adle the boy from Victory gave Hoagland the best race of the bunch for over half a mile but the old boy finally pulled away leaving the Victory chap pretty well bushed. "Hungry" Fenton, the Auburn phenomenon was the surprise of the night. He hit it up furiously at odd times kept fairly fast gait all the way through. One whole section of the Armory rooted for Fenton and he picked up a little change by some fast going. Blake, the Syracuse "dinge" was a lot better than an "also ran" and showed a great sprint in his peculiar crouching style Referee Shasty warned him once when he appeared to be running. Howell plugged along right faithfully and he also indulged in a bit of speed on occasion. The final moments of the race were very exciting and the men finished in a great sprint that brought the crowd to its feet in excitement.

A GOOD REFEREE

Referee Shasty made as much of a hit as the walkers. He watched the contestants with a hawk-like eye and none of them got away with any queer stuff. He took particular care to see that there was no touching or fouling when the men passed, and followed them around the armory at a sprint pace. Although Mr Shasty's collar wilted and his face perspired freely he kept his temper admirably and pleased both the crowd and the contestants.

The score was;

	Miles	Laps
Brown	17	0
Hoagland	16	13
West	16	13
Fenton	16	8
Black	15	18
Howell	15	10
Adel	15	7

The race will be continued tonight and those who want to see some good going should not fail to be present The race will start at 8.15 each evening and close at 10.45 sharp.

McDONOUGH TO MANAGE TEAM IN CHICAGO

Will Have Charge of Shamrock Lacrosse Team—Most of the Players Will be Canadians

The Fort William Times-Journal says;—Paddy McDonough leaves on Thursday for Chicago, where he will locate for the summer. He has received inducements to manage the Shamrock, lacrosse team of the Windy City and has wired accepting the offer. McDonough played for the Chicago team last summer and the promoters of lacrosse in that city thought so much of his ability that they not only offered him the position of manager; but also instructed him to get his own players. He will line up a team consisting of Canadians, among whom will be one or two local men.

Mr. McDonough was captain of the Wanderers hockey team the past winter and was considered one of the best defence players in the New Ontario league. While a resident in Fort William he was employed as pile inspector at the new G.T.P. elevator.

SPORTING TALK

There will be no intermediate baseball meeting this evening. The Regiment hold the boards tonight and it was decided that it would not be well to have too much excitement on the same night. The meeting will be held Tuesday night in the YMCA.

Toronto blanked Trenton in the game Saturday. The score was 3-0 and the only features were the work of Pitcher Moffitt with his fade away and Fred Hicky not getting a hit.

Fred Simpson quit at the 16th mile yesterday afternoon in his race with Swanberg. The time for the distance was considerably slower than that made by St Yves

---

There will be a meeting of the senior baseball league on Wednesday evening.

A large number of baseball enthusiasts had a good work-out at Bowell's field Saturday afternoon.

Rube Waddell lost his game Saturday. Chicago got ten hits off the big southpaw while the best St Louis could do was to get away with four hits off Dr Smith.

What's the matter with the Midland league, and where is Bill Cinnamon? Ask the Fays.

A fine picture of the Chieftain hockey team, winners of the junior city hockey league, is on exhibition in the window of E. N. McWilliams' hat store.

The 14th regiment's black cat was killed yesterday afternoon, and consequently there is much regret among the members of the hockey team and the regiment in general.

"Pussy" was sunning himself in front of his master's house on Ordnance street, when a large dog jumped over the boulevard and gave the animal a shake which killed it.

The owner of the cat is looking for vengeance from the owner of the dog. He claims that the black cat was highly trained and could even make a decent salute when it saw an officer.—Kingston Standard.

WILL KETCHEL SNATCH THE TITLE FROM JOHNSON? PICTURES ARE NO GUIDE

The question of greatest interest to the ring followers nowadays is will Ketchel defeat Johnson? The middleweight champion who made such a muss of Papke will be the negro's next opponent and is selected by many as the man outside of Jeffries in condition who can win back the championship belt for the white race. Ketchel is said to be a second Fitzsimmons and his ring career has proven that he is a clever game and hard hitting pugilist. It is said that he has more power in his punch than Johnson who disappointed his backers in not being able to put Burns away with some of those vicious wallops and upper cuts he landed. every day, will weigh in at about 175 pounds when he clashes with Johnson and that is heavier than Burns and Fitz were when they captured the heavyweight laurels. Johnson is expected to tip the beam at a little over 200.

The fight in Sydney for the pictures of it, are not good dope to judge Johnson's ability on however. The negro played a waiting game with Burns and in doing so showed good judgment. He undoubtedly would be able to put up a fiercer argument if the occasion demanded it and may be stirred up to quicker and more telling action when he battles with the heavy hitting Ketchel. Even at that though Kethel on his past form looks to have an even chance to win.

The fight in Sydney for the pictures

FRANK GOTCH GETS MANY TOKENS OF APPRECIATION

Chicago, Ill., April 17.—Once more in his rooms at the Hotel Morrison, Frank Gotch to-day was reaping some of the rewards which go to the victor in any championship athletic contest.

Frank's rooms were a bower of flowers, tributes from admiring friends, and were almost constantly filled by those who called to offer their congratulations in person, while the telegraph bell never did cease to jingle from early morning till late at night. Gotch himself was in great spirits. There is no denying that he had entertained considerable respect for the prowess of Yousif Mahmout, and while confident that he would win, neither Gotch himself nor any of the scores of wrestling experts at the matside had any idea that the champion could be returned triumphant in such a short time, and in so decisive a manner.

"Mahmout is a very strong man," said Gotch to-day, "but he wrestled right to suit me, and I had determined to force a quick issue."

SENDS THANKS TO BUFFALO.

Gotch asked me to send his thanks to many congratulations he received by wire from Buffalo friends. It is within the bounds of possibility, that the champion will wrestle a match in Buffalo the week of April 25. Last night, at the ringside, the winner was challenged by half a dozen cracks, among the number being Hjalmar Lundin, the big Swede, who thinks himself in line for a championship tussle. While Chicago would like to see Gotch in all his big matches, effort is being made to get the consent of the champion and Lundin to meet in Buffalo.

If they are matched it will be an interesting tussle, for Lundin is one of America's crack heavyweights, and while Gotch would be an overwhelming favorite, the Swede is no foe to be despised.

Gotch's great victory last night really puts the American in a position in the wrestling world similar to that once held by Jeffries in the fighting game. He seems to be in a class by himself. However, he is being besieged for his signature to wrestling and theatrical contracts all over the country and promises to be a very busy man. Gotch has signed articles, also, to meet Hackenschmidt again in Melbourne, Australia, next January, and unless the Russian Lion gets an attack of cold feet he will take the steamer for the island continent some time next fall.

PIERRI GREATLY SURPRISED.

Antoine Pierri, manager for Mahmout, is undoubtedly a bitterly disappointed man. As Hackenschmidt told me a year ago that he had underestimated Gotch, so Pierri told me to-day at the Saratoga hotel that the strength and ability of the western boy had greatly surprised him and Mahmout. In fact, so high an opinion has Pierri formed of the American that he insists Gotch must weigh 220 or 230 pounds, when the records at the Illinois Athletic Club show that Frank was about 204 on the afternoon of the day of the match.

Pierri is undecided as to whether to keep Mahmout in America for engagements offered to him awhile longer or to hurry him home to Turkey at once to bring back another Turk, bigger and better than Mahmout, so they say, of whom Pierri and Mahmout have knowledge. Pierri says that he will now undertake in deadly earnest the task of producing a man to dethrone the champion. And Gotch says "Come on."

Mahmout himself, not speaking English, finds it difficult to express an intelligible opinion of his successful opponent, but when asked, shrugs his shoulders significantly and grunts "Strong—very quick."

Ed. Smith made a splendid referee for the big contest.

TRAP SHOOTING TOURNAMENT WILL BE HELD AT OTTAWA

Ottawa has been chosen for the 9th annual tournament of the Dominion of Canada Trap Shooting Association and the surest shots from coast to coast will assemble at St. Hubert's Gun Club during next August to shoot for the Canadian championships in the various events. This tournament, which is the most extensive trap shooting event of the season was held last year at Sherbrooke, Que. It took place in Ottawa in 1905, and proved a decided success. It is expected that over one hundred entries will be received and these will surely include the crack shots of the MAAA.

The tournament will continue for three days and is open to all Canadian amateurs who are members of an affiliated gun club. In addition to the sweepstakes other competitions, all of which will be fore the Canadian Championships have been divided into the following classes.

Individual, Hamilton Gun Club trophy; individual Grand Canadian Handicap Cup; eight men team, Dominion Cartridge Co., trophy; and the two-men team competition

Already arrangements have been begun by the members of St. Hubert's Club of Ottawa, for the big event, and not a few of the members are practising steadily with a view of trying for the Canadian honors.

SIMPSON IN STYLE

Quit in the Sixteenth Mile in Race With Swede at New York.

New York, April 18.—In a match race at the full Marathon distance, 26 miles 35 yards, which was run today at Celtic Park, Long Island City, John V. Svanberg of Sweden, scored a hollow victory, covering the course in 2 hours 41 minutes 44 2-5 seconds.

His opponent, Fred Simpson, the Ojibway Indian, quit after running 16 miles. He was suffering from a stiff right knee, as a result of a cold, which he caught while racing against Fred Appleby in a 20-mile match ten days ago.

Svanberg's time is 58 4-5 seconds behind that made by the Frenchman, Henri St. Yves, in the Marathon Derby at the Polo Grounds, here two weeks ago, St. Yves ran over a rain-sodden field, while Svanberg had a good cinder track to-day, so that the Frenchman's performance was by far the better.

ST. YVES BEAT PAT WHITE.

New York, April 18.—Henri St. Yves of France, who won the Marathon Derby at the Polo Grounds two weeks ago won a 15-mile race from Patrick White of Dublin, Ireland, at the Clifton race track, near Passaic, N.J., today. White, after leading on sufferance for the first mile in 5.27, had to fall behind the Frenchman, who gained a lap on him in the fourth mile. At ten miles St. Yves was two laps to the good, and White dropped out at ten and a half miles, saying that his ankle, which he sprained in his race against Maloney, had gone back on him.

St. Yves finished out the full 15 miles in 1.27.05 4-5. The track was chiefly composed of soft dirt and clay, Corney Burns and Hurtubise's Unknown, an American glove artist, have been matched to meet at the roller rink in a short time. The bout will be for 10 rounds.

GOLF CLUB WILL MEET SATURDAY

Meeting Changed From Wednesday Night Previously Announced

A meeting of all the shareholders and association members of the Peterborough Golf and Country Club will be held in the Bank of Montreal chambers Saturday night at eight o'clock. The meeting was to have been held on Wednesday evening. And those interested are asked to note the change in date.

RUNNERS ARE ALL QUITTING

Great Many of Them Fail to Go the Route in Distance Races

This business of the runners in Marathon races quitting is getting altogether too monotonous. Shrubb quits a couple of times, Dorando quits, Longboat quits; Appleby quits and now Simpson quits.

In former days the runners used to finish. The quitting habit is getting quite popular now and if it continues much longer will spread to the public.

MEETING OF THE BOWLING LEAGUE

Every Team Should Have Representative at P.B.C. Alleys To-night

A meeting of the Bowling League will be held at the P.B.C. alleys tonight, and every team should have a representative on hand. The meeting is a most important one, as the future of the league depends pretty much on what happens to-night.

CRICKET CLUB MEETS TO-NIGHT

A meeting of the cricket club will be held to-night at the Y.M.C.A. The main business will be the choosing of an executive committee and the election of a committee. A full attendance of members is asked for.

SHRUBB AND THE INDIAN

Longboat Will Run a 15 and 20 Mile Race With the Englishman

Toronto, April 19.—Alfred Shrubb and Tom Longboat had a friendly conference on Saturday, when they signed up for two races at 15 and 20 miles on condition that the Indian's heel will permit him to race. Shrubb left for New York Saturday night to finish up his training on the spot for his race next Saturday with St. Yves.

Longboat will go to Deseronto this week. The fifteen mile race, if Tom can train, will take place in Toronto around May 24, and the 20 mile event likely a month later in New York.

Harold O'Rourke, the 15-year-old son of Tim O'Rourke, after finishing second in the Irish-Canadian boys race on Saturday, mysteriously disappeared, and up to last night no trace of him could be found. The fact that the boy's bicycle had been polished up during the day and also was missing, leaves the hopeful that young O'Rourke has taken an extensive ride into the country, though he was never known to leave home in this manner before.

RUNNING

The Victoria Harrier Club held their first cross country run on Saturday afternoon.

There were eight started from the club rooms on Park street, and all enjoyed the run, which covered about six miles. Good time was made.

Any who wish to join the club are asked to be on hand Tuesday night, when another run will be held.

LACROSSE

There will be a meeting of all those interested in lacrosse at the Crown Hotel to-morrow night at 8.30 p.m. A large turnout is expected as the prospects for a team for the coming season are very bright.

A STRIKING APPEAL WAS MADE TO MEN

Mr. C. R. Drum Speaks to an Impressed and Responsive Audience at Opera House Yesterday Afternoon—"An Honest Man," the Subject

Mr. C. R. Drum, the international secretary of the Y.M.C.A., has a particularly vital and convincing way of his delivering his message when he speaks. What he says is clutching and tenacious. He impresses his audience as a man seriously stating his convictions and also conveys the all important impression that those convictions have immovable foundations or in other words, mean the truth.

Yesterday afternoon he spoke to a very large audience of men at the Grand Opera House and his address was an appealing and impressive one. His subject, "An Honest Man," offered a wider and more original scope than the title would suggest and the speaker, after discussing some of man's earthly obligations, showed that the largest debt owed was to the Heavenly Father and it was one htat all mankind should strive the hardest to fulfill.

Mr. Drum used many interesting illustrations and anecdotes to prove the consistency of his arguments and is particularly happy and effective in this regard.

Most of the incidents he related had a touching human interest in them but some were of a pithy and amusing nature. All of them were particularlyy applicable and had a direct bearing on the different phases of the topic under discussion.

The seating capacity of the ground floor was taken up and quite a number assembled in the balcony. Mr. Drum was given an attentive hearing and the audience was greatly interested in the splendid way in which he dealt with his subject.

The meeting opened shortly after 4 o'clock by the singing of two hymns and these were followed by prayer offered by Mr. J. C. Shook.

The Orpheus Quartette, consisting of Messrs. Cole, Lillie, Miller and Thornton then sang "Sweet Peace" in a pleasing manner.

Mr. V. Eastwood, who occupied the chair, ade a few preliminary remarsk and also introduced the speaker.

AN HONEST MAN.

Someone has said that an honest man is the noblest gift of God, said Mr. Drum, in beginning his address, "and I believe he is right."

What was an honest man? He was one who would pay his obligations or being unable to meet them, would make an extreme effort to do so. No honest man would occupy a $5 seat at a theatre while his grocer to whom be owed a bill, occupied a 35 cent seat in the gallery.

But there was sometimes more than that. Were we not too ready to condemn others without first investigating circumstances fully. We owed every man the benefit of the doubt. We owed every man a pull up and not a push down. The poisoned fangs of the adder, sunk deep into the flesh, didn't do as much harm as the slanderous tongue.

A MAN'S DUTY TO HIS FAMILY.

Out of loving hearts we needed to reach down and help the other man who was in need. Were we doing this? The speaker admonished men to be kind, thoughtful and considerate to their families and wives. The wives had troubles and perplexities peculiar to their own sex, which the men knew little about. If they had boys in their homes and he congratulated those who had, the boys should be treated with kindness and given helpful suggestions by their fathers. And the man owed it to his family to live a clean, pure, helpful and noble life.

The speaker told of the great curse of strong drink and warned young men to keep away from it.

But the drink evil wasn't the worst evil that effected our families today. There was another evil which was eating at the very vitals of our national strength. Little will be said about it, little could be printed about it, but it was one of terrible significance.

"You owe your family the correct position on divine questions. There's altogether too much levity about the the church, about the minister, about God our Heavenly Father."

If your souls were immortal, these matters were too important to be trifled with. Because we don't know all about the scriptures and some of the questions could not be answered, it was an absurd attitude to take to say that we would disbelieve the scriptures from beginning to end.

There were many mysteries about things material. The speaker called attention to the electric lights that illuminated the theatre. The lights were there, but who could define electricity.

The intellect was not the only method of arriving at proper conclusions in connection with divine truth. We should assume the same scientific attitude toward divine questions as we do toward the questions of the ordinary everyday life. The critics of the Bible, as a rule, know very little about it.

THE GREATEST DEBT.

"Men, you know I'm right, don't you? It's in your heart Why do you try to crush it out?" persisted the speaker.

Did we not honestly owe God our Heavenly Father something, or should we pay all our other obligations and leave Him out? Did we call that honesty.

We owe Him our worship. St. Luke said unto those who gave precedence to their ouw works that they were those who justified themselves before men, but God knew their hearts.

The Christian was the man who had confessed himself a sinner and still believed that he was a sinner. God had instituted the wonderful plan of salvation and should unbelievers say to God they had a little plan of their own which they thought would work just as well as the plan which had cost the Heavenly Father so much. We owed God our love, but too often paid Him ingratitude. Some one had said that ingratitude was the basest of all crimes.

Jesus Christ went through the very fires of hell to save the souls of men and yet here were some who would be ashamed to call themselves Christians. The speaker wanted his listeners to repent of that black sin of ingratitude, which was charged up up against them.

Christ went through the awful trial of the crucifixion for us.

"Had you thanked Him for it?" was asked. "If you have not thanked Him for it you have committed the greatest sin."

The speaker, in vivid terms, referred to the crucifixion of Christ. "He did it for you. Have you thanked Him for it?"

Christ stands at the right hand of God interceding for us, and is interested in everyone who gives his heart to Him.

Mr. Drum asked every church member and non-church member who wished to say he wanted to thank God for what He had done for him to stand up. Everybody in the house stood up at this request, and the speaker congratulated his hearers.

Special cards which were distributed were filled in in answer to certain questions on them by those who desired to answer them in profession of their faith or honest doubts. The cards were collected for future action. An offering was taken up, and the response was a generous one.

Several young men, in answer to Mr. Drum's solicitations, came up on the stage as an expression of their acceptance of the truth and their desire to work in its interests.

The meeting was closed by prayer.

PREMIER LAURIER KNOCKS CONMEE'S BILL IN HOUSE

After Some Debate Sir Wilfrid Moves That Bill Be Left With the Committee Pending Further Alterations--Conmee is Willing to Make an Amendment

Ottawa, April 20.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier late last night gave the bill of Mr. James Conmee, to incorporate the Ontario & Michigan Power Co., a very pronounced black eye.

After several hours talk on the measure, when it appeared certain that the Conservatives were prepared to hold up the bill for days, if necessary, and when Dr. Sproule suggested that the debate go over in order that other bills of an non-contentious character might be taken up to provide work for the Senate, the Prime Minister readily consented, first, however, expressing his disapproval of certain features of the measures.

The Prime Minister said he had been struck with the argument of the member for East Algoma (Mr. Smyth) that the local Government has adopted a certain policy of reserving to itself the exploitation of the water powers of the province.

Another feature of the sitting was the breaking away of the Liberal member for S. Ontario (Mr. Fowke), who said he was entirely opposed to the bill.

The Prime Minister said in opening that he was disposed to regard favorably the request of Dr. Sproule to have the committee rise. It was very questionable whether Mr. Conmee could have his bill this evening or that he could have it at all, because there seemed to be a wide difference of opinion with regard to it.

"In the meantime," he said, "let me say a word which may possibly contribute to clear the atmosphere. This bill has been carefully considered by the private bills committee. As a rule, so far as I am responsible for the business of the House, I have always deemed it my duty to support, as far as possible, the findings of the private bills committee. Not that it is a law absolutely binding upon us, not that every member of the House must abdicate his judgment when the private bills committee has spoken, but I have always thought that when a matter of importance has been discussed in the private bills committee, or any standing committee, and a conclusion reached, then, unless there is some strong reason to the contrary, the finding of the committee should be followed.

"The real point of the discussion is this: are there provisions in this bill which effect the power of the local Legislature and the local Government? That is the only point which weighs with me.

"If this bill were to be proceeded with it would be necessary to consider the opinion of the Minister of Justice on clause two, which is a clause with which we are familiar, and it was not invented, I may say to my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) by the Liberal party; it is a relic of former days, and perhaps in the case of relics we may be wrong in not doing away with them. At all events, the hon. gentleman and I can agree that it ought to be eliminated from the bill.

"But the whole discussion we have heard this afternoon has been directed to one point, and one point alone, and that is that the power of expropriation of water powers belonging to the local Government of Ontario contained in this bill should be eliminated. I think if these two sections were amended there would not be much objection to the bill.

"Did we pass this bill we interfere directly with this principle, and, therefore, under these circumstances, holding as I have held all my life to the sacredness, if the word is not too strong, of provincial rights, while we have the brute power to override those rights, it is a question whether we should do so. And it is a question upon which I would invite the serious consideration of my hon. friend who is promoting this bill.

"But there is a serious conflict of opinion, I am afraid, with regard to the power of expropriation. I think on the whole, seeing that if we proceed with the bill, we shall not be able to get it through to-night. I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again."

When the bill was brought up in the afternoon, Mr. Lennox asked for a Government announcement as to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth said he spoke only for himself. He believed the B.N.A. Act was plain as to the incorporation of companies and as to the line of demarcation between the jurisdiction of the Federal and Provincial authorities. It was plain that no Provincial Legislature had the power to incorporate a company whose work extends beyond the limits of the province.

The purpose of the Ontario & Michigan Power Co. was apparently to carry its work across the boundary into the State of Michigan, and the committee having reported the bill, it must have accepted the intention of the company.

The declaration that the works are to be "for the general advantage of Canada" was one used all too frequently. He could not see why the declaration should be made in this case any more than the establishment of any manufactury would be in a remote way for the general advantage of Canada. There was no need to make the declaration.

Mr. Conmee was willing to amend the clause, declaring the words to be for the general advantage of Canada by inserting the words "in so far as they relate to water powers and electrical transmission."

Mr. Fowke (Liberal, South Ontario,) declared that he was not one of those who were "rounded up" by the Liberal whip. He had supported the bill in committee for the purpose of bringing it before the House. He did not feel inclined to support the bill, for the reason that it proposed to give large powers of expropriation which ought not to be granted, and there was another clause to which he would always be opposed, which proposed to give a franchise in perpetuity in respect to the natural resources of the Dominion. The day was coming, Mr. Fowke declared, when we would resume all the water powers.

MUST FACE A MURDER CHARGE

Toronto, April 20.—A charge of murder will likely be laid against Gagnon, a French-Canadian, whom Provincial Inspector Greer arrested at North Bay on April 3.

Last fall Gagnon, while under the influence of liquor, entered the house of Ethel Crawford on the outskirts of Cobalt, and brutally beat her and a companion, Mary E. Smith, about the heads with an axe.

The Smith woman is dead in St. Michael's Hospital, as the result of the injuries inflicted by Gagnon. Her jawbone was broken and suppuration set in. A portion of the decayed bone was removed, but owing to an impoverished physical condition, general tuberculosis followed, resulting in death.

Gagnon is now in jail at North Bay, after a long pursuit by Inspector Greer over the northern part of the province.

WOULD SAVE THE ALDERMEN AT MONTREAL

Montreal, April 20.—The disqualification of the seven members of the civic finance committee is still the talk of the town.

Yesterday there appeared to be a well-supported movement in favor of applying to the Quebec Legislature now in session, for a relief bill. In fact, such a movement would be popular, as the worst that can be said against the seven aldermen is that theirs was a technical error, and no one appears anxious to see the city deprived of the services of several of the ablest and most disinterested members of the council.

A delegation left last evening for Quebec composed of fifty well-known citizens and they will bring the matter before the Attorney-General to-day, it being the general opinion that Sir Lomer Gouin would favor a relief bill.

EMIGRANT BOY DIES ON TRAIN

Windsor, April 20.—Coming out to this country in company with his sister to join their brothers in Salt Lake City, Utah, an emigrant boy of 18 years, William Reynolds, died on an incoming train and awaits funeral here. Deceased left his home in Ireland 13 days ago.

At St. Thomas, Reynolds, along with others, alighted and went up town, as the train was supposed to stop some little time. The boys missed the train and young Reynolds worried considerably over his sister being on the train alone. The boys, however, caught a later train coming to Windsor. While the train was between Tilbury and this city, Reynolds was seized with heart failure and died.

CROP REPORTS GENERALLY GOOD

London, April 20.—The Mark Lane Express, in yesterday's weekly review of the grain trade, says it has received generally good crop reports from Great Britain, France, Italy, Spain, and the countries of Central Europe.

Russia reports a good promise of winter wheat from forty-two out of her fifty-two vast provinces. Ten provinces promise to be below the average. Spring sowings are backward, having been hindered by the rain.

The paper estimates the present reserves of British wheat at only 767,-900 quarters, as against 2,431,000 at this time in 1908.

PRIEST CONDEMNS BAD LITERATURE

Ottawa, April 20.—Rev. Father Lajune at the Sacred Heart Church delivered a strong sermon in denunciation of some literature circulated from the Carnegie Library. He attacked books printed in both French and English, and said many of them were positively demoralizing to young minds and unfit to enter the homes of self-respecting people. As a result of the sermon, the library authorities will institute an immediate enquiry.

57TH RANGERS SAID GOOD-BYE TO THEIR OLD DRILL HALL

Last Night Marked Last Assembly in the Regiment's Shed---An Occasion of Regimental and Public Interest---The New Armouries Occupied

Last night was an exceedingly inclement one for the first marchout this season of the 57th Regiment. A more desirable evening would have been in order in view of the fact that the new armories were being occupied for the first time. In spite of the fact that the fine new quarters were not open to the public, owing to their not being completed, necessitating the placing of some stores in unprotected places, the citizens turned out in goodly numbers to witness the farewell of the 57th Rangers to the old drill hall they have had as regimental headquarters for so many years.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

To the younger members of the corps the good-bye was a most welcome one, and for the last few weeks they have been talking enthusiastically of the splendid quarters they would have when they moved into the magnificent new armories. "The boys of the old brigade," while also welcoming more commodious and more modern premises, will have memories for years to come of the pleasant associations of the drill-shed that saw the development of the 57th into the smart and well-drilled regiment it now is.

A comparison of the old and the new would be absurd, for the armories are so much superior to the old building that there is no comparison that could intelligently be made, and an inspection of both will prove how necessary and timely is the 57th's new home. Instead of cramped and altogether inadequate quarters, the regiment will now have a place for drill and recreation that will offer every facility and advantage in all departments.

The total strength of the regiment for last night's turnout was two hundred and fifty-three. After the men had fallen in at the drill-shed, the order of procedure was the march-out, and after this the regiment returned to the drill-shed, where Col. Miller spoke.

The appearance of the Rangers on parade was excellent, as they marched to the accompaniment of the bugle and regimental bands, both of which played in splendid fashion. The route of march was south on George to Simcoe, east on Simcoe to Water, north on Water to Murray, and then west to the drill-shed.

LT.-COL. MILLER SPEAKS.

Lt.-Col. Miller received a most appreciative welcome, and he gave a stirring address from the platform at the side door of the officers' mess rooms. This gave him an elevated position, and he could be heard distinctly in all parts of the hall. He said he esteemed it a great privilege to have the honor of addressing the men on the occasion of their last drill in the old hall, of which he was just as proud as they would be of the new armories. The speaker dwelt glowingly on the splendid record of the regiment, and said that in all the forty years he had been connected with it he had never known a time when it did not do itself proud. Every man should feel a certain amount of responsibility resting on him, and come out to the drill every Monday evening. Lt.-Col. Miller said that it should be remembered that the citizen soldiers—the green men of the British army had done glorious work in the past. The remarks of the late officer in command of the regiment were received with a loud outburst of applause. The members of the regiment all have warm regard for Lt.-Col. Miller, and appreciate the kindly and deep interest he shows.

MARCHED TO ARMORIES

At the conclusion of the address the band played God Save the King and Auld Lang Syne and then headed the march to the armories, playing the regimental march, "The Lass of Gowrie." At the armories the companies formed up in quarter column and were addressed by Major Clegg and Chaplain Davidson. The band played The Maple Leaf Forever and Rule Britannia, and the regiment was then dismissed.

The companies took out the equipment from the drill-shed that had not already been removed to the armories and brought it there.

Major Clegg, in making his address reminded the men of the opportunities its new armories afforded, but also stated that a building could not make a regiment. The officers and men would have to be loyal to their obligations. Major Clegg also spoke in congratulatory spirit.

Canon Davidson spoke of the necessity of moral and religious improvement as well as improvement in their militia work.

The addresses were received with applause.

LONG SERVICE MEDAL.

A feature of the assembly was the presentation of a long service medal to Deputy Fire Chief Grange, who for years was sergeant of the 57th band. Sergt. Grange was always popular and thorough in his work, and much enthusiasm was shown by the band and regiment when he was honored with the medal. Major Clegg made the presentation.

Murder the Verdict.

Moosejaw, Sask., April 20.—The adjourned inquest to discover the cause of Mrs. Kent's death opened yesterday morning and after hearing evidence for over two and a half hours, the jury retired to find a verdict: "That Mrs. Kent came to her death by strychnine poisoning given or sent her by some party or parties unknown with intent to kill." Cable.)—A Christchurch, New Zealand, despatch says that the man who tore down the Union Jack at a recent Navy League meeting, explains that the flag in the first instance was taken by Loyalists, who waved it to stimulate patriotism. Some supporters of Mr. Taylor, M.P., the principal opponent of the Government's action in offering a Dreadnought, tried to take the flag from the Loyalist, and in the scuffle the flag was torn in pieces. Mr. Taylor has been challenged by the press to resign his seat and contest another election.

Yesterday he received from England additional proof of insanity in Blythe's family, but it is rather on the basis of reducing the crime to manslaughter through the fact that there had been a continued fight all the day of the crime that Mr. Robinette hopes to succeed when he goes to Ottawa next week to ask the Minister of Justice for a commutation.

TO AMEND THE INSURANCE BILL

Ottawa, April 20.—At yesterday's meeting of the banking and commerce committee the chairman, H. Miller, gave the assurance that the insurance bill is to be duly proceeded with this session, and that a sub-committee will soon be appointed to consider the details.

It was agreed to refer the Prudential Trust Co. bill to a sub-committee. Mr. Fitzgerald, superintendent of insurance, thought that the provisions empowering a company to deal in mortgages, lend money, issue securities, arrange with third parties to take over business, and enter into arrangements with governments should all be cut out.

PROTEST AGAINST HON. MR. FISHER

Montreal, April 20.—The trial of the protest against the election of Hon. Sydney Fisher took place yesterday at Sweetsburg. It was mostly of a technical nature. The plaintiffs charged all the offences under the election law, but the evidence was little and not sensational.

The defence was technical, on the ground that the writs had not been served within the time allowed by the law.

Judge Demers took the case en de libre.

ABDUL HAMID IS EXPECTED TO ABDICATE IN PEACE

Turkish Ruler Was Reported to Have Left on a Warship and Excitement in Constantinople Was Intense, But Rumor Was Denied

Constantinople, April 20.—The most important feature of the situation in the Turkish capital yesterday was the report that Sultan Abdul-Hamid had abdicated.

It caused the greatest excitement in the lobbies of Parliament and spread with lightning-like rapidity throughout the city.

A rumor of the flight of the Sultan on a warship followed closely on that of his abdication, but neither could be confirmed.

At the embassies all knowledge of the Sultan's movements was denied, and the Foreign Office also gave a strong denial to one and all of these rumors.

The abdication of Abdul-Hamid, however, appears not to be improbable, an it is believed that within a day or two the constitutionalists may accept as his successor Prince Yussuf of Izzedin, the eldest son of the late Sultan, who is second in line, as they are strongly displeased with Abdul Hamid's attitude.

The concensus of opinion is that if the abdication of the Sultan is brought about, his overthrow and the proclamation of his successor will be accomplished peacefully. Many Turkish families in the Stamboul quarter are removing to abodes of greater safety, but in general the people, though fearful of coming events, are awaiting them philosophically and with resignation.

It is announced officially that the deaths at Adana during the rioting numbered 400, among the killed being many Turks. The telegraph lines to the provinces, however, are badly interrupted, and details of the massacres at Adana, Tarsus and other places are lacking.

The advance of the constitutional forces began yesterday afternoon. Small parties were sent out to reconnoiter, and at 7 o'clock in the evening they were in sight of the gates of Constantinople. They encountered no resistance, nor does any resistance seem likely, unless at the palace.

The headquarters of the constitutionalists' army are at De'Deagatch and Gen. Husni Pasha's forces, which now number between 20,000 and 30,-000, occupy a range of hills about 20 miles from the capital. Every hour reinforcements are adding to their numbers.

Miss Genevieve Duval, daughter of Rev. Dr. Duval of Knox Church, Winnipeg, who five years ago married Rev. H. M. Irwin of Ontario, is in the disturbed section at a place called Ceserae, only 100 miles south of Adana, from whence such an earnest appeal has been made for help.

Other Canadians at Adana are: Rev. Wm. Chambers, a native of Oxford County, who went to Turkey in 1879, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. McCallum, known at the various mission headquarters in Toronto, and who are in the service of the American Missionary Board.

FOUR CATTLEMEN HANGED BY MOB

Climax of Lawlessness in Ada, Okla., Comes When Crowd of Wealthy Citizens Disgusted With State of Affairs Execute Slayers of Deputy Marshall

Ada, Okla., April 20.—Four prominent cattle men were taken from the city jail here yesterday and lynched by a mob of 100 citizens. The mob is said to have organized in the rooms of a club and then marched to the jail, where they found only one man on guard.

The men were held on a charge of complicity in the murder of former U. S. Marshal A. L. Robbitt, near Ada, last February.

The lynched men were: B. Miller, Fort Worth, Texas; B. B. Burrell, Duncan, Okla.; Jessie West and Joseph Allen of Canadian, Texas.

Shortly after three o'clock yesterday morning the lynchers shut off the electric street lights, cut the telephone communication and gathered near the jail. There they met County Attorney Robert Wimbish, who had received word that the mob was forming. The crowd stopped at his request. Attorney Wimbish said:—"Men of Ada, you are disgracing this community in the eyes of the world. Think this matter over calmly and let the law take its course. I appeal to you as an officer of the law to return to your homes."

"This is no time for speeches," said the leader of the mob, and the men moved silently toward the jail door. Only Guard McCarthy was on duty. He tried to protect his prisoners, but was knocked senseless with a revolver butt. The four prisoners were quickly taken out, although West fought desperately. The mob led the four men to a barn, a few hundred feet away, and stood them in a straight line. They refused to say anything about the murder and were carried to a beam and strung up in a row. Just before the rope was placed about his neck Miller calmly removed a diamond from his shirt front and requested that it be sent to his wife in Fort Worth. From his necktie he drew out a diamond scarf pin, with the request that it be given to Guard McCarthy for his kindness to him. As soon as the men were dead the mob disappeared. At daylight the bodies of the lynched men were cut down.

THE STABLES AND SHEDS OF OWENS' HOTEL BURNED

Fire Monday at Midnight at Norwood—Horse, Cow and a Couple of Vehicles Included in Loss—Small Barn Next Door Destroyed.

A fire at the Queen's Hotel, Norwood, last night, about midnight, resulted in the destruction of the stables and sheds of the hotel, a horse and cow and a couple of vehicles. A large quantity of hay was also burned. The cause of the fire is not known.

A small barn next door belonging to Mr. Coleman Elliott, was burned to the ground, but what was in it was saved.

It was fortunate that the wind was blowing away from the hotel, and the flames were mastered before they could spread to the building. The town fire department did commendable work in fighting the flames. The loss has not been estimated, but will be heavy. Mr. E. J. King is the proprietor of the hotel.

TOO MANY SEPARATE 'PHONE LINES IN THE TOWNSHIP

Some Peculiar Conditions Exist in South Monaghan—Costs One Man Twenty Cents to Telephone His Neighbor

South Monaghan farmers are complaining that there are too many separately owned telephone lines in that township.

There are two or three lines controlled by different parties and as a result the telephone business there is in a somewhat complicated condition. When you get on any other line but the one you are a subscriber to, you have to pay the rate of toll for outsiders, and sometimes it comes high. A gentleman who resides in South Monaghan near Hale's bridge, informed the Review on Saturday that it costs him twenty cents to telephone his neighbor who lives about a stone's throw away. The neighbor is on a different telephone line, hence the charge. Conditions similar to the instance related exist in several parts of the township. It is felt that something should be done towards the consolidation of the telephone lines.

WONDERS OF THE HUMAN BODY

Why Many People Never Need a Doctor.

You have a natural laxative in your body. Why, then, should you use a false purgative to move the bowels?

Bile is nature's laxative. It is bile—and bile alone—which moves the bowels as they should be moved. The liver is the store-house for the bile. The liver pours forth the bile into the bowels, which stimulates them to move, and thus causes the waste matter to pass from the body.

Constipation is a disease, OF the bowels, but CAUSED by the liver. When the bowels do not move regularly and naturally, it is because the liver is not giving up enough bile. And the only possible way to cure Constipation, is to cure the liver.

Calomel, cascara, salts, senna, common pills and sweet lozengers and all the other purgatives do not act on the liver at all. They merely irritate and inflame the bowels.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Constipation because they act on the liver. The fruit principles stimulate the liver to secrete and give up enough bile to move the bowels, while the tonics and antiseptics tone up and invigorate the muscles. "Fruit-a-tives" are the only medicine ever discovered that will cure Constipation, Biliousness and all other troubles due to a Torpid or Disordered Liver. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. PAVING GEORGE STREET

Is it not time that we proceeded to pave George street? The city is big, progressive and ambitious enough for a pavement extending from Brock to King street. Our permanent sidewalks are a success and the same necessity exists for permanent roadways, where the traffic and the city's funds warrant it. American cities provide on this continent the latest thing in pavements and, while bitulithic pavement has its advantages vitrified brick might be better for Peterborough, since it can be more easily and at less expense taken up and put down as the exigencies of street-digging require it. The blocks forming the floor of the drill shed presumably belong to the government, but they could be of no use except to the city for paving purposes on the market-square. Concrete crossings have proven so admirable an experiment that there is an agitation in some quarters for its employment for all paving purposes. In fact, the day of concrete is just dawning, and it seems to be the long-lost Roman cement, if anything modern can be said to be. A nicely-washed pavement for George street every day of the week would please the public immensely in its hours of doing business and would help the merchants greatly to keep their goods fresh and clean.

THE RETURN ON LABOUR

In the disturbances that occur from time to time at various centres throughout the world in the perennial conflict between the wage-earner and the employer and capitalist, the lack of standard or guide by which the reasonable or proper return on Labor might be ascertained is apparent. Yet that there is a guide so accurate as to be mathematically and economically correct cannot be denied. It is the guide or standard of comparison. Capital demands a certain return—as much as it can reasonably secure. In Canada banks secure a gross return of about 20 per cent. Including the amounts set aside for repairs that is to say, the amount set aside for the keeping up of the whole equipment which is not a sinking fund as usually understood, the gross return on capital used in manufacturing establishments is not less than 20 per cent. That success is not constant has nothing to do with the main current of the facts any more than disease and accident with the main current of human life and the world's affairs. From these facts, viz., the returns on Capital, are to be reckoned, the returns due to Labor. Twenty per cent is just as properly returnable upon efficient labor as upon capital. The return to care and superintendence is included meanwhile in salaries and is not properly to be added to anything now under consideration while the genius of the employer is rewarded by the extras which he frequently acquires over and above that 20 per cent and they provide the incentive to ambition of which so much is made by economists. If 1.50 dollars a day is the wage of an ordinary man of the unskilled type, that would be $499.50 for the year of 313 working days. If a man is not always able to work neither is his place of employment always providing work. There are slack times when he is laid off without pay and this must always be taken into consideration as an advantage of Capital over Labor. The unskilled workingman's capital represented by his wages reckoned at a 20 per cent return then, is $9990.00. He puts this into the business while working and withdraws it when he steps out or stops. Supposing then that the present rate of recompense whether it be wholly satisfactory to Labor or not be taken as a rate of comparison for the future, what have we? So soon as the rate of return to Capital is increased it should be increased to Labor and since the basis of reckoning is ascertained the amounts can be proportioned accordingly. It may be argued that increase in cost of living may seem to require a higher wage, while not appearing in the business conditions in any way which we have referred to. That increase however, and all other of the ordinary incidents of business and of the conditions bearing upon business, are to be found in the proper conditions of business as it exists today and hence are not to be considered or treated separately as some assert. The desirability of finding a "constant" by which the minds of the fair-minded may be set at ease is so great as to demand exclusive attention. It would settle "agitations" by a scientific and enduring plan and in a perfectly fair way.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Appointment of a commission to manage the Intercolonial, looks like good business, but everything depends on the commission and this one looks all right.

It has been admitted by Catholics that Protestants can be saved; what, then, is the use of joining the Catholic Church?

The use in joining the Church is that it teaches the whole truth as to what we are to do and what we are to believe in order to be saved. Because some men know nothing about the laws of hygiene, and are nevertheless in good health, it does not follow that it is useless to study hygiene. A knowledge of the physical science is useful and although all men may not master the sciences thoroughly, yet what they do master will be useful to them; and this being true, we are bound to promulgate that knowledge. The same line of argument holds with regard to religion. A captain without the knowledge of the Atlantic might cross it safely, but it would be risky. Likewise, non-Catholics may be saved, but they are laboring under tremendous disadvantages in not being possessed of the full revelation of Christ.—Catholic Register.

"A large part of St. Patrick's Parish was transferred last evening to the Monument National, where the gathering listened to the farewell lecture on "Prominent Traits of Irish Character," by Rev. Thomas Barrett, who had been preaching at St. Patrick's during Lent.

"Father Barret kept his large audience spell-bound as he told of the virtues and faults of Erin, speaking of their religious characteristics. He spoke of her saints, her orators and her soldiers. She, for three hundred years, was the beacon light of the world, the university of the then known universe. Her men were eloquent, her priests were holy and her soldiers the most valient the world of arms has ever seen, yet he supposed they would ask him if this be true why is it that wherever the Celt exists he is in subjection. Alas, said the learned lecturer, this was because the Irish character lacked discipline. The Irish soldier was all powerful at the charge on the field of battle, but it was the slow, persistent bull dog perseverance characteristic of the English which wins in the end. The English with sword in hand conquered, yet it was the Irish who follow up these victories, who evangelise the nations.

Father Barrett told the story of the oratorical triumphs of Irishmen both at home and on the floors of the British Parliament, battling for the cause of liberty, and here he paid a splendid tribute to the patriotism of those two Protestants, Henry Grattan and Edmund Burke, both of whom eloquently championed the cause of Catholic emancipation, Burke in England and Grattan in Ireland. The noblest patriot of them all was Erin's own Dan O'Connell. These were the men he said, whose memory was revered to-day in Ireland. People paid little attention to the exploits of the Irish Brigade at Fontenoy, which, however, was glorious work, but they were fighting for France, but those whom the Irish of to-day delight to honor are their countrymen who fought and died for Ireland.

In conclusion Father Barrett pleaded with his hearers to read up their Irish history for, he said, a people who would not look back and be inspired by the glorious deeds of their ancestors had very little to look forward to. He was glad to find that here in Canada the memory of the motherland had kept green in the Irish hearts, for if the people of Erin were becoming less every year at home the race was carrying the light of patriotism and civilization the world over. The reverend gentleman created great enthusiasm by declaring that he was not going to say adieu, but au revoir, for he would be back amongst them again."—The Montreal Gazette.

HAVELOCK

Havelock, April 19th.—Although Havelock is a busy little town with but very little time for else but action, some of its citizens find time between breaths to talk of Havelock's prospects for the future.

No one doubts our word when we say, that Havelock is a very prosperous and enterprising village. Situated on what is soon to be the main line of the C.P.R., and being a terminal point, it is bound to expand by leaps and bounds, even more than it has in the past. Its progress received a setback in August last, when fire wiped out nearly $50,000 worth of property, but it has recovered since then. E. S. Joyce has erected a fine store on the corner of George and Oak streets. Adjoining is the new general store of A. E. Barrett & Co., and farther west Coon & Chiles with Jas. Fowler's jewellery shop in the west section. The "Standard" has also built a fine brick building, the upstairs part of which will be used as a dental shop. James Thompson has also erected a brick veneered building, which is occupied by McGregor's bakery and K. McKay's tailoring establishment.

The town has also showed its progressiveness by the erection of a $4,000 addition to its school, of cement, while the old part has been cement veneered. Havelock has now a very fine school, with a total frontage of 90 feet, and situated in an excellent place. Several dwellings have been erected at the west end as well as on Park street, which is showing considerable growth. The town has a tendency to grow northward instead of southward, for connection with the south is cut off by the C. P.R., the two crossings to the south being about seven-eighths of a mile apart.

FOUND CASTAWAYS ON DESERT ISLAND

Schooner Which Has Reached Halifax Had Remarkable Voyage

Halifax, April 19.—Forty-three days out from Cape Town, South Africa, after covering 80,000 miles on a sealing voyage in the Indian ocean, the train schooner Agnes Donohue reached Halifax after an absence of eight months. The schooner made a record catch of 4,000 skins, which were landed at Cape Town and shipped to England. The skins would average $18 each to the owners.

While hunting for seals, Capt. Balcom called at Marooni Island, where he found the ship-wrecked crew of the Norwegian sealing steamer Sodglint, which had run on the rocks near the island. The crew numbered seventy-five and had been cast away for a month. They were taken to Port Natal, and from there they went home to Norway.

Two days after the Donhue sailed from Cape Town for Halifax a young stowaway made his appearance on deck. He had been a member of the crew of a steamer running between Liverpool and Cape Town, and he had missed his ship and hid away on the sealer.

The Government of Norway has presented $5,000 to the owners of the Donohue for rescuing the crew of the Sodglint. The money will be divided among the crew. The schooner was seized several years ago while commanded by Captain Matthew Ryan, of this town, by the Uruguay authorities.

HAWKING MACHINES

Catarrh Sufferers Are Nothing But Hawking, Spitting and Blowing Machines, Says an Authority.

Is it possible that in these days when cleanliness and sanitary reform is being preached in the churches, schools and at public gatherings that thousands of people will continue to suffer from catarrh when there is an absolutely certain remedy always on hand.

Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me) is a pleasant, medicated and antiseptic air. Breathe it in and it will cure catarrh. It will stop foul breath, watery eyes and crusts in the nose in a few days.

Mrs. H. W. Wilson, of Johnson St., Wallaceburg, Ont., says:—"Yes, we are great friends to Hyomei for the reason that Mr. Wilson has had catarrh for several years and tried several remedies and doctors, but nothing has relieved the trouble like Hyomei. His trouble is from pains across the eyes and a burning or huskiness in his throat. Sometimes much difficulty in breathing, the glands in his eyes and nose swollen and the disease made him literally sick all over. He cannot say enough in praise of Hyomei, and there is nothing that can give better relief to catarrh than this remedy, which we heartily recommend."

A complete Hyomei outfit, consisting of a strong hard rubber pocket inhaler and a bottle of Hyomei costs only $1.00 and extra bottles, if afterwards needed, cost only 50 cents each. Wm. Madill, druggist, corner George and Hunter streets, Peterborough, sells it and guarantees it to do exactly as advertised.

Hyomei also cures Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds and Infant's Croup.

IRISHMEN PLAN BIG HOME GOING

Meet Me at Kilkenny in 1910 is the Slogan—Aim at Industrial Revival

Washington, April 19—"Ireland for the Irish, 1910—Meet me at Kilkenny." With this as their slogan, the friends of the proposed Irish home-going movement in 1910 want not less than 50,000 of the sons and daughters of Erin to make the pilgrimage to Ireland for an industrial revival of that country. The occasion promises to be the greatest epoch-making event in the history of Ireland.

Backed, as it is by the encouragement and support of prominent members of the Irish race (both in this country and in Ireland the projected home-going movement to Ireland has assumed such proportions that confidence is expressed in the success of the undertaking and a great influx of visitors to the old land on that occasion is expected. Among those who have pledged themselves and are lending their aid to the movement is Richard Croker, the former Tammany chieftain. The principal motive underlying the proposed pilgrimage is the development of the natural resources of Ireland and the upbuilding of its industries. The request is made that Irishmen who have made a success in the United States can carry back to Ireland ideas relative to government, manufacture, commerce and capital which may be employed advantageously there. The inaugurator of the movement is Frank J Kilkenny a son of the Emerald Isle. Scarcely fifteen years ago Kilkenny, then a poor emigrant Irish lad landed in the United States and step by step has advanced to his present position of confidential clerk to the comptroller of the currency. The home going will be held during July, August and September 1910.

DOCTOR SAID ONLY ZAM-BUK COULD CURE HER ECZEMA.

In view of the numerous cases which Zam-Buk has worked when all else has failed there is little wonder that in the end the doctor attending Mrs. J. P. St. Denis, of 305 Thompson street, Winnipeg, should tell her there was nothing but Zam Buk could cure her. The result showed the far-seeing wisdom of this practitioner and having been completely cured by Zam-Buk Mrs. St. Denis gives her experience for the benefit of other sufferers.

She says: "Eczema started on one side of my face and nose. At first my nose felt sore, similar to what one feels when having a bad cold. I paid no attention to this thinking it would pass away in a day or so, but to my surprise it got worse. The nose then became swollen and hard, and turned a purplish red, as well as part of the cheek on that side of my face. As the disease developed pimples and ulcers broke out, then the skin cracked in places and peeled off in flakes leaving my face and nose raw and sore. This condition re-acted on my general health, and I became very ill. I could get no sleep at night because of the irritation and the pain and my face was in such a shocking condition that for two months I did not get out of the house. I applied remedies which were supposed to be good for skin diseases but in vain. My doctor also treated me, but without effect until one day he said that the only thing which would now be likely to cure me was Zam-Buk.

"Acting on his advice I procured a supply and found that even the first few applications had a soothing effect on the sores. I left off everything else in favour of this balm and applied it liberally every day to the effected parts. In a remarkably short time considering the obstinate nature of my disease we saw traces of improvement, which encouraged us to persevere with the Zam-Buk treatment. Zam-Buk reduced the discoloration then the hard swelling began to show traces of leaving, the sores seemed to be less angry and in about three weeks' time most of the sores were healing nicely. To cut a long story short I continued with the Zam-Buk treatment until my face was cleared completely of all traces of the troublesome and painful eczema."

Zam-Buk is a sure cure for cuts, lacerations, burns, eczema, ringworm, poisoned wounds, festering sores bad leg, and all skin injuries and diseases. It is also a cure for piles. Druggists and Stores everywhere sell at 50 cents a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, on receipt of price. You are warned against cheap and harmful imitations sometimes represented as "just as good."

THE WINCH BUILDING IN VANCOUVER

Good Progress Being Made on Structure Being Erected by Son of Peterboro' Man

The Vancouver World of April 10th contains a large cut of the Winch building which is being erected in that city by Mr R. V. Winch, son of Mr R. J. Winch, of Peterborough.

The following reading matter appears underneath the cut:

"This photograph gives an excellent idea of the progress of the work on the new Winch building, at the corner of Hastings and Howe streets and adjoining the new post office. With a facing similar to that of the government building the two will constitute the handsomest street block in the city, and probably the most costly. Work on the Winch building is being rushed and it will be ready for occupancy before the summer is over."

There are over 220 cups of "Salada" Tea to the pound; consequently at 40 cents per pound the consumer receives tea at the low cost of one-fifth of a cent a cup. There are few other beverages so economical and so healthful as "Salada" Tea.

THERE WILL BE NO LABOR TROUBLES

On May 1st. in Peterboro' Labor Circles—Little Change in Conditions

There will be no strikes or labor troubles in Peterborough on May Day. This does not mean, however, that all the working men and working women are satisfied with conditions existing.

It was stated to the Review to-day that labor conditions in eastern Canada had showed little change during the past year, and it was not expected that there would be any general revival in commercial and industrial activity for some time. It was said that building operations were more favorable than at this time last year, but the improvement was so small that demands for increased wages were out of the question.

GAVE INTERESTING PAPER AT LEAGUE LAST NIGHT

The Importance of Making Good Resolution Was the Subject

At the regular meeting of the Epworth League of George street church held last night, Mr. C. Frank Mason gave a very interesting paper on the importance of making good resolutions. The President, Mr. McCann occupied the chair, and after the meeting was opened in the usual manner he called upon the speaker, who said:—As a rule we never realize the vast amount of will power which we possess, consequently we use only a very small part of it. Failing to keep our resolutions weakens this power within us, and we are not true to our higher nature and nobler impulses. The spirit of the Christian, said the speaker, should be that of Luther, who, on being persuaded not to go to Worms, said: "Though there be as many devils in Worms as there are tiles upon the house-tops, yet will I go." Determination like this would make us successful. Mr. Mason urged the Epworth League to be firm and consistent in making good resolutions. The meeting was closed by singing and prayer.

C.P.R. WILL SPEND $25,000 AT HAVELOCK DURING THE YEAR

This Sum to Be Spent on Yards There—New Siding to Be Placed Here—Pretty Sure of the Grain Route

Special to the Review.

Havelock, April 19— Havelock grows with the Montreal-Toronto division of the CPR, and if you would keep in touch with Havelock's growth keep an eye on the workings of the CPR. on this division. Twenty-five thousand dollars will be expended on the CPR. yards here during the year. The CPR. have already secured permission from the town council to place a siding from the western semaphore across Concession street. This will serve as a lead to all the sidings at the west end. They will spread out to the south of the present yards causing the abolition of the old cattle sheds. With the many other smaller improvements that they intend to make during the summer, Havelock will be one of the most up to date terminals on the line.

Another thing that will add greatly to the advancement of the town is the grain route from Victoria Harbor. Although nothing has been definitely settled, it is quite likely that this grain route will join the main line at the distant semaphore, west of Havelock. There is a far better grade by this route and it could be constructed much cheaper than by joining the main line at Peterborough as was reported.

But the statement of Mr O'Borne, General Superintendent, that Havelock would always remain a terminal point is the most satisfactory of all. Mr O'Borne stated that the CPR looked on Havelock as one of their children and that its interests would always be their interests.

Thus with the good work of the CPR, Havelock is bound to prosper and become within a very short time one of the leading towns of Central Ontario.

EFFICIENCY PAY FOR GOOD SHOTS

New System Introduced in Infantry and Cavalry---Service Will Not Count

Ottawa, April 19.—The greater importance of efficiency in shooting as compared to efficiency in drill is emphasized by the recent action of the militia authorities. By current militia orders, it is proposed as regards cavalry and infantry to cancel the condition under which efficieny pay is at present granted and to substitute therefor a grading of efficiency pay, with the present rates, based on musketry practice only. It is not proposed to change the condition as regards length of service for the basis of payment to the artillery, engineers, army service corps and medical units.

This new regulation means that a yyoung man who joins the militia now and does good work in shooting at the of his first year, will receive as much efficiency pay as the man who has served three years in the service. The D. R. A. Executive, it is understood, has fixed the time limit for shooting at the annual meet in August at 45 seconds per shot in the regular matches. The time formerly was one minute.

TOLD ABOUT THE DEEP SEA DEPTHS

Interesting Address Given Before Y.P.S. of Knox Church

At Knox church Young People's Society's meeting last night, being Literary evening, an address on The "Depths of the Sea," was given by Mr. G. A. Cornish The fishing industry is chiefly carried on in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The fishing now-a-days is carried on in the same way as it was 600 years ago. Several expeditions were taken by Mr. Cornish, out with the fishermen to sea. The way they caught cod fish, mackerel, lobsters and others was fully explained by the speaker. Many fish that seemed nothing to look upon when placed back into the salt water would open out into beautiful colors. We could not imagine them in their beauty. In the absence of the president, on behalf of the society, Mr. Davenport thanked the speaker of the evening for his interesting and educative address.

Miss Ella Warren will speak on the "Life Lesson From the Gospel of John," Monday, April 26th.

A Woman's Sympathy

Are you discouraged? Is your doctor's bill a heavy financial load? Is your pain a heavy physical burden? I know what these mean to delicate women—I have been discouraged, too; but learned how to cure myself. I want to relieve your burdens. Why not end the pain and stop the doctor's bill? I can do this for you and will if you will assist me.

All you need do is to write for a free box of the remedy which has been placed in my hands to be given away. Perhaps this one box will cure you—it has done so for others. If so, I shall be happy and you will be cured for 2c (the cost of a postage stamp). Your letters held confidentially. Write to-day for my free treatment. MRS. F. E CURRAH, Windsor, Ont.

TWO HUNDRED NORMALITES

Have Enrolled at the Agricultural College at Guelph - Some From Peterboro

Guelph, April 19.—The Ontario Agricultural College was taken by storm to-day by the arrival of 200 lady school teachers from the Normal schools of the province. For the next three months they will occupy the college residence, where only students of the sterner sex have roomed, that being the period devoted to a special course in agriculture decided upon by the Department of Education. These teachers have passed their examinations at the end of six months instead of nine, and the time will be finished in a special course in agriculture under the college professors.

The teachers agree for three years thereafter to teach in the rural schools of the province. To-morrow the regular classes commence.

President Creelman says the studies will be divided between elementary agriculture, including school gardening, and industrial art, including drawing, card-board work and manual training, etc.

Trouble at Windsor.

Windsor, April 20.—As a result of a fistic encounter yesterday between Chief Murray of Windsor fire department, and Fred Linley, a fireman, a public investigation of conditions now existing in the fire department will likely be held, for Linley will ask that an enquiry be made immediately.

According to Linley's story, he was sweeping the floor when the chief objected to his doing the work at that time. One word brought on another and the men clashed. Murray then and there dismissed Linley from the force.

Descendants of original Red River settlers held reunion at Kildonan, Man.

Five alleged fake collectors for firemen's convention were arrested in Winnipeg on charge of obtaining money under false pretences.

"BUFFALO BILL" ON WATER WAGGON

Climbs to High Seat Where Fire-water Cannot Charm Him for Awhile

Denver, April 19.—Colonel William F. Cody, known to fame as "Buffalo Bill," has paid his annual visit to Deadwood and gone, says a despatch to the News. This time the veteran plainsman imparted a genuine surprise when it was learned that for the first time in his life he has joined the ranks of the teetotalers.

The colonel's yearly trip to Deadwood is looked upon by old-timers as an occasion when all meet and recall the days when the west was young and Cody is so slouch of a story-teller.

But things have changed. Cody has not quite made up his mind to advocate prohibition, but his friends here now declare that they will not be surprised at such an announcement. For three solid hours the scout and his host and chum of the plains days, M. R. Russell, made the rounds of one-time haunts of "Wild Bill" Hickox, "Calamity Jane," and other noted characters, and spread consternation in his wake. Long before the trip was ended he had consumed all the buttermilk on hand, and the men in white aprons were trying in vain to stock up against his approach.

Incidentally, Colonel Cody let slip that he took his last friendly glass some three months back, and he volunteered some wholesome advice to those he met on the subject of teetotalism. He looks younger and seems in better health than for many years and declares he intends to stay so.

THE SECRET OF DR. GRENFELL'S FAITH---HOW TO OBTAIN FAITH

The secret of Dr. Grenfell's success, for it is only the nobility of service that can, in a strictly just sense, be termed such, is made plain in his little book intituled "A Man's Faith," recently published. He begins under the heading, "How to Obtain Faith in Jesus Christ," by saying "What most men want is knowledge, but I am speaking of faith * * *." He then proceeds to show that nearly all we do is done on faith. "It is not a mere intellectual assent." From this position Dr. Grenfell advances to that comprised in the words, "Jesus and His contemporaries do not seem to have laid much stress on the book line of evidence either * *. He and they left the future of the faith they themselves gave their own lives to promulgate to the evidences of its ever-living power in those who should accept it in the succeeding ages." It is interesting to observe that, as General Booth has so wittily observed, "Government by talk," has no permanent value, in Dr. Grenfell's estimation either. The details of what is just and what is unjust he considers beyond him. Like other difficulties, they are not as yet susceptible of solution. It is plain that faith is not a question of reasoning. It is simply faith. It cannot be justified by a process of reasoning. A man may be "top-heavy", as "my own mission-steamer is often." Yet the doctor observes that "Christ never opposed faith to reason, but gave it as a remedy for the the impossibility of walking by sight." Now then comes the most important statement in the book, "what has faith led to in history and in one's personal experience?" and then follows, "I am therefore convinced it renders mighty works possible and I want it." Part II. deals with "How to use faith." Part III. with "How to keep faith." The latter is founded on the abundance and strength of one's faith. He would wait, if necessary, until the "mystery of life" revealed it all. "What did eternal punishment predestination, the meaning of the horned beast * * * matter to me?" It is a most readable and excellent book and one that furnishes a key to the mind of this exemplary man.

GOVERNMENT PREPARING OFFICIAL PERMITS FOR TEMPERANCE HOTELS

The new provincial license for temperance hotels provided for under the legislation of the recent session, will be known as the "inspected Hotel permit." The form of the permit has, it is understood, been drafted and will probably be approved under Order in Council this week. Unlike liquor licenses, these hotel permits can be secured at any time during the year on application to the commissioners, approval of the hotel and payment of the $5 license fee.

The standard of equipment and sanitation required from the temperance hotels will be the equal of that called for on licensed premises. The applying hotel will be inspected and required to come up to the standard. This being done it will be entitled to be advertised as a provincial inspected hotel. A list will be made public of these places in order that the travelling public may be assured as to comfort, cleanliness, and equipment.

The temperance hotel license is experimental, but the indications are that a number of places throughout the province will seek its prestige, and guarantee. Two hotels in Owen Sound one in Flesherton and several others scattered throughout the rural districts, have been making inquiries from the department concerning the new permits. The first of these will be ready for issue at the beginning of next month.

Permits for the quarterly payment of liquor license fees of $1,000 or over have been approved by order in Council and are being printed. These apply only to taverns and shops in Toronto. The four quarterly permits are numbered one, two, three and four and must be posted in a conspicuous place.

The whole question of the payment of local inspectors is, it is learned, likely to come before the Government for consideration. The Crooks act provided no system for regulating the salaries of inspectors, and there has been an absolute lack of uniformity in determining the scale of recompense. Several inspectors are applying for increases in salary and it is probable the department may determine upon some system to regulate the remuneration of local inspectors upon the basis of the number of hotels under their supervision and the size of the territory to be covered.

THERE WILL HAVE TO BE GOOD ORDER AT LOCAL PARKS THIS SUMMER

The Nicholls Oval and Jackson Park will be well looked after this year. Mr. Jas. Rose will be in charge of Jackson Park and Mr. Wm. Kitney will look after the Nicholls Oval. Both of these gentlemen will wear uniforms and will be sworn in as special constables and be given full power to act in cases which come before them in the discharge of their duty. Mr. Rose will occupy the house that has been built at Jackson Park, and Mr. Kitney will reside in the one situated near the Oval, which has been recently renovated. Much annoyance and damage is caused by those who go on the Oval in the spring before the ground is properly dry, and any who try it this year will get into trouble.

The appointment of these gentlemen as constables will have much to do with stopping a lot of rowdyism which takes place at these parks, much to the annoyance of those who wish to enjoy an afternoon or evening's outing.

Uniforms for the two park custodians have been ordered and they will have them in a few days.

THE ROY STUDIO

GAVE SPLENDID PERFORMANCE

Audience Most Favorebly Impressed by Work of Fenberg Stock Company

The work of the Fenberg Stock Company furnished a very agreeable surprise to the patrons of the Grand last night and it was the unanimous opinion of the audience that it was decidedly the best repertoire organization that has played in Peterborough. "At Piney Ridge" was presented in a most satisfactory and finished manner. The entire cast was seen to advantage and Frank Thomas as Jack Rose was especially good

This week's engagements is the first appearance locally of the company which is one of the most popular repertoire shows in the States, and enjoys a reputation of carrying the cleverest specialty artists of any itinerary of its kind.

All the specialties last night were of a bright and entertaining character and above the average of the vaudeville features introduced by stock companies which have visited Peterborough.

The scenic effects carried by the Fenberg Stock Company gives an excellent background to their presentations.

POLICE COURT CASES WHICH WERE HEARD

Chas. Baylis Sentenced to Six Months in Central Prison—Two Other Cases on the Docket

Charles Bayles was arrested last night by P.C. Meharry, and appeared at the police court this morning on a charge of vagrancy, and pleaded guilty.

"There is too much of this sort of thing and you will go to Central Prison," said the Magistrate. Six months was the sentence given the accused.

Bayles got into a mix-up on Charlotte street last night, and this led to his being arrested.

Samuel Todd was also charged with being a vagrant, but stated that he had a job to go to at one of the manufacturing industries in the city.

The Magistrate was willing to send him to the Central, but the accused did not like the idea. On the promise to go to work and keep sober, he was allowed to leave the court.

No Other Place to go

Francis McGern, an old man who has been an inmate of the castle on the hill, presented himself in court for an additional period. His time had expired, and he remarked to the Magistrate that he had no other place to go.

The old man was allowed to go back to his late home.

FRED SIMPSON HAS GONE TO HIAWATHA FOR A FEW DAYS

Fred Simpson arrived in the city at noon to-day, having left New York last evening. He went to Hiawatha this afternoon and will remain there until the 20th of the month, when he will go to Toronto to put the finishing touches on his training for the Canadian Derby, which takes place at Toronto on May 1st.

Simpson informed the Review that he has been troubled with a cold since his race with Appleby, which was run on a bitterly cold afternoon. He knew he was in bad shape before he started against Svanberg, but went on not to disappoint the crowd. He considers the Swede a fair man, but thinks he can beat him if in good condition.

SPORTING NEWS

EDDIE SMITH'S INTERESTING STORY OF THE STRUGGLE

In Article for Review Tells of Brilliant Victory of Gotch—Mahmout Completely Outclassed—Champion in the Form of His Life.

Eddie Smith, the referee of the Gotch-Mahmout bout, sends the following interesting account of the world's championship mat battle to the sporting editor of the Review;

Mahmout was outclassed every inch of the way by a wonderful athlete of high mental as well as physical force. Gotch outthought, outfigured, out-managed, outstrengthened and outmanoeuvred his swarthy opponent at every turn of the vigorous but brief journey, and only for a dew short moments did it seem that the grand old flag was in danger of being trailed below the star and crescent of the Orient, or whatever flag the foreign star owes allegiance.

It cannot be classes as anything but an extremely disappointing match, and the enormous crowd that paid grand opera prices and better, to see the struggle, though delirous with joy at the outcome, could only about for a brief bit before there came the sharp realization that all form lines, all dope, all "past performances," had been upset so astonishingly that the situation left everybody gaping for explanation.

HALF NELSON AND CROTCH DOES WORK.

It was a deadly half nelson and crotch lock, shifted from one side to the other to fit the rolling and squirming of the Turk, that brought about the smaller man's downfall. It was the same hold in both bouts, although in the second fall Gotch was forced or rather saw fit to switch this into a reverse full nelson that was even more effective than the clutch that started the Turk on his way to absolute and unequivocal defeat.

The Turk and his manager, Antoine Pierri, accepted their downfall in silent amazement. Pierri conceded the victory after the first fall, being so astonished at the speed and strength and skill of the man from Iowa that he merely gasped that the Turk was up against a much better man. The Turk is as game a loser as he is a fair wrestler and at the finish, though deeply cast down, admitted through Pierri that the unfortunate, to him, result was simply what could be expected in th emeeting of a champion and a man far from his equal.

He did not plead for a second match, he did not say that his condition was faulty, did not quibble or find fault with a single point of the game. He simply shook his head in heartbroken silence and waited for his manager to lead the way out of the ring.

GOTCH IN WONDERFUL FORM.

It wasn't the same Frank Gotch that worked and tugged and pulled and hauled through two awful hours with George Hackenschmidt in the same ring just one year and ten days before. The victor this time was a splendidly trained athlete, conditioned like a racehorse and fit to do battle for the whole State of Iowa, which just now is a prize worth striving for. They told Gotch that this fellow might encompass his downfall if he was not careful. Gotch had this tale dinged into his cauliflower ears until he was forced to heed.

That is why trained more faithfully for this struggle than he has trained for any other match in the last two years. Despite the handicap of a bad cold, taken on five days before the match, Gotch never eased up for a moment in his work, and when he stepped into the ring last night the result was apparent. Gotch never looked better and probably never was better. He seemed to have everything, although not forced to show much to bring about the victory.

MEN ARE BUSY THROUGHOUT.

There isn't much of a story, to the struggle, altough there was more actual wrestling crowded into that fateful fraction of an hour than was shown during the entire two hours and more that was consumed in the match of a year ago. Gotch showed in the preliminary sparring that he was going to prove a source of awful worry to the Turk The latter is not a good aggressive wrestler, and until he gets to the mat with his man he is not really at his best.

They sparred for perhaps four minutes after the handshake and the word to begin before there was any real action, although the sparring was as pretty as anything a wrestling fan could ask for. Gotch perhaps was the more aggressive, going into his man in lively style and fencing beautifully for the opening. There was a rush into the ropes and the Turk clutched the top strand to save himself. But Gotch came around behind in lightning fashion, and amid the wildest demonstration one could imagine the Turk was flopped to the mat with Gotch at his legs.

GOTCH GETS FIRM HOLD

It didn't take long for Gotch to show what he intended to try for. He slipped his left arm around one the Turk's powerful thighs and the other arm sought the half nelson lock around the neck and inside the arm. The Turk squirmed vigorously, but in less than aminute Gotch had the hold and the beginning of the end was in sight. Onto his side rolled the Turk and as he tried to work away from the champion Gotch edged into the double clutch in more desperate fashion.

With one shoulder flat on the canvas and the other being slowly pressed down, the Turk seemed helpless He brought all of his tremendous power to bear, but the road on top this time was not an Olson or an American or a Beell to be lightly tossed off All the little artifices that threw these lighter men off easily were of no avail this time. Gotch pressed and slowly that other shoulder sank toward the canvas.

One tremendous squirm and the shoulder was raised away from the mat again. But every squirm that the Turk used only brought about a more powerful grip by the champion

CHAMPION CONFIDENT

Gotch's self possession at this stage was something wonderful to contemplate. I was flat on the canvass so as to get a godo view under the Turk, and Gotch's face was turned toward me, He had a cruel smile on his face and with scarcely breathing hard he said as calmly as if in ordinary conversation;

"Watch close, I will have it down there in a second."

He didn't get down in a second but with a mighty thrush he brought the powerful shoulder blade of the Turk within the fraction of an inch of the mat. I pushed my fingers under the Turk's shoulder to make sure of it, but it wasn't a fall just then. The Turk squirmed away once more, but Gotch didn't let go and down once more came the shoulder, this time to smash completely over my fingers.

Then I slapped Gotch on the shoulder and as I did so I thought the roof of the building surely would come down. It was the most deafening cheering I have ever heard. The signal for a fall was to have been given with a whistle at the request of the Turk, who has the same European motion as Hackenschmidt had, but a steam calliope at that stage would not have been heard a foot away.

TURK HOLDS ON ROPES

The Turk tried to save himself at one stage by clutching the lower rope of the ring just as he had grabbed the ropes earlier in the bout but that made little difference. He merely prolonged the end for a few seconds.

Game man that the Turk is, his heart was gone when he came out after a rest of twenty minutes for the second fall. He wrestled with some display of spirit, but there was a despairing look on his face that told of an early finish. The gamest of men must know when they have no chance and thus it was with Mahmout

Yussiff did get behind Gotch in the early stages of the nine minutes that the second bout lasted but this was a flash in the pan. The crowd yelled all sorts of encouragement, mostly to Gotch, but Frank didn't need it exactly. The Turk got a powerful locking waist hold on him from behind and Frank had a lively minute or so breaking it. The Turk tried to scissors him but the champion was a bit too speedy and got away. Once Mahmout lifted the Iowa man bodily in the air and tried to make a hard toss of it but Gotch fell lightly.

FALLS INTO HAMMER LOCK

Immediately after that came the fastest session of the bout. The champion rolled his man and Mahmout on the edge of the mat, fell into a nasty looking hammer lock. The clutch was put on just as Mahmout left the mat and I considered it only right that Gotch should have the same hold in the centre according to previous agreement. This Mahmout declined to concede and an appeal to Pierri was equally futile. Gotch insisted and when Mahmout gave him a partial hold Gotch wilfully let it go

It was but a few moments after that that Mahmout failing to roll out and away from his fierce opponent, was soon landed back into Gotch's favorite crotch lock and half nelson. There was some more squirming but after about four twists back and forth the Turk was forced into a bridge and Gotch, throwing all of his weight into a reverse full nelson, slowly crushed the Turk's shoulders to the mat.

The vaunted and dreaded toe hold was not on display until well into this fall. It came during one of Mahmout's rolls and Gotch gathered up one of the Turk's feet and pulled it up toward the small of his back. But the grip wasn't just exactly what Gotch wanted and was used at the time merely as a feeder to force an opening for the favorite crotch and half nelson which eventually came.

This was a match honestly fought at every stage. Mahmout never had been thrown for as much as one fall since his advent here almost six months ago and his steady march through the lesser lights of the heavyweight division created the impression that he would be a dangerous foe for the wonderful American.

That he did not prove so, must be classed as a distinct disappointment even to the loyal Americans who prayed for a Yankee victory. But the fact that the vastly better man won must silence all criticism, if there be any of the honesty of the contest. There was too much at stake for Gotch to take a single chance. And he didn't.

Jim Harrison Has Decided to Take Part in Messiers Grind

Jim Harrison has decided that he will go to Milwaukee to take part in the walk which will be held there from May 10 to 16.

The promoter of the walk is H O. Messier, the well known French American ped, and from the tone of his correspondence with Harrison he is very anxious to have the local man a starter.

The race will commence each night at 8 o'clock and end at 11 o'clock, making three hours a night except on Sunday, May the 16th, the last day of the race, which will be eight hours, commencing at 3 p.m, and ending at 11 p.m.

BASEBALL

The schedule of the Western Canada Baseball League has been drafted and adopted. The Winnipeg Maroons, for whom Jerry Edmunds will play, have between 35 and 40 men signed, but the number will be reduced before the season opens, when Winnipeg plays Brandon on May 24th.

Both the senior and intermediate leagues should put forth big efforts to secure capable umpires for the games this season.

The baseball fans will have an opportunity of watching some good fast games at Riverside Park this season, and the senior city league is worthy of their support.

Representatives of the Strathconas, T.A.S. Cordage Works and Y.M.C.A. baseball teams are reminded of the senior league meeting in the Y.M.C.A. to-morrow night at eight o'clock. Any other teams to intend entering this league are also asked to send a representative, as business of importance will come up at the meeting.

INTERMEDIATE BALL MEETING THIS EVENING

A good attendance is asked for at the meeting of the Intermediate Baseball meeting tonight in the Y.M.C.A. at eight o'clock. Indications are that there will be a large number of teams who will ask to be admitted into this league, but it is altogether likely that that the constitution will be changed and an age limit placed on the players who may play in the league. This will be a good move in the right direction as considerable trouble has been caused in the past two years, by not having any fixed rule as to who was allowed to play with the different teams.

The league should profit by their experience in the past and remedy the defect in the rules and if this is done the different teams are sure to have a successful season and the officers an easy time.

CLOSING OF THE "Y" GYMNASIUM

Will Take Place on Thursday Night of This Week

The Y.M.C.A. gymnasium closing will take place on Thursday evening of this week and complete arrangements for the event have been made. In addition to an extensive exhibition of gymnastic work there will be boxing and wrestling events and several other entertaining features.

The past season has been one of the most successful in the history of the "Y" gymnasium and the closing exercises promise to be unusually interesting.

SPORTING TALK

Joe Jeanette, of New York, and Sam McVey went fifty rounds in a finish fight. The contest lasted three hours and a half.

Fred Hickey, the Toronto boy, who was with the Leafs the last part of last season, will not be kept with the team this year. It is not intended that he should get away from the club, but another year lower down will do wonders for him and make him a valuable man next year, or if things should go badly, with him, send him back again. One, and possibly two more pitchers will be secured between now and the season's opening to help.—Telegram.

The entry list for the Canadian Marathon at the Island May 1st now totals eleven, with three more men enquiring for the rules and regulations The latest entries are from Toney Brant, 316 James street, street, North Hamilton, and R. J Hatton, 7 Robinson street, Toronto, a veteran who held the long distance championship in the '80's.

The Toronto Eastern League team opens the season at home this season with a series of four games with Newark.

Edward Payson has arrived in Chicago on his way to San Francisco He has averaged 47 miles every walking day.

Sixty thousand spectators poured upon the field during a football game in Glasgow. The contest ended in a tie and the teams refused to break the tie, thus causing the trouble.

The Edmonton baseball team, with whom Corney Burns is to play this season, will play most of their games in the evening.

St. Yves finished a fifteen mile race with Pat White Cast Sunday in 1.27.05.4-5. Simpson's time with Appleby was for the game distance 1.28.43, while St. Yves' time in the Marathon Derby for fifteen miles was 1.36.23.3-5. By comparing the three records it would seem that Simpson is not far behind.

LACROSSE

Don't forget the lacrosse meeting at the Crown Hotel this evening at 7.30 o'clock. All those interested are asked to attend. Arrangements for a team the 24th of May will be made and as the grounds are now in pretty fair condition practice will likely start next week. Arrangements for the grounds are completed and a big turnout of both players and supporters of the game is looked for.

A NICE GAME IN OLD GLASFOW

Glasgow, April 18—The final soccer football game for the Scottish Cup ended in a riot today. Sixty thousand spectators charged upon the playing field and tore up the goal posts and set fir eto the entrance gate fennces and ticket booths. More than forty persons were injured and take to hospitals.

When the firemen attempted to extinguish the blaze, the crowd cut the hose and stoned the firemen, rendering their efforts useless. Mounted police then charged the rioters, and in the fac eof a hail of rocks, bottles and other missiles, succeeded in keeping them from the grand stands and the pavilion, in which the players had taken refuge. These structures alone were saved from th eflames.

The trouble arose because the teams refused to play extra time to settle a tie. The injured for the most part are policeman.

Celtic and Rangers fo rthe second time had played a tie, today's score being one goal to each.

Seeding is not yet general through the west.

GOING TO WINNIPEG

"Bill" Landry Will Turn Out With Wheat City Ball Team This Year

Mr. "Bill" Landry, of last year's Athletics, leaves tonight or tomorrow morning for Winnipeg, where he will play ball this summer with the Winnipeg ball team.

He will be tried out at either third base or the outfield and received his ticket to Winnipeg from the manager of the club this morning.

GOING TO THE WEST

Corney Burns Will Play With the Edmonton Team of Western Can. League

Peterborough will lose one of its best ball players next week when Corney Burns will leave for the west. Corney has been signed by the management of the Edmonton team of the Western Canada League and will no doubt make good in fine style. He is booked for centre field and on the left of him will have Connie Murphy of last year's Midland League, champions. Jerry Edmunds, who will catch for the Winnipeg team, will be in the same league.

Corney will be much missed in local athletic circles as he was an enthusiastic as well as an excellent athlete. He should have a bright future as a ball player, being a great hitter and having phenomenal speed on the bases. Corney will leave for Edmonton next week.

Ferry Adrift.

Buffalo, April 20.—The ferryboat Niagara, running between Buffalo and Fort Erie, Ont., was caught in the ice yesterday morning and was carried down the Niagara river to the International Bridge, where its top deck and pilot house were carried off, when it came in contact with the bridge. There were but few passengers on the ferry, and while there was a panic on the boat, no person was injured. The tug International finally got a line to the Niagara and towed her to the Canadian side.

Slap For Joe Martin.

London, April 20.—The writ for the Stratford-on-Avon election will not be issued for some time, as the Liberal headquarters in London wish to give Joe Martin plenty of time to impress the electors. The Conservatives are making use of a letter of I. D. Layland of Montecreek, B.C., who points out, in view of Mr. Martin's declaration that Canada did not want a preference, that one of the planks in Mr. Martin's last election in Canada was reciprocity with the United States. Mr. Layland adds, "There is no place in British politics for Mr. Martin."

A Girl Horse Thief.

London, Ont., April 20.—Nellie Prior, aged 19, horse-thief and bad girl generally, as a result of reading Wild West dime novels, was sentenced to two years in the Mercer yesterday morning for horse-stealing. The girl ran away from home in Galt, and since coming to London has stolen several horses and buggies from local liverymen. She drove all about the country, sleeping outdoors, and trying to emulate the heroes in the novels.

Seeks Lost Son.

Windsor, April 20.—Thomas Kinney, a farmer living near Woodslee, was in Windsor yesterday in search of his son, John, who disappeared over two months ago. Kinney left Woodslee to secure employment at the tunnel, and while here boarded with his uncle. He left the house on Sunday, Feb. 19, to make a call, and never returned, leaving about $11 unclaimed wages. His father has offered a reward of $100 for information.

Incendiary Fire In the West.

Rostheru, April 20.—Over $18,000 damage was done by fire which destroyed the general store of Henschell & Co. yesterday morning. Insurance on stock is $6,500. When the alarm sounded the front of the building was all ablase, and the brigade did splendid work in saving the post-office adjoining. It is supposed the fire was the work of an incendiary, as fires were out long before the store closed Saturday.

Made Threats to Get His Money.

Goderich, April 20.—Charles Burling, a young man living near Blyth, was sent up for trial yesterday by Police Magistrate Butler for a "Black hand" threatening letter to the agent at Blyth threatening to blow up the C.P.R. bridge near Blyth if not paid the sum of $83. It appears a subcontractor who had a contract when the C.P.R. was under construction failed, and left owing this young man $83.

REV. FATHER COLLINS DEAD; WAS CALLED AWAY YESTERDAY

Was a Zealous Priest and His Death Will Be Sincerely Mourned—Had Been Attached to Cathedral Staff for Several Years

Lindsay, April 19.—Rev. Father T. F. Collins, the beloved parish priest of Bracebridge, and son of Mr. T. Collins, Lindsay, passed away to his eternal rest this morning. In his death his Lordship Bishop O'Connor is again called upon to mourn the loss of a zealous priest who practically died in the performance of his priestly duties.

The late Rev. Timothy Francis Collins was born in the township of Cavan, Durham County, in 1855, and was therefore at the time of his death, fifty-four years of age. He came to Lindsay with his parents when he was two years of age and pursued his early studies at the Separate school, afterwards attending St. Michael's College, Toronto. On finishing his theological course at the Grand Seminary, Montreal, he was afterwards ordained to the priesthood at Peterborough, by his Lordship Bishop O'Connor, on the 9th of June, 1881. He was attached to St. Peter's Cathedral in that city until 1895, when he was appointed to the parish at Wooler, Northumberland county.

In 1897 his Lordship Bishop O'Connor appointed Rev. Father Collins to the extensive parish of Bracebridge, which includes the whole Muskoka district, with missions at Gravenhurst, Baysville, Whiteside, Mornius Hay Bay, and other points. The deceased's work in this parish stands as a monument to his zeal and self-sacrificing labor on behalf of his church. He attended his scattered flock in all kinds of weather and the long drives and bad roads never once interfered with the performance of his priestly duties. He gave up the good fight like a true missionary, and died in the hope of reward from his Master, whom he so faithfully served as long as his physical strength endured.

The people of the Muskoka district of all denominations had learned to love and respect "Father Tim," as he was affectionately termed. He was broad-minded, tolerant, and of a kind and loving disposition.

The deceased clergyman is survived by his aged father, one sister, Miss Ellen Collins, and four brothers, Rev. Father John Collins, of Sandwich, Ont., and Charles, Terrence and Cornelius.

The funeral will take place from Gravenhurst at the conclusion of the celebration of requiem mass on Wednesday, and the remains will be brought to Lindsay by G.T.R., arriving on the 6.05 train that evening. They will remain in St. Mary's church over night and on Thursday morning at 9.30 o'clock solemn requiem mass will be [illegible]ted, after which the remains will be interred in the family plot at the cemetery.

HEARD REPORTS OF CONVENTION

Delegates Gave Reports at Meeting of Park St. Church B. Y. P. U.

A most enjoyable evening was spent last night at the Park street BYPU meeting. A goodly number were present to hear the reports of the delegates to the annual BYPU convention held in Stratford, Good Friday week.

Miss Bessie Mowry told of the first sessions of the convention while Miss Edith Gillespie gave an account of the last days' proceedings.

Both reports were listened to with pleasure and profit, and the society was glad to have been represented by such able delegates who brought back with them an inspiration to all.

The delegates were billeted at one of the pastors who served Park street so well, Rev O C Elliott, of the Stratford Baptist church.

BE SURE TO HEAR IT.

NO ANNOUNCEMENT OF FISCAL CHANGES IN BUDGET SPEECH

Concession to Beet Sugar Manufacturers Will Continue For Three Years—Mr. Fielding Says Their is a Surplus of Nearly a Million and a Half

Ottawa, April 21.—Mr. Fielding's budget statement yesterday afternoon contained no announcement of fiscal changes.

The Government has decided to continue for three years the concession to beet sugar manufacturers, by allowing them to import two tons of foreign raw sugar to every ton of Canadian beet sugar manufactured on the preferential tariff basis, and for two years in the proportion of one to one.

It had been represented that the application of the preference had resulted in the creation of a combine in the West Indies and they had been asked to extend the concession to other sugar refiners, in the proportion of one-fifth of the amount of sugar they produced. This country, said Mr. Fielding, will take part in a conference regarding the development of trade with the West Indies, and the existence of the combine will then be discussed, and if found not to exist, the concession will be withdrawn.

The Finance Minister's conclusion was an expression of belief that the tide is turning.

"For the long period of thirteen years," he said, "it has been my good fortune to present to the Parliament of Canada the annual statement of our financial affairs. In almost every one of these speeches I have been able to present a story of expansion of trade, of growing revenue, of satisfactory business, of increased population and of all the things that make for the progress and prosperity of our country.

"During the past year the conditions have been somewhat less favorable. The monetary stringency, almost world wide in its character, which began in the autumn of 1907, created much disturbance of the trade and commerce of all countries. Our neighbor to the south suffered perhaps more than others. A panic in that country created paralysis of industry, a paralysis of business. It was not to be expected that under such conditions we in Canada could entirely escape, and yet as we look back, we have reason to feel proud of the manner in which Canada passed through that crisis."

Mr. Fielding declared that he was able to show a surplus of nearly a million and a half on the past year's operations, while the debt had been increased by $46,000,000.

Next year the country will pay out $111,000,000, but Mr. Fielding was unable to show what the revenues would total. He hoped there would be an increase, but said the figures would not reach the total of 1907.

The most important figures presented were: Revenue, 1908-9, $84,352,581; ordinary expenditure, 1908-9, $83,000,000; surplus, 1908-9, $1,352,581; capital expenses, N.T.R., $25,500,000; Quebec bridge, $6,494,000; special expenditures, $17,300,000; total, $49,294,000.

Deduct surplus and sinking fund, $3,175,000; added to debt, $46,029,000; estimate expenditure for 1909-10 (ordinary), $80,078,624; estimate capital $30,411,150; total, $111,489,774.

Mr. Fielding said he would discuss three separate fiscal years, the first one ending March 31, 1908; the second, March 31, 1909, and the current year, ending March 31, 1910. The year before last (ending March 31, 1908) showed a total revenue of $96,054,505, while he had anticipated $96,500,000. The expenditures however, had amounted to $76,641,451, estimate being 77,500,000, the net result had been very favorable. The customs revenues for the year ending March 31, 1908, were the largest ever, aggregating $57,543,811. The surplus had applied only ordinary expenditures, and there had been expenditures upon capital and special accounts aggregating $35,237,228. The large portion of this had been paid out of ordinary revenue, but for 1907-8 there had been an increase in the net debt of Canada of $14,288,999. Had it not been for $18,900,000 spent on the National Transcontinental Railway, he would have reduced the debt by $4,621,000.

In the fiscal year ending March 31 last, the revenues so far shown amounted to $84,352,581, which further receipts might bring to $84,500,000; a decrease of $11,500,000 from the preceding year. He had feared he would have to announce a deficit for the year ending March 31, 1909, but instead there would be a surplus of $1,500,000.

However, large expenditures would have to be charged against capital and special accounts, substantially as follows: Upon National Transcontinental, $25,500,000; upon Quebec bridge, $6,494,000; other capital and special expenditure, $17,300,000; total, $49,294,000, from which he was entitled to deduct a surplus of $1,500,000, also $1,670,000 paid into the sinking fund, leaving $46,029,000 added to the public debt.

Referring to the surplus of $1,500,000, it was in part arrived at by charging bounties to special expenditure instead of to revenue. If the bounties were deducted from revenue there would be a deficit, he admitted. The poor showing for the past year was in part on account of the world-wide financial panic. Moreover, $32,000,000 had been expended upon the N.T.R. and the Quebec bridge.

"If we had desired to do so," he continued, "we might have avoided this addition to the public debt. We might have abandoned the eastern section of the Transcontinental, especially between Quebec and Moncton." But the Government had done wisely in pushing on the work, and in borrowing money instead of granting land subsidies. The railway would soon become an interest bearing asset.

Trade statistics, he said, naturally enough, were unfavorable. 1908 had been the banner year, total trade showing an increase of $100,000,000 over 1906. There had been a shrinkage of $33,000,000 in exports and $78,000,000 in imports for the year March 31, 1909. Total trade so far as it could now be estimated was $563,030,000, while for 1908 it had been $650,000,000. The great shrinkage had been in imports and in this respect Canada had come through the panic much better than the United States.

The current year, which began April 1, could not hope to equal the prosperity of 1908 and several years must go before Canadian finances would again reach high water mark. The revenue for year ending March 31, 1909, had been $85,000,000 and he predicted this would be exceeded.

"It is evident," said Mr. Fielding, "that we must materially increase our taxes or materially reduce our expenditures," and the latter course should be followed. The estimates for 1909-10 showed that the Government was trying to economize. The estimates for 1908-09 from the consolidated fund had been $89,412,868; for 1909-10, $80,078,624. As to capital expenditure, estimates for 1908-09 were $43,653,365; for 1909-10, $30,411,150. The Government, therefore, expected to get along with $22,000,000 less. He urged the members not to press for public works. None would be carried unless urgent and important.

He hoped that he would be able out of the current revenue for the coming year to pay all ordinary expenses and nearly all expenses for capital account, except the $20,000,000 required for the National Transcontinental.

Discussing his method of getting at surpluses, he said it was absurd to complain that because expenditures of the Government exceeded the revenue in any given year there was not a surplus in said year. The method of keeping two accounts, one for ordinary expenditure and the other for capital accounts, was a practice established at Confederation and followed by all Finance Ministers.

Mr. Ames—"What is the established practice in Great Britain?"

Mr. Fielding—"We are talking about Canada."

Mr. Borden—"Does any other civilized country keep books like we do?"

Mr. Fielding—"No, but our conditions are different. A new country, especially a colony, must keep their accounts differently from an old settled country like England."

Mr. Borden—"How about Australia and New Zealand?"

Mr. Fielding—"I don't know and I don't care. I protest emphatically against Conservative newspapers putting all revenue in one column and all expenditures in another column, and calling the excess of expenditure a deficit."

Hon. Geo. E. Foster, erstwhile Finance Minister, replied. The speech of his "ancient friend" had had a remarkably sophorifric effect. He (Foster) had not quite been able to arouse himself from it. A good deal had been left out. His declaration of a surplus of one and one-half millions looked a cheer but not a hearty one. His "inverted system" of accounting had enabled him to figure out a surplus of a million and a half, whereas if he had taken everything into the account he would have shown a deficit of three-quarters of a million dollars.

When trade was good, it was because of the wisdom of the Government policy, but when bad it was the fault of the world-wide depression. The only gleam of sunshine the Finance Minister could send out was that he hoped there would be a little increase in revenues; nothing as to probable expenditures. Mr. Fielding hoped there would be a decrease in expenditure. That was a very good intention. When every third-class man in a bank knew that the financial storm was bursting, he (Fielding) organized and carried out his most lavish, his most wasteful expenditures. Was it because he lacked common sense or because he was making provision for an election? If the Finance Minister had taken precautions a few years ago he would not have strained the credit of the country now. It was never too late to learn, said Mr. Foster in referring to the old practice of keeping separate capital and consolidated fund accounts.

"Pretty late repentance," interjected Sir Wilfrid.

Mr. Foster attacked the figures as to the net debt of Canada per head of the population. If you took into account all that the Government had taken out of the people for all purposes it would show that the amount per head in 1896 was $5.46 and in 1909 $11 per head.

R. F. Sutherland followed Mr. Foster and Mr. Perley moved the adjournment of the debate.

TRAGIC AFFAIR AT WOODSTOCK

Woodstock, April 21.—A tragic event occurred here yesterday morning when P. J. F. Dugit, deputy registrar, stabbed himself in the heart with a surgeon's knife. He was found in the rear apartment of the registry office by Miss McWhinnie, one of the clerks. Life was extinct.

It is presumed he secured the knife some time ago from the hospital during a meeting of the hospital trust, of which he was secretary. Dugit had been in poor headth for some time. He leaves a wife and family of five. Deceased was secretary of the Board of Education; a Mason and a prominent singer. He was about fifty years of age.

Teachers Study Agriculture.

Guelph, April 21.—The Ontario Agricultural College received 200 lady school teachers from the Normal schools of the province on Monday. For the next three months they will occupy the college residence.

The teachers agree for three years thereafter to teach in the rural schools of the province. Their studies will be divided between elementary agriculture, including school gardening, and industrial art, including drawing, cardboard work, and manual training, etc.

Wheat Prices Broke.

Chicago, April 21.—Wheat prices on the Board of Trade yesterday broke from 2 1-8 to 4 3-8c. per bushel from the high point of the day and the market closed extremely weak and only a trifle above the low market. Corn closed about steady, oats were easy and provisions were weak.

Almost complete demoralization prevailed in the wheat pit for a brief period late in the session and only the most determined support by bull leaders saved the market.

Fear Bombs at Funeral.

Pekin, April 21.—Arrangements for the approaching funeral services for the late Emperor reveal the fact that extraordinary precautions are being taken to safeguard the imperial prince and high officials against the possibility of a bomb being thrown or other outrages.

The infant Emperor will not participate in the ceremony and the prince regent will participate only within the confines of the closely-guarded imperial city.

Sending Flour East.

Portland, Ore., April 21.—The Pacific Northwestern states are sending flour to the eastern markets, a situation which is almost unprecedented. The flour the easterners are buying is a low grade article such as it has been customary to sell the Orientals and is for bakers' and cracker-makers' use.

Athens' Woman Left Gagged by the Roadside--Found Moaning and Semi-Conscious

Special to the Review.

Athens, Ont, April 21—As Mrs. Lillie, wife of Dr F B Lillie, of Athens was leaving for her mother's home at nine o'clock last night she was brutally assaulted and left gagged by the roadside in front of her home.

Fortunately Dr. Hart was passing to see a patient and heard Mrs. Lillie moaning as she lay semi-conscious and at once did all he could for the unfortunate woman. Mrs. Lillie has been the recipient of anonymous letters recently and the police are investigating the case.

SULTAN TO FIGHT

Says He Will Abdicate Only by Dying in the Struggle

Constantinople, April 21.—Sultan Abdul Hamid is waiting in his palace for whatever may befall.

He has not taken flight, and his grand vizier, Tewfik Pasha, has announced that, without fear, the Sultan will remain with his family and accept resignedly the fate which has been prepared for him and his country.

Constantinople last night was gay and animated. All the cafes were brilliant and crowded. Political talk is going on at every table in the most open fashion.

Strange and wild stories are being told, with every indication of being believed, principally about the Sultan, terror of whose spies being raised, all tongues are unloosed. At one of these tables it was related that the Sultan was half unconscious and had been moaning for hours throughout the day. Another tale was that he had implored first one and then another of his palace favorites to devise means to save him.

A newcomer joined the table, with a circumstantial narrative that the ambassadors had waited on the Sultan with the demand that he abdicate; the Sultan had replied that he would not abdicate except by dying, scimitar in hand, with Constantinople in ruins and flames.

Extra newspapers in Turkish, Greek, French and German, are appearing in the various quarters every hour. They are hawked shrilly. Many of these extras are merely handbills sent out by irresponsible persons, but all seemingly find ready market, and are read generally.

Frank Varty is at present out on $1,000 bail.

THE EATON CO. TO PUBLISH THE NEW ONTARIO READERS

Price Will be 49 Cents Per Set--Sir James Whitney. Announces That Province Will Have Its School Books at Nearly One-Quarter the Price Paid in Alberta and Saskatchewan

Toronto, April 21.—A brief statement made yesterday by Sir James P. Whitney, Prime Minister of Ontario, that "the lowest tender for printing and publishing the new Ontario school readers was put in by the T. Eaton Co., Limited, to whom the contract has been awarded," follows the Government's persistent efforts to break the "school book ring," and place the cost of text books on a reasonable basis.

The retail price named in the tender is 49 cents for the set of five books. From this there is a discount of 20 per cent., which is available to anyone paying cash, making the net price of the books 39 1-5 cents. The cost of the old readers, when the Whitney Government assumed office in 1905, was $1.15. That contract expired in December, 1906. A short contract for a year and a half was then awarded to the lowest tenderer, at 49 cents for the set. But this was for old books, and the prices secured were ridiculed as bargain rates for old stock and unobtainable later.

The preparation of the new series was then begun, with the result as follows: Price of old readers in 1905—Primer 10 cents, part II. 15 cents, second reader 20 cents, third reader 30 cents, fourth reader 40 cents. Reduced prices, 1905—Primer 5 cents, part II. 7 cents, second reader 9 cents, third reader 13 cents, fourth reader 15 cents. New readers—Primer 4 cents, part II. 6 cents, second reader 9 cents, third reader 14 cents, fourth reader 16 cents. With the 20 per cent. discount for cash, the net price of the new readers will be—Primer 3 1-5 cents, part II. 4 4-5 cents, second reader 7 1-5 cents, third reader 11 1-5 cents, fourth reader 12 4-5 cents, making the total net cost 39 1-5 cents.

The actual saving in cash to the people of the province on the basis of former sales will be half a million dollars for the first year, and $125,000 a year thereafter for the remaining years of the contract. The contract will be current for ten years.

The prices obtained by Ontario, as compared with those under the recent contract made by Saskatchewan and Alberta, are as follows:

	Ontario. Retail.	Ontario. Net.	Sask. and Alta. Retail.	Sask. and Alta. Net.
Primer	4	3 1-5	20	13.68
Part II.	6	4 4-5	25	16.54
2nd Reader	9	7 1-5	36	18.91
3rd Reader	14	11 1-5	45	23.75
4th Reader	16	12 4-5	50	27.36
Total for set....	49	39 1-5	$1.75	$1.02

The new books will not only surpass the old readers in mechanical production, but their literary quality is declared by competent judges to be superior to that of others. They will also contain more pages than the old—part one 128 instead of 96, the second reader 224 as against 184, the third reader 352 instead of 288, and the fourth reader 416 pages compared with 344.

HUGE FLOODS ARE IN PROSPECT AT NIAGARA FALLS AND DOWN RIVER

Water is Steadily Creeping Up at Niagara-on-the-Lake and Damage of a Quarter Million is Dreaded—Ice Jam is Steadily Moving

Niagara-on the-Lake, April 21.—The situation here is alarming. The entire area around the docks is under water, which is 27 feet above normal.

Another four inches rise and it will commence to run across the sidewalks which lead from the docks to the upper town, and to seek an outlet down by Elliott's boarding-house.

If the same rate of rise of the water keeps on there will be a torrent 200 feet wide following the same channel. If it perseveres till noon to-day the river waters will be practically diverted and the Niagara will be cutting for itself a new outlet over the ruins of the lower end of the town.

The municipal power house is isolated and the Cross, Hilborn and Abbott houses are surrounded. The big factory of the Canadian canners is engulfed on three sides and the waters are at the doors of the American and Lakeview hotels.

There are sixteen dwelling-houses in this district.

If the worst happens, all these buildings will be destroyed and 75 people rendered homeless. A conservative estimate of the damage would reach perhaps $250,000.

The ice jam has been moving all night, but so slowly that the movement was almost imperceptible, about a foot every six minutes. The east wind was heavy enough to break up the blockade at the river mouth, but has rather conspired to keep the water high. What water is getting through is following a narrow channel along the face of the breakwater of the Queen's Royal Hotel, past which it is rushing like a millrace. The ice opposite the N. C. Co. docks has risen 12 feet since yesterday morning.

Low lying areas along the river between Queenston and Niagara are being swept by the flood. Over at Fort Niagara it is expected that nothing can save the life-saving station.

Lewiston Bridge Endangered.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 21.—Today promises to be the most destructive in the history of Niagara river, the water is rising steadily and ice from Lake Erie is coming over the falls in large masses.

All property on both sides of the river is in danger and the Lewiston bridge can scarcely escape destruction.

Realizing the danger to life and property along the lower frontier as a result of the ice jam, Customs Controller John A. Merritt communicated with the War Department yesterday with a view of enlisting aid from the Government. Merritt went to Lewiston yesterday to look over the situation there. Lewiston and the surrounding country is threatened with an inundation the like of which has never been experienced.

The river has risen to an alarming height. The basement of Cornell's pavilion at Lewiston is reported flooded with water, and the tide is still rising. No small frame buildings within reach of the shore has escaped unscathed.

At Niagara-on-the-Lake the situation is also said to be serious. The Michigan Central Railway is deserting its station, emptying its storehouse on the dock and placing in safety their records and everything movable in the station. The owners of Lakeview and Ward's Hotels have got everything in readiness to flee at short notice, and the whole town is alarmed. The water has risen 12 feet since yesterday morning.

At Queenston, the ice has risen to within ten feet of the bridge, as the ice rose and snapped several of the guys which held it in position.

REVOLVER FOUND TWO DOORS FROM KINRADE HOUSE, BUT PUBLIC THINK IT IS A HOAX

Special to the Review.

Hamilton, April 21.—A 33 calibre revolver was found this morning under a slat walk leading to the residence of Mrs Abbott, 111 Herkimer street, two doors west of the Kinrade home. It was discovered by Wm Robson and George Anderson, bricklayers who were going to work. The end of the barrel of the weapon was encrusted with soft dirt. Each chamber was choked up and the mechanism was gritty but there was not a spot of rust on the weapon.

The general impression is that this is not the revolver with which Ethel Kinrade was murdered and that it was placed where found recently as a hoax on the police and public

THE SMITH ST. BRIDGE

The proposed concrete bridge at Smith street is beyond doubt the most useful of all those proposed. Concrete grows better with age and needs no superintendence. The bridge will have to be built. It is no doubt a very disagreeable necessity and one which in the present state of the city's tax-rate by no means pleasant to look upon. But that need not affect the issue. A corduroy bridge will have to be provided if nothing else is forthcoming. The worst of such a course as that of rejecting the by-law is that the north and east parts of the city would of necessity come to the conclusion that the rest of the city cared nothing about them. This to some extent would be a reasonable deduction in view of the absolute need of a bridge at the point named.

THE GLOBE'S IDEA

Ottawa Free Press.—The ultra-loyalists who are clamoring for a direct contribution by Canada to the British navy are at the same time the chief exponents of the policy of "Keep British goods out of Canada." That is Conservative consistency.—The Globe.

The man who wrote that and the man who thought enough of it to endorse it are both the real thing in know-nothing Gritism, which is a form of dullness that is unable to distinguish between the self-respect which prompts independence of spirit in times of peace and that positively stupid condition of mind which could argue that to be consistently loyal, one must cease to be a rival either in peace or war. We are at liberty in Canada, according to all the dictates of imperialism to be a daughter in our mother's house, but mistress in our own, as Kipling has so well put it. The aim of a son in a life-and-death defence of his father is not less likely or lovable because in daily life the son and the father are friendly rivals in business. That the Globe should quote such stuff shows how necessary it is for that journal to revise its ideas of loyalty and self-respect.

MILITARY TRAINING

The weight of the world's arms and armaments has become so great as to imperil the very existence of mankind, as happened in the case of the Corsair, who took so many stand of arms aboard as to sink his galley and drown the crew and passengers. On the other hand no one is so fatuous as to pretend that military preparations and equipment are wholly unnecessary. Where then, is the golden mean? Should we decry all means of attaining strength of body, discipline and a sense of organization simply because the war-drums beat unnecessarily and madness is in the air at the present time? If we used the word "training" without the word "military" perhaps the desired end would be attained without opposition or hypocrisy. Training, such as is afforded by moving in organized masses, the learning and doing of routine, the patience under fatigue-work, the development of the sense of responsibility, the improving power of associating with one's fellowmen, etc., all go to make up an invaluable stock-in-trade, and while we have no sympathy with the "shooting down" process or the establishment of a military class or caste in any form, the necessity of learning the rudiments of law and order is only too apparent in our youth.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY

The end of the session at Ottawa is within sight, and yet no appropriation has been made for establishing rural mail delivery in the county of Peterborough. In view of the professions made by candidates representing the Liberal party in Peterborough with respect to the desirability of having rural mail delivery in the country, the necessity of it, and the intention of the Liberals of establishing it immediately, the results look pretty tame. But we shall keep at it till the same is the interests of the farmers. It would be a wise move for farmers to force the Government's hand by meeting in large numbers to protest against the delay and to draw the attention of the government to its broken promises.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Why don't the tariff-haters refer to the rise in wheat? It is worse than any other commodity as a corner-maker. Yet there is no question of tariff in the matter at all. But the tariff-haters will not refer to it. It is double-edged.

The London Lancet gives solemn warning of the danger lurking in the morning's cup of tea served in bed. The tea itself, freshly infused, and a great deal of milk or cream added, can readily be considered harmless, it appears, but septic potentialities accumulate in the mouth during the night, so the most cogent argument against the early morning cup of tea is that in many cases the tea is swallowed before the mouth and teeth are cleansed and a poisoning process in the system might thus easily be begun.

IS NO ESCAPE FROM THE LAW

The Dominion Police Capture Two Belgian Fugitives at Montreal

That Canada is not a good hiding place for fugitives from justice was exemplified last Tuesday when, by the request of Colonel Sherwood, of the Dominion Police, two Belgians, who, after hiding in various parts of Europe and in England, were arrested in Montreal.

The charge against the two men, whose names are Louis Depauro and Emmanuel Kleinschmidt, is that they received by theft, forgery and embezzlement government securities amounting to the sum of 500,000 francs. Several large Belgian banking institutions were the victims, and it is said that the government of Belgium stood to lose a considerable portion of the amount, which is equal to over $100,000.

Photographs and descriptions of the young men were forwarded to the Dominion police, who were advised to be on the lookout. In their attempt to evade the arm of the law, the Belgians are said to have hidden in many quarters of Europe. In England the authorities were after them hot foot. They took a steamer to Canada and soon after their arrival in Montreal were nabbed.

When arrested the men had only a small sum of money on them. They will appear before the Commissioner of Extradition, Judge Choquet, of Montreal to-morrow at 2.30. They will doubtless fight extradition.

The Dominion police were requested to arrest the men by the Belgian Government officials.

On motion the communications were received and fyled.

The report of the boiler inspection was read, and on motion referred to Mr. Pakenham to have repairs attended to as recommended by report.

Mr. Squire made a report of the deputation to Toronto, re Agricultural school for Norwood. After discussion the report was received and orders drawn on the Treasurer to defray expenses of the members of the Board who attended, viz., Messrs. J L Squire, J P Elliott and E I Cuffe.

The High School Inspector's report was laid before the Board and elicited a lengthy discussion during which several members of the Board expressed their opinions.

Mr. Barron, High school principal, was present and addressed the Board.

On motion Messrs. Squire, Cuffe, Finlay and Pakenham were appointed a committee to draft a letter to the Minister of Education dealing with certain phases of the said report.

Miss Kirkpatrick was appointed associate examiner for the entrance examinations.

The following accounts were passed:

Secretary to 2 Shannon fyles	1.75
K G Thomson, for telephoning	.65
W P Plant, plates for boiler	2.25
W C Doughty, repairing pump	1.00
K G Thomson, supplies for HS	22.97

The Board adjourned at 11 pm.

About midnight on Monday night Norwood was aroused by the wild clanging of the fire bell and on first looking at the reflection of the flames many thought the Reynolds block and King's hotel were doomed. But while the fire was disastrous and a heavy loss to Mr. King, proprietor of the hotel, the worst fears of the alarmed villagers were soon dispelled. Willing workers kept the flames confined to the stables and sheds of the hotel and a small barn adjoining belonging to Mr Coleman Elliott. At first it was reported that four horses were in the barn and an heroic effort was made by some of the men to rescue them but they were forced back by the intense smoke and heat and the poor beasts had to be abandoned to their horrible fate.

The loss of live stock was afterwards found to be one horse owned by Mr John Weir, Mr King's fine cow and two pigs.

The cause of the fire is unknown. The loss which approximates $2000 was only partly covered by insurance.

During the fire Mr W Beckett had the misfortune to lose a valuable watch.

The Ladies' Missionary Society will take charge of the Epworth League next Monday night. A good programme is being prepared by them.

Later in the day the admiral denied emphatically that he had penned this sentence.

OF INTEREST

The Revolution in France

Paris, once the home of revolution, the worshipper of an ever new "Bonnet Rouge," has more recently changed into the home of strikes. The strikes of France are coming to form one of the political sensations of our day, as they are daily, weekly, monthly recorded in the Continental papers. They are directed as much against law and order as against the monopolies of trade. We see one branch of industry after the other rising in avowed rebellion against the Republic, the Parliament and the existing Ministry. Telegraph operators and electricians among the most intelligent of the wage earning classes, are joined by bakers, boatmen and carriage drivers. The last great strike, that of the postal, telegraph and telephone employees, has resulted in a sweeping victory for the malcontents. The Paris journals are full of anecdotes, illustrating the reckless violence with which the striking orators rail against existing institutions in France. Pataud, the secretary of the striking electricians who by one word plunged Paris into darkness, had previously presided at a meeting of 10,000 men in which he cried "Down with the Parliament, "Down with the Republic." "Are we endangering the Republic," exclaimed a discharged postal employee, "what do we care for the Republic." He was answered by a cry from the crowd, "To hell with the two Bastilles — the Parliament and the State."

The Government have been powerless. How could they help themselves, asks the Independance Belge, Brussels. Could anything have been done even by a Roman dictator. This discerning journal proceeds:

"Do you imagine that if you had a dictator in power he could have compelled those 100,000 employees of the post, telegraph, and telephones to resume work? By what means? By bayonets? We hear this said, but it is an impossible thing to do. Suppose that tomorrow, what some day will happen, were actually to take place, the railroad operatives were in their turn to go on strike. Could any power compel engine drivers and firemen to resume. The strike universal seems imminent, and we see that revolutionary preparations are even now being made under the very eyes of a Government which has not either the means or the courage to deliver the country from anarchy."

The Government is also blamed by the Figaro, Paris, in an article under the heading "The Triumph of the Revolution." The writer considers that this "triumph" and "the easy success of the revolts" ought to be taken as "one of the clearest signs of the Government's dangerous feebleness." Naturally this important Conservative organ makes political capital out of the failure of a Radical Government. To quote the words of Mr. Andre Beaunier in this journal:

"The strike is over. It ends with the victory of the revolutionaries. This results merely from the imbecility of the Government. All the revolts of the last few months have been successful — not because they were justifiable but because our Radical Government is pusillanimous. But how could the Government have extricated itself from the difficulty. That is for them to find out. That the difficulty was greater this time than heretofore resulted from the weak complaisance with which previous strikes had been handled."

In many papers, however, Radical, as well as Conservative, the defeat of the Government is looked upon as of almost less economic significance. The strike is a distinctly political weapon of defiance against authority, and is instituting a "social revolution." Thus the Radical Paris, organ of the striking classes, ironically congratulates Mr Clemenceau; and Mr Jaures's Humanite exclaims: "Arrogance has fallen." "The police and postal authorities are conquered by the strike." Mr. Simyan, the chief of the postal department is especially stigmatized and even the judicious Temps is driven to the suggestive avowal: "The strikers demanded the head of Simyan and they got it. The social revolution has gained its first great battle." — Translations made for The Literary Digest.

THE MIGHTY POWER OF MI-O-NA.

Miona, that extraordinary and perfect stomach cure, will relieve dyspepsia in twenty-four hours.

It will cure and is guaranteed by Wm. Madill to the readers of The Review to cure the most pitiful cases of dyspepsia, if taken according to directions.

Mi-ona tablets not only cure dyspepsia but all stomach disturbances, such as vomiting of pregnancy, sea or car sickness and the stomach sickness after excessive indulgence.

Mi-ona cures by strengthening and invigorating the flabby stomach walls and after a course of Mi-ona treatment, constipation, if there is any will entirely disappear.

Mrs S. Keast, of Clarksburg, Ont. says: "A bad stomach trouble that had bothered me for years, baffled and puzzled skilled physicians, was n early relieved by my using Mi-ona. My trouble was on account of food not digesting but fermenting in my stomach, forming a gas that gave me untold suffering, and pain and also made me weak, nervous, irritable and unable to rest. Since using Mi-ona I can go to bed at night and sleep and wake up in the morning refreshed. I cannot speak too highly of Mi-ona."

Mi-ona is a most economical treatment: a large box of tablets only costs 50 cents at Wm Madill's, Peterborough, and the dyspeptic, nervous or otherwise who does not give them a trial is losing an opportunity to regain health."

Five alleged fake collectors for firemen's convention were arrested in Winnipeg on charge of obtaining money under false pretences.

Thirty years ago wild ducks were selling on the Winnipeg market, going to prove the theory that the climate is growing warmer.

The Barrier

By

Rex Beach

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

Lee was helped back to his stand and called for order, but the crowd poked fun at him and began moving about restlessly till some one shouted a motion to adjourn and there arose a chorus of seconders.

As Poleon and Gale walked home the Frenchman said, "Dat was nervy t'ing to do."

The trader made no answer, and the other continued, "Stark is goin' for kill 'im sure."

"It's a cinch," agreed Gale, "unless somebody gets Stark first."

When they were come to his door the trader paused and, looking back over the glowing tents and up at the star sprinkled heavens, remarked, as if concluding some train of thought, "If that boy has got the nerve to take a nigger thief out of a miners' meeting and hold him against this whole town he wouldn't hesitate much at taking a white man, would he?"

"Waal," hesitated the other, "mebbe dat would depen' on de crime."

"Suppose it was—murder?"

"Ha! We ain' got no men lak dat in Flambeau."

They said good night, and the old man entered his house to find Alluna waiting for him.

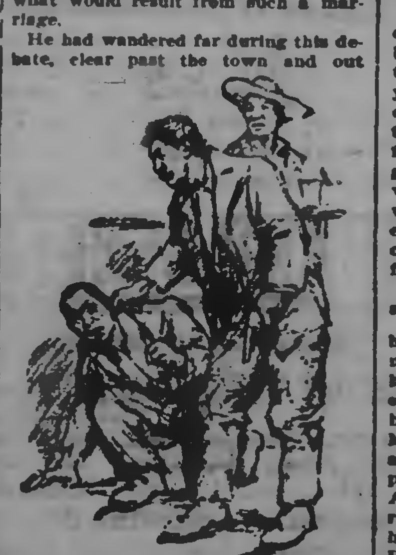
* * * * * * *

Burrell took his prisoner to the barracks, where he placed him under guard, giving instructions to hold him at any cost, not knowing what wild and reckless humor the new citizens of Flambeau might develop during the night, for it is men who have always lived with the halter of the law tight upon their necks who run wildest when it is removed.

After he had taken every precaution he went out into the night again and fought with himself as he had fought all that day and all the night before—in fact, ever since old Thomas had come to him after leaving Necia and had so cunningly shaped his talk that Burrell never suspected his object until he perceived his position in such a clear light that the young man looked back upon his work with startled eyes. The corporal had spoken garrulously of his officer's family, of their pride and of their love for his profession; had dwelt enthusiastically upon the lieutenant's future and the length he was sure to go and finally drifted into the same story he had told Necia. Burrell at last sensed the meaning of the crafty old soldier's strategy and dismissed him, but not before his work had been accomplished.

When Burrell drove his reason with firm hands he saw but one course to follow, but when his mind went slack for a moment the old desire to have her returned more strongly than ever, and he heard voices arguing, pleading, persuading. She was the equal of any woman in the world, they said, in mind, in purity and in innocence. He hated himself for hesitating, he railed at his own indecision, and then when he had justified his love and persuaded himself that he was right in seeking this union there would rise again the picture of his people, their chagrin and what would result from such a marriage.

He had wandered far during this debate, clear past the town and out through the Indian village, but now that he believed he had come to an understanding with himself he turned back toward his quarters. He knew it would be hard to give her up, but he had irrevocably decided, and his path began to unfold itself so clear and straight that he marveled how he could have failed to see it. He was glad he had conquered, although the pain was still sharp. He felt a better man for it, and, wrapped in this complacent optimism, he passed close by the front of the trader's store, where Necia had crept to be alone with her misery.



"Let's have a look at you," he panted.

Burrell had almost passed her when he was startled by the sound of his name breathed softly; then, to his amazement, he saw her come forth like a spirit into the silver sheen.

"Necia," he cried, "what are you doing here at this hour?" She looked up at him sadly. He saw that her cheeks were wet, and something inside him snapped and broke. Without a word he took her in his arms, meeting her lips in a long kiss, while she, trembling with the joy of his strong embrace, drew closer and closer and rested her body wearily against his.

"Little girl, little girl!" he whispered over and over, his tone conveying every shade of sympathy, love and understanding she had craved. He knew what had made her sad, and she knew that he knew. There was no need for words. The anguish of this long day had whetted the edge of their desire, and they were too deeply, too utterly lost in the ecstasy of meeting to care for speech.

"Your lips cling so that I can't get free," sighed the girl at last.

"You never shall," he whispered. But when she smiled up at him piteously, her eyes swimming, and said, "I must," he wrenched himself away and let her go.

CHAPTER XI.

WHERE THE PATH LED.

AND now began a new era for Flambeau—an era of industry such as the frontier town had never known. The woods behind rang with the resounding discords of axes and saws and crashing timber, and new cabins appeared on every hand, rising in a day.

A dozen tents were pitched on Lee's discovery claim, for the owner had been besieged by men who clamored to lease a part of his ground, and, yielding finally, he had allotted to each of them a hundred feet. Forthwith they set about opening their portions, for the ground was shallow and the gold so near the surface that winter would interfere with its extraction, wherefore they made haste. The owner overmaw them all, complacent in the certainty of a steady royalty accruing from the working of his allotments.

Burrell sought Necia at an early day and, in presence of her father, told her that he had been approached by men who wished to lease the claims he held for her. It would prove an inexpensive way to develop her holdings, he said, and she would run no risks. Moreover, it would be rapid and insure a quick return, for a lease so near to proved territory was in great demand. After some discussion this was arranged, and Meade as trustee allotted her ground in tracts, as Lee had done. Poleon followed suit, but the trader chose to prospect his own claims and to that end called in a train of stiff backed Indian packers, moved a substantial outfit to the creek and thereafter spent much of his time in the hills, leaving the store to Doret. He seemed anxious to get away from the camp and hide himself in the woods.

GENERAL BOOTH TELLS STORY OF ORIGIN AND RISE OF S. ARMY

Churches Failed to Welcome His Converts—No Desire to Become a Sect—Resolved to Become an Army.

Not every denomination is fortunate enough to have the story of its beginning told in the words of its founder. Gen. William Booth tells the story of the Salvation Army's beginning in the War Cry, April 10th. Unlike some denominational bodies, it was not begun by a schism, and the problem before its early leaders was to keep it from becoming just like other little religious sects, an additional church where there are already too many. That is why it became an "army," and that is why the Rev. Mr. Booth is a "general." The General says that when he began his irregular warfare in Whitechapel in 1865, he thought he could safely send his converts to join with the existing churches in the locality. But they were not warmly received, and he found they were in danger of lapsing for sheer want of comradeship and oversight, so he resolved to draw them into small societies after the best model that he then knew. He goes on with the story:

"Later on experience showed me—perhaps I ought to say convinced me—that in these converts or 'members,' as we gradually came to call them, I had a most attractive agency, and a most potent influence for reaching men and women in like conditions to those under which they themselves had been living. I found that ordinary workingmen in their corduroys and bowler hats could command attention from their own class which was refused point-blank to me with my theological terms and superior knowledge. I found that the slaves of intemperance were accessible to the influence and testimony of little bands of reformed drunkards, and that their message was of hope when mine was only too often one of condemnation. I found that the wild and unruly East-enders, whose highest idea of happiness was too often enshrined in a skittle-alley, or a boxing booth or a 'penny-gaff,' could be made to feel that there was, after all, 'something in religion' when they found their old acquaintances living clean and yet happy and prosperous lives under its influence.

"I soon became convinced, therefore, that the best way to reach with the Gospel of Christ the large classes of the population lying entirely outside the influence of the churches was by means of those classes themselves. Therein lay what may be called the germ of the Salvation Army. From that point everything else, or nearly everything else, in our peculiar propaganda, has proceeded.

"But I quickly found that such work as was possible could be best done by wise combination. Combination involved organization, and organization involved government, and government involved leadership. As to the kind of government that would prove most likely to attain the ends I had in view, I was at first very undecided. It was natural that this should be so. And yet this very indecision resulted in our learning by experience many lessons which subsequently proved of the highest value.

"Influenced by criticisms, and guided, as I believed, by the good hand of God, I made several experiments. I began with a form of government which was purely paternal. Everything proceeded from myself or my immediate assistants. Great and small, principle and detail, all that concerned the inception, control, and management of the work, was referred to me. I soon found that to be an impossible arrangement for myself, and one unsuited to the people with whom I had to deal.

"I then adopted a more commonplace plan. I called into cooperation with me certain selected—in point of fact they were elected—persons representing the various stations or societies which had up to that time been established, and with the missionaries or evangelists who were already employed in the direction of the work, formed them into a conference with the committees and sub-committees usually found in association with that type of governing body.

"But this plan also failed. After a few years spent chiefly in debating abstract questions and passing resolutions which ceased to be of any practical interest the moment they appeared on the minute books, a few of my most trusted lieutenants came to me and in effect said.

"This method of work will never shake the kingdom of the devil. We are only growing daily more and more like the societies around us. We are losing much that is best, and all that is distinctive in our work. We do not wish to become another little sect."

"Government by talk" had been tried and was found wanting, he says. Without at all intending it, they reorganized themselves on semi-military lines and shortly afterward took the name of the "Salvation Army." The work at once made great strides, and came forthwith with a wider public.

The General continues;

"I am very far from underestimating the value of what had already been accomplished. In fact, all, or nearly all, that has since proved of such effect and has seemed so powerful in striking the imagination of multitudes of the people, had its inception before this change took place; but from the moment of our adopting in our organization the simple methods of responsible and individual command and personal obedience, our whole campaign partook of a new character; and, in place of the hesitation and almost total want of progress which had marked the conference period, every department of the work leapt forward.

"And here I ought to mention one of the most powerful agencies for guiding and maintaining both the spirit and manner of our operations. The moment the work assumed anything like considerable proportions, it became difficult, and soon impossible for me to express my wishes and give my instructions to my various helpers by word of mouth. For a time, I had, therefore, to issue these instructions in the form of correspondence; but this, also, I soon found to be a task beyond my ability; and yet if unity and harmony were to be preserved among those who had gathered around me, and if they were to be helped in conserving the result which God had enabled them to achieve, it was evident that they must know my wishes. I was, therefore, compelled to print such special directions as I had formerly issued in other forms. This method has been continued up to the present and indeed, has been extended by reason of the advances of the work in a degree I could never have anticipated. It is now just twenty one years since I issued a volume of 'Orders and Regulations for Field Officers of the Salvation Army' and not only has that volume been revised half a dozen or more times since then, but other volumes dealing with the work of other classes of officers engaged both in our evangelistic and our social operations, in this country and in other lands, have been issued."

ELIJAH BROWN

Syracuse Courier

Elijah Brown, the cobbler, was enamored of the muse,
And all his time was given up to stanzas and to shoes.
He scorned to live a tuneless life, ingloriously mute,
And nightly laid his last aside to labor at his lute:
For he had registered an oath that lyrical renown
Should trumpet to the universe the worthy name of Brown.
And, though his own weak pinions failed to reach the heights of song,
His genius hatched a brilliant scheme to help his oath along;
And all his little youngsters as they numerously came,
He christened after poets in the pantheon of fame,
That their poetic prestige might impress them and inspire
A noble emulation to adopt the warbling lyre.
And Virgil Brown and Dante Brown and Tasso Brown appeared,
And Milton Brown and Bryon Brown and Shakespeare Brown, were reared
Longfellow Brown and Schiller Brown arrived at man's estate,
And Wordsworth Brown and Goldsmith Brown filled up the family slate,
And he believed his gifted boys predestined to renown,
In time would roll the boulder from the buried name of Brown.
But still the epic is unsung and still that worthy name
Is missing from the pedestals upon the hills of fame;
For Dante Brown's a peddlar in the vegetable line,
And Bryon Brown is pitching for the Tuscarora nine;
Longfellow Brown, the lightweight is a pugilist of note
And Goldsmith Brown's a deck-hand on a Jersey ferry-boat;
In Wordsworth Brown Manhattan has an estimable cop,
And Schiller Brown's an artist in a Brooklyn barber-shop;
A roving tar is Virgil Brown upon the bounding seas,
And Tasso Brown is usefully engaged in making cheese.
The cobbler's bench is Milton Brown's and there he pegs away,
And Shakespeare Brown makes cocktails in a Cripple Creek cafe.

WHAT BEAUTIFUL HAIR!

How often do we hear that exclamation of a certain woman's hair or a certain man's hair.

A prominent scientist and hair specialist emphatically states and has proven that any man or woman can have luxuriant, lustrous hair, by using a famous prescription called Parisian Sage.

Parisian Sage is now made and sold in Canada. Wm Madill, the druggist is the agent in Peterborough and the readers of the Review can buy from him for only 50 cents a large bottle.

Wm Madill knows that Parisian Sage will beautify the hair, cure dandruff and stop falling hair, and for that reason he sells it under a guarantee to cure or money back.

If you cannot obtain Parisian Sage where you live, you can get a bottle for 50 cents from Giroux Mfg Co., Fort Erie, Ont, express charges prepaid.

House Like Steamship Bridge.

An extraordinary-looking dwelling is to be seen at Algarta, near Bilbao, in the north of Spain, and is called "Casa Barco," or "house boat," being built to resemble a steamship's bridge. It was probably erected by a retired sea captain who felt like a fish out of water until he had provided for himself the same environment to which he had been used during his active career at sea. One can imagine the old gentleman taking his evening walk to and fro along the lofty bridge, scanning the surrounding country with a sailor's eye and half inclined now and then to ring for "more speed" or to send an order down the tube to the steersman.—Wide World Magazine.

Her Inference.

"Now, I suppose," remarked Mrs. Snaggs, "that the surgeons of the army are attached to the medical corps."

"Your supposition does you great credit," replied Mr. Snaggs sarcastically. "It's a wonder you didn't imagine that doctors joined the army for the purpose of building bridges or going up in a balloon. Where should army surgeons be except in the medical corps?"

"Well, I thought that they might possibly belong to the lancers."—London Mail.

Overcoats For Laborers.

Fifteen aged farm laborers at Henham, Essex, England, were recently the recipients of a new overcoat each. Many years ago an Essex agriculturist named Henry Smith left a farm at Tolleshunt, the rent of which was to be applied each year in providing overcoats for aged and respectable farm laborers in several parishes which he named.

PLANS ACCEPTED FOR NEW LIBRARY

Property Committee Will Recommend That Plans of Messrs. Belcher and Blackwell Be Accepted—Several Other Matters Considered.

The Property Committee at a meeting yesterday afternoon decided to accept plans of Messrs. Belcher & Blackwell for the new public library and specifications will be prepared at once. The committee also took up several other matters.

Those present were Ald. Bradburn, chairman; Aldermen Morgan, Duncan, Hicks and McIntyre.

A letter was read from the city solicitor, regarding the authority of the Council, to contribute money for the purpose of a public library.

Mr. Hall wrote that the Council may contribute money for providing a site for a library board, or upon a petition being received from the Mechanics Institute, the Council may appoint a board of management, which board will have full control of the management of the public library. The library, according to the act, must be a free institute. Under these conditions the Council may pass a bylaw, without the assent of the ratepayers for the purchase of a site, and to raise money to build a free public library and may also grant from year to year a sum sufficient to maintain its providing that sum does not exceed one half mill.

PUBLIC LIBRARY PLANS.

The next question taken up was that of the plans for the new public library. The majority of the committee favored those of Messrs. Belcher & Blackwell and the following resolution was passed;

Moved by Ald. Hicks and McIntyre, that this committee recommend that Messrs Belcher and Blackwell be asked to furnish detailed plans and specifications for a public library building and that their plans for the building be accepted, subject to the details being satisfactory to this committee and subject to the provisions that the building can be erected complete at a cost not exceeding $25,000.—Carried.

It was the intention to take up another matter of business of great importance to the city, but owing to the absence of interested parties the publication of the same is withheld for a few days.

REFUSE GROUNDS.

The committee considered the matter of a refuse grounds for the city. The person who now handles that work is yearly increasing his price, and it is thought he asks too much for this year. An offer was received from Mr. Stevens to sell four acres of land in North Monaghan for $800. The committee drove out and inspected this property. There is a strong feeling in favor of purchasing it, as it was used for only two years the city would save its price. The matter was left however, in the hands of the chairman.

An offer was received from Mr. Anthony Taylor to pay $375 for the city lot on Aylmer Street, between Lake and Romaine streets.

On motion the offer was accepted.

NEW ROOF.

A letter was read from Messrs. Maitland and Moore offering to put a five ply felt and gravel roof on the city building on the north side of Simcoe street for $147 or a four ply felt and gravel roof for $125, or to repair coat and gravel it for $56.

On motion it was decided to accept the offer to put a new four ply felt and gravel roof at the price quoted. They to give a ten year guarantee.—Carried.

A letter was received from John McParry, asking permission to erect a boat house at the foot of Sherbrooke street. The matter was laid over.

TWO MEN FINED $25 EACH; GAVE LIQUOR TO "BLACKLISTER"

Lindsay, April 20—It is a serious matter these days for a man to supply liquor to another man who is on the Indian list. Two men were fined $25 apiece in police court this morning for this offence and Magistrate Jackson promised to deal more harshly with the next offender.

The law is so arranged now that it is an easy matter to find out the names of those who supply the "wet goods" to men on the interdicted list. When the prohibited man is caught in an inebriate condition he can be brought before the Magistrate and forced to divulge the names of those who gave him the liquor or to go to jail for three months. There are few men so generous that they will endure a three months' jail diet to screen another, even though the other many may have been kind enough to secure the liquor for them. The maximum fine for supplying liquor to prohibited men is $50 and the minimum fine is $25.

Mr. G. H. Hopkins appeared for the prosecution this morning and declared that every man in Lindsay who in future supplied drink to a man on the Indian list would be brought before the Magistrate and he would insist on the maximum fine. In his opinion this offence was the worst in the liquor law. When a man is prohibited from getting drink in an effort to make a decent citizen out of him it is regrettable that another should secure liquor for him.

The total fine in each case including costs was $27.95.

Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Jordan pleaded for the accused. They each pleaded guilty.

THREE DEPUTATIONS WERE HEARD BY THE COUNCIL

Gun Club Cannot Shoot at Riverside Park—Horticultural Society Will Be Given Street Scrapings—Wants a Drain Filled

Several deputations were heard at a short session of the City Council in committee of the whole last night.

Mr. Andy Webb was present and addressed the committee in reference to the ditch in front of the house on Sherbrooke street. During the past few years there have been changes made in the drain and now there is no necessity for it. He asked that the Council have the drain filled in. There is a stretch of about 500 feet and it will require about 350 yards of earth. He asked that the street scrapings be drawn there and make a good job of it. It would be a great improvement to all the property along that part of the street.

Ald. Bradburn moved that the matter be referred to the City Engineer to report on to the Mayor and Chairman of the Board of Works, and that they have authority to act. Ald. Buller seconded the motion and it carried.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Messrs. Harry Beal and Frank Wise on behalf of the Horticultural Society asked the Council to assist them in fixing up the upper part of Victoria Park by giving them street scrapings. It is the intention to start right away to level up and terrace the hill. The society propose to close up only one half of the hill this year and fix it up and then next year fix up the other half. They propose to put the waterworks all through the upper part of the park, and also to put in a sewer from the fountain.

Ald. Buller moved that the society be given some of the road scrapings about 100 loads. This was seconded by Ald. Morrow and carried.

THE GUN CLUB.

Representatives of the Gun Club were present and asked the committee if the Gun Club had permission to shoot at the athletic grounds on Thursday afternoon.

The city solicitor stated that the Council would be liable for any accident which occurred by the discharge of fire arms. The only thing that could be done was to amend the bylaws.

On motion the Gun Club will not be allowed to shoot at Riverside Park.

ICE IS SOLID FROM SHORE TO SHORE AT CLEAR LAKE

Mr. Felix Brownscombe returned from the lakes last evening after spending a few days at his cottage near Burleigh. He reports a large of the lakes as being still covered with ice. In fact from Juniper Island to Mount Julian, to Boschink and to McCrackens looks like midwinter, while Clear Lake is solid from shore to shore. At the present time the water is more than a foot lower than it was a year ago, but for some days it has been rising one inch each day, so that if we have much rain it may yet reach last year's high mark. The new wharf, which the Government built, late last fall at the Juniper Island store is now covered with about a foot of water. Mr. Brownscombe was accompanied by his son Minto, and Mr. Burell.

THE SCHOOLBOOKS

Practical legislation for the immediate and direct benefit of the people of Ontario in their daily lives is what is wanted from both the Ontario Government and the Dominion Government. The Ontario Government gave us the power policy, which is the greatest asset and source of low-priced energy we have. Education is of even greater importance to us, and now in the face of the long-continued senseless scoffs and bickerings of the Globe and its rural echoes, we have a reduction in the price of school books all the way from $1.15, the Ross Government price, down to 39 1-2 cents net. No book rings here. No excuses, no humbug, but "straight goods." It was a little long in coming because the new books are newly written and contain good reading material and more of it. This good work is of inestimable benefit, and will long be remembered as legislation turned to the popular advantage. The contrast with Alberta and Saskatchewan, which have just renewed their school books, is even more striking. The price for the set is three times that of ours, in the western provinces. Under other conditions the money involved in this reduction would go to railways as bonuses.

REV. DR. GEGGIE DELIGHTED A LARGE AUDIENCE

Lecture at St. Paul's Church on "The Rose, Shamrock and Thistle" Was a Decided Treat

Rev. Dr. Geggie's lecture on "The Rose, Shamrock and Thistle" was a decided treat to a large audience at St. Paul's church last night. It was given in the Sunday school room, which was crowded, and everyone present was delighted with the address, and the vocal numbers which were interspersed.

It was not an ordinary lecture. At appropriate points during the address Mr. Hazeldine, of Toronto, who possesses a beautiful tenor voice, gave vocal numbers that fitted in nicely with the speaker's remarks and added greatly to the enjoyment of the audience. Mr. Hazeldine sang two English, two Irish and two Scotch songs, and at the close of the lecture rendered "The Better Land," in a most pleasing manner. The English songs were "Good Company" and "The Death of Nelson," the Irish numbers were "The Dear Little Shamrock" and "Killarney," while the Scotch songs were "Scotland Yet" and "Mary."

Dr. Geggie was introduced to the audience by Sheriff Hall in a few appropriate remarks. Dr. Geggie is a lecturer of great ability and had the attention of his auditors all the time. Passing from the grave to the gay, he brings smiles where tears had almost lingered. He told of the characteristics of the English, Irish and Scottish national character, and illustrated many points by anecdotes that kept the audience in laughter. A lot of good advice and interesting information was conveyed in the eloquent address, which was given in a pleasing "brogue" that would at once distinguish the speaker as coming from the north of Tweed.

The lecture was under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Paul's church, and the committee in charge deserve much credit for bringing Dr. Geggie and Mr. Hazeldine to Peterborough.

The accompaniments for Mr. Hazeldine's songs were played by Mr. Crane.

Miss Grant and Miss Mason, however, informed the customs agents that the baggage was not their property and that they were unable to throw any light upon the smuggling plot which now is being investigated by the customs officers in New York city. It was upon this assurance that the three trunks held at the New York customs house were opened and their contents confiscated.

EL REY SISTERS VERY POPULAR

Their Splendid Work Winning Them Approval of Audiences at Roller Rink

The El Rey sisters the clever juvenile specialty artists late with Anna Held in her New York run of "The Parisian Model" are creating a most favorable impression at the roller rink where they are captivating the audiences by their brilliant work.

The repertoire of trick and fancy roller skating includes a wide variety of different movements including cake walks, waltzing, barn dancing etc. etc.

The El Rey sisters appear here for the whole week and will also give a performance on Saturday afternoon. A section of the 57th regimental band will be present on each occasion.

WANT DEAD DOG TAKEN AWAY

The residents of Aylmer street between Rink and Wolfe, are complaining about a dead dog that has been lying on the street for the last couple of days. They say they have notified the civic authorities to take it away, but they have not done so.

FORTY DOLLARS MORE FOR DR. GRENFELL

The Murray street Baptist church or some of the members thereof felt evidently that eighty dollars was too poor a sum total for Dr Grenfell to take away with him in aid of his mission to the fishermen of the Labrador coast. They have added more than forty dollars to this sum however, not by concerted congregational movement but individually. Assuredly Dr. Grenfell's work is deserving of more than eighty dollars from Peterborough.

IS A SUPERIOR STOCK COMPANY

A Capable Company and Clever Vaudeville Performers—To-night's Attraction

Owen Davis' western melodram, "The King and Queen of Gamblers" was given an excellent presentation by the Fenber Stock Company at the Grand last night. For a popular-priced show the company is an unusually strong one, and will no doubt furnish splendid bills for the remainder of the week. Their performances last night and on Monday were greatly appreciated by the audiences.

The specialty artists are much superior to the average repertoire company's entertainers. Marie McNeill, the cornet soloist, surprised the audience by her brilliant playing, and Chas. Hammond does some skilful and interesting hoop rolling. The other specialty people are also clever.

To-night the play that has caused such a stir in American dramatic circles, "The Millionaire's Revenge," will be presented.

No shacks will be allowed in Oak Bay, Councillors will see to it.

ADDRESS WAS INTERESTING

Rev. Dr. Marsh Gave Lecture Before the Astronomical Society

Although the attendance was only fairly large, the meeting of the Peterborough Royal Astronomical Society last evening in the Collegiate Institute was none the least interesting. Rev. Dr. Marsh, the president, gave a most instructive talk on the "Phenomena of the Solar Photosphere." It was illustrated by a number of slides and certainly must have been exceptionally profitable to those interested in the study of astronomy.

The chairman of the evening was Mr. T. A. S. Hay. He said that he was sure everyone was delighted to see Rev. Dr. Marsh again at their meetings, after his serious illness. The doctor has been much missed by the society during the winter. The chairman regretted that there were not more present, but the Astronomical Society had been unfortunate in always striking an evening for their meetings when there were several counter attractions.

Dr. Marsh in beginning his lecture said that he appreciated very much the kind words of the chairman. He was deeply interested in the society and was glad to be able to be back again. Dr. Marsh compared his observation on his own astronomical transit with the time, Mr. Fiske had received from Montreal and there was no variance.

Speaking of the Solar Photosphere, Dr. Marsh said that there were several methods of observing through the telescope. One of these was by having what is called a solar cap, that is to say a cap containing a piece of glass and the extreme light of the sun was blocked out. Then there was the method of looking through what was known as a Herschel prism. The third means was by the Polarising eye piece. This was a combination of prisms which allowed one to observe it without any light whatever. A fourth way was the reflecting or projecting method. Telescopes were now made suitable for photography and a splendid means of examining the sun was by taking photographs of it. During an eclipse when only a portion of it was visible, was a good opportunity to observe it closely.

When the sun was observed by any of the above methods excepting the last one, the Photosphere was only seen. Slides showing the Photosphere were thrown on the canvas. The chromosphere and prominences on the sun were also pointed out. While all the sun was covered with gases, only a portion of them was visible. The sun in its entirety was shown, the speaker dealing instructively with the various limbs, as he termed them. The corona, or crown of the sun was only visible at an eclipse. Looking at the photosphere, towards the outer limbs, it was darker and the faculae of torchlights as they were sometimes called, came out more prominently. A slide illustrating the fire on the sun was shown. Sometimes these fires were immense bodies, projecting thousands of miles into space from the edge of the sun.

A great many people wondered what the aurora borealis was. The aurora was caused from the condition of the sun. The earth and the sun were great magnetic powers, one affecting the other. When there were great solar disturbances, the compass needle was of little use. In 1895 when there was a large sun spot on the sun, the telegraph system was disconnected for hours between Chicago and New York. The magnetism of the sun coming in contact with the terrestrial magnetism caused the aurora.

Sometimes the sun appeared very clear. Then in the course of a few days dark spots came on it. Some astronomers have said that sun spots were caused by foreign matter being attracted by the sun. But if such was the case they would fall on the sun in an instant. Instead they have been seen to develop from little dots to immense masses.

It was thought that sun spots were vent holes from where the gas that was not on fire was shooting forth.

Mr. Hay expressed the thanks of the society to Dr. Marsh for the excellent lecture he had given them.

NO TRUTH IN THE STATEMENT

That Royal Theatre Was About to Change Hands

Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The statement which appears in the Times this morning that the Royal Theatre had changed hands is not true. I have no intention of disposing of the Royal because it is paying too good a revenue to part with it and I know of no "deal" with any person or persons for its purchase. I am the sole and only proprietor of the Royal and no one else has any interest in it—and I have no desire to part with it.

Yours truly,
M. PAPPAS

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE INTERMEDIATE BASEBALL LEAGUE LAST NIGHT

Mr. J. T. C. Lang Was Re-elected President—Five Teams Will Be Represented and Prospects Are Bright for a Successful Season

The meeting of the Intermediate baseball league held in the YMCA, last night was well attended and prospects are bright for a successful year. Five teams were represented at the meeting. They were the Lakeviews, West Ends, Lillies, East City and TAS, and all were optimistic over their prospects for this year. The president, Mr J C Lang, was in the chair. A large amount of business was transacted.

Mr. Harry Theobald read the secretary's report for last year which showed that all the monies taken in by the league had been accounted for. Mr. Lang read his report which was as follows,

Peterborough, April 20th.

In presenting my annual report to the officers of the Peterborough Intermediate City Baseball League, I consider that out of respect for the Strathcona Baseball Club, I should first congratulate them on their winning the championship last season after a commendable showing in all their games. Glancing back over the year on the whole it was satisfactory. The games were well contested and almost without exception the teams were well balanced.

The schedule was not too long and was concluded just about the time the teams were beginning to tire of the game. Owing to wet weather it was delayed in starting but otherwise there was nothing to complain about. The Wellingtons deserved credit for the plucky manner in which they played out their games. The other teams fought hard and the result of the games and the season's championship was not assured until the Strathconas and Lakeviews played off on the Riverside park when there were only very few games to play.

The only regret I have in looking over all that was done was that the league should have made it possible for any team to take on men after the season had become well advanced. This led to the only difficulty of the year. I pointed out at the meeting that I was not in favor of this measure but as the majority of officers favored it I did not endeavor to oppose it. In conclusion I wish to thank the officers of the league and the managers of the teams for the assistance they have rendered and to express the hope that the league will have a splendid season this summer.

JAS. T. C. LANG,
President 1908

The election of officers for the season was then proceeded with and are as follows.—

Patrons and Patronesses —Mayor and Mrs Rush, Mr and Mrs Jas Kendrey, Mr and Mrs R R Hall, Mr and Mrs A H Stratton and Mr and Mrs J J Howden.

Pres—Mr J H Lang.
Vice-pres—Mr J Titterson.
Secretary—Mr Jas Clarke.

Different parts of the constitution were discussed at considerable length and changed.

This year the officers will settle all disputes.

No permits will be granted to any team.

Players who have participated in the Midland League will not be allowed to play in the intermediate series.

Players will not be allowed to play in both the Senior and Intermediate leagues.

Eighteen certificates will be given each team.

There will be no specified time for any team to have all their players signed as long as same players are residents of the city.

All teams wishing to enter the league must be represented at the next meeting which will be held Tuesday night April 27th and must pay their entrance fee of $2.00. No team will be allowed to enter the league after this date.

Mr A H Stratton was present at the meeting and stated that if the league uses the Spalding ball, a cup or a shield will be donated.

This proposition will be considered at the next meeting.

A vote of thanks was ordered to be conveyed to the YMCA. for the use of the room during last season.

YOUNG FRENCH CANADIAN WINS THE BOSTON MARATHON

Boston, April 20— Striding gallantly along Exeter street with the cheers of thousands ringing in his ears, Henri Renaud, a nineteen year old French-Canadian youth of Nashua, NH, won the thirteenth annual B A A Marathon race yesterday afternoon. He finished in almost perfect condition. His time was 2 hours, 53 minutes, 36 4-5 seconds.

The honor of winning was about the only one that the squad of thirty New York runners competing did not get, for they finished second, third, fourth, fifth and eighth thus winning more than half of the trophies at stake. Harry Jensen, of the Pastime AC, finished second a good half mile in the rear of the stout hearted French-Canadian boy and Pat Grant was third.

MELLOR WAS FIFTH

Jim Crowley the sturdy distance runner of the Irish American AA. who was strongly fancied as the winner previous to the race, finished fourth. The veteran of them all little Sammy Mellor of Yonkers winner of the same race in 1902, romped in fifth. After Mellor came the first Boston lad, Joseph P. McHugh, of South Boston, and after him was Eddie Ryder, of the Oakdale AA. of Jamaica Point, Boston, Next and the last man to receive one of the handsome cups, was Carl Schlobohm, of Yonkers.

HEAT WAS FIERCE

The race of yesterday will take its place in the annals of the Boston A. A. races as the most severe strain that well trained athletes were ever subjected to and the winner's time, was the slowest with two exceptions of any of the thirteen annual runs. The heat was intense. Before the first mile had been covered the heat became scorching. Even the most seasoned and perfectly trained athletes began to show the effects soon after the start and the killing pace set by Louis M Fine, of the Providence AC., Lewis Tewanima, of the Carlisle Indian School and George McInerney of Philadelphia, early sapped the vitality and strength from the far famed winners of other long distance events.

SET FAST PACE.

The terrific pace set by Fine and Tewanima also had its effect upon themselves, and the Providence man finally brought up in the Newton Hospital suffering from sunstroke. Jimmy Lee of Yonkers, ran himself completely out and A. Roy Whelton, of Lawrence, succumbed after covering three-quarters of the course. Bob Fowler, the Cambridge man whom many fancied as a probable winner, was one of the most badly used up men to finish.

WINNER IS A WEAVER

Young Renaud, the winner, toils at a loom in a big woollen mill at Manchester

It was not without an effort that Jensen beat out Grant for the place. It was a neck and neck struggle between the pair and Jensen had just enough left to nose his fellow townsman out by a few yards. B J Nelson, the English Marathoner of the South London Harriers ran a good race and finished sixteenth.

It is estimated that 300,000 saw the race, 200,000 of them along the last few miles or at the finish.

CINDER PATH TO BE LAID

Will be Completed at Riverside Park Early in June—Howden and Eastwood Trophy Games

A cinder path will be put down at Riverside Park within the next few weeks. It will be a little short of a quarter of a mile this year, but it is the intention to lengthen it to a quarter mile for next season. The track will be a great convenience to participants in and lovers of track athletics, and will add considerably to the popularity of Riverside Park as an athletic field.

The track will be ready early in June, and the Howden and Eastwood trophy games will be held the first Saturday after the track is completed.

SWEDE SEEMED TO BE TIRED

Simpson's Fast Early Running—What New York Papers Say

New York American;—Svanberg seldom varied his stride and speed during these six miles, but on the last lap of the twenty-fourth mile he slowed down to a walk. His manager and handler, Ernie Hjertberg, was instantly at his side, urging him on, but to no avail. Hjertberg then instructed the band to play a Swedish tune, and Svanberg, hearing his national anthem, started at a rapid gait. He kept this up for a lap when a again stopped to a walk. Hjertberg then sent one of Svanberg's handlers to pace him for a lap or two and at the same time encourage him to stick it out. On nearly every lap after that Svanberg walked for ten or fifteen yards, and while so doing fell behind the record. His time time for the twenty-five miles was 2 hours 33 minutes 53-5 seconds, as against St. Yves' time of 2 hours 32 minutes 11 2-5 seconds.

New York Herald;—Simpson made all the early running, and looked as though he might furnish a sensational duel with Svanberg. For more than eight miles and a half the copper-hued runner raced along in the lead, maintaining a pace that would have been a record-breaker if continued to the end. The Swede, though, was never distressed by the speedy footing, and showed that he was always master of the situation as soon as he cared to be.

Shortly after the eight and a half mile mark had been passed the Swede was no longer content to trail along behind the swarthy Indian, and he let out a link of speed that gave him a lead of 100 yards in less than two laps of the quarter-mile circuit. The Indian made little or no attempt to catch up with the Swede, and apparently lacked the speed to do so had he willed.

Simpson looked anything but tired when he quit. His manager afterward stated that the cold weather which he encountered last week in his race against Appleby in Canada had affected his knees. Others thought that the frigidity had travelled further down in his limbs and settled nearer to the spikes in his shoes. When the Ojibway farmer quit, the Stockholm lacquerer was two and a half laps, or five-eighths of a mile ahead of him.

SPORTING TALK

Two hundred thousand watched the finish of the Boston Marathon yesterday, which was won by Henri Renaud, a nineteen-year-old youth. The time for the distance was 2.53.36 4-5. Several of the runners did the fadeaway act, and were taken to the hospital.

Jim Jeffries is still of the opinion that he can get into condition again, and is out with some loud talk about what he is going to do in a year's time.

The C.A.A.U. refuse to sanction an amateur Marathon race at Scarboro Park, Toronto, May 22nd.

Winters, the hard luck pitcher of the Detroit American League team, has been secured by the Montreal Club. Manager Casey will have some some excuse to offer now if his team does not win this season.

Fred Hickey made a hit in the game with Harrisburg when Toronto won by 9—3. The fielder probably should have been charged with an error.

Tom Flanagan says that Alfie Shrubb has the fifteen-mile race with St. Yves already won. Who gave him the tip?

When Stanley Ketchel makes his attempt to wrest the laurels of the prize-ring from the colored race at Colma, Cal., next October, his mother, Mrs. Kerop Arzooman, will be on hand to see the battle.

FIVE-MILE "SEALED" HANDICAP RACE TO BE HELD VICTORIA DAY

Under Auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Track and Field Club—Will be Somewhat of a Novelty Here—Should Be Many Entries

A five-mile "sealed" handicap, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Track and Field Club will be one of the features of the 24th of May in Peterborough. The race will be somewhat of a novelty here, as it will be the first time for a sealed handicap to be pulled off in Peterborough. The entries must be in by Friday, May 21st. Then the handicappers will arrange the handicaps and place them in an envelope, which will be sealed and remain unopened until the race is over. The runners do not know what the handicaps are, and as a result much interest is added to the race.

The race will take place on the morning of the holiday, starting at 9.15 o'clock. The course will not be announced till two days before the race. The finish will be in front of the Y.M.C.A. All the runners start together, and there will be five prizes —medals for the first, second and third winners, a time prize for the winner who finishes first, and a novice prize.

The entry fee for members of the Y.M.C.A. will be twenty-five cents, and for those who are not members of the association fifty cents.

Sealed handicap races have become very popular in Toronto, being held frequently by the Central and West End Y.M.C.A.'s. Arrangements for the race were made at a meeting of the executive of the Track and Field Club held last night. It was also decided to hold semi-weekly runs, on Tuesday and Thursday nights, leaving the Y.M.C.A. at 8.30 o'clock. All interested are invited to turn out.

The membership fee in the club is twenty-five cents semi-annually for members of the Y.M.C.A.

Entries for the five-mile handicap race should be made to the secretary, Mr. Ernie Wilson.

TO MAKE STRONG EFFORT TO BRING THE PENMAN GAMES TO PETERBOROUGH

The Y.M.C.A. Track and Field Club will make a strong bid to bring the Penman championship games to Peterborough this summer. They were held in Hamilton last summer, and it is felt that Peterborough has a good chance of getting them this year. The trophy for the games was donated by Mr. John Penman, of Paris, Ont., and the competition is for representatives of Canadian Y.M.C.A.'s. The trophy is at present held by the West End Y.M.C.A., of Toronto.

It would be a big thing for Peterborough to secure the games, and a strong effort will be made to secure them.

THE LATEST CHAPTER IN THE HASSAN ABDALLAH ROMANCE

For a heavyweight wrestler in the fifth rate division Hassan Abdallah, the Turkish, Syrian and now Arabian champion, is getting more public notice than any other dark skinned or for that matter, white skinned, grappler that ever put on a nelson. Hassan with his picturesque attire and unusual appearance is stalking around the cities arousing the curiosity of the average man and the wonderment of the small boy. It must be nice for a cast-off like this dub mat artist to sit in hotel rotundas and tell the unsuspecting fans of his celebrated stories and how anxious he is to meet Frank Gotch. As a matter of fact, Hassan or Karakanoff, for that is his real name met Gotch at Sohmer park, Montreal some time ago and it would be a shame to tell what Gotch did to him. But read this from the Buffalo News:

"Hassan Abdallah, the champion, Arabian wrestler, will be seen every afternoon and evening this week at the Lafayette Theatre, where he will meet all comers agreeing to forfeit $50 to any man he fails to down in 15 minutes. After he closes his week's engagement here on Saturday night Hassan will leave for Chicago to arrange a match with Gotch. Although this will be his first appearance on the mat in Buffalo, he has defeated some of the best heavyweights in this country. He says that he has seen Gotch in action and while he does not like the toe hold, he has figured out a few new tricks that will offset his.

HARRY BURRIDGE LEAVES FOR EDMONTON ON SATURDAY

Harry Burridge, the popular local boy leaves on Saturday afternoon at 4.48 C.P.R. for Edmonton and will turn out with the aspirants for the position of catcher on the Edmonton nine. Burridge will have to beat out McGuire and Nye of St Marys for the place behind the bat and should make good without trouble, judging his form on the magnificent work he did in Youngstown, Ohio, last year where he was regarded as the find of the season and the equal of any catcher that ever figured in the league.

His contract calls for a larger salary than the one he received in Youngstown last year.

LACROSSE

At a meeting of the Lacrosse Club last evening it was decided to arrange a game for the 24th of May. In the meantime inducements will be offered Toronto Junction and Brantford for a game on that date. Practice will begin as soon as weather is favorable.

Peterborough will play intermediate this year, but at present they are having a little difficulty in securing grounds. Peterborough devotes some attention to baseball also, and there is a race on between the baseball and lacrosse magnates as to who will secure the grounds. Fred Dobbin is leading the van in lacrosse and has a fair chance of winning out.—Mail and Empire.

BELMONT CLUB'S POOL TOURNEY

The last games in the first round of the Belmont Club's pool tournament will be played tonight. The following members will play:

N. Taylor vs W. E. Thornton.
B. Brown vs R. A. McKee.
J. T. C. Lang vs M. Jamieson.
R. Deyell vs V. Tully.
R. Pollard vs A. O. Meyers.
G. C. Miller vs. F. Jameson.

BASEBALL

A meeting of the Junior Church Baseball League will be held next Monday evening in the Y.M.C.A. to organize for the season. Those teams which were represented in the league last year and wish to do so again this season are asked to send representatives.

ROYALTY ON VISITS.

King Travels With Much Less Ceremony Than the Kaiser.

A noteworthy feature of the recent visit of King Edward to Biarritz, and that of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Paris, was the complete absence of display during the royal trips. Both the prince and princess expressed a wish to be treated as ordinary tourists, and, that wish being respected, they were able to enjoy a quiet holiday trip to the French capital, without being called upon to respond to the ceremony which is usually accorded royal personages.

Their Royal Highnesses were simply accompanied by Lady Eva Dugdale, Hon. Derek Keppel, and about half a dozen servants. Likewise the King, during his trip to Biarritz, was quiet content to travel incognito as the Duke of Lancaster—a title, by the way, which His Majesty retained during his sojourn on the continent, and which was printed on his visiting cards—merely accompanied by an equerry and Sir James Reid (his physician-in-ordinary), with Gen. Sir Stanley Clarke and Major Ponsonby in attendance.

On the other hand, the German Emperor, when he moves abroad, maintains his royal dignity with as much pomp and show as possible, and his recent holiday trip to Corfu furnishes a striking contrast to the visit of King Edward to Biarritz.

The Kaiser traveled with an enormous retinue, including a Lord Chamberlain, two aides-de-camp, six officers of the Guard, two physicians, twelve body-servants, and a private secretary; while the Empress was attended by a Lord Chamberlain, two ladies-in-waiting, two equerries, and six maid-servants. Twenty-four cooks and maids went from Berlin to conduct the imperial kitchen, and even the kitchen utensils were sent on ahead. Two court carriages, six automobiles, two luggage automobiles, and ten chauffeurs were also included in the Emperor's entourage, not to mention a dozen pairs of horses and twenty grooms and coachmen.

In this respect the Kaiser resembles the Shah of Persia and the Sultan of Turkey, whose visits to foreign courts are not usually keenly anticipated by those whose duty it is to see that everyone connected with these foreign potentates is comfortably housed. The attendants and servants usually number about one hundred, and to suitably accommodate them all is no easy task.

The visit to England of Queen Alexandra's sister, the Dowager Empress of Russia, and the quiet, unconventional manner in which these royal ladies have spent the last few weeks, well illustrates the manner in which the Czar would like to travel and pay visits. But the Russians love display, and the Czar's advisers consider that there would be something seriously lacking in His Majesty's dignity did he not travel with as much dignity as possible.

His special train gives some idea of the display which is made. It is the most luxurious railway conveyance in the world. There are two dining-rooms, each with its own special kitchen, a library, saloons, bath, bed, and dressing rooms, all luxuriously fitted up. No fewer than thirty-two locksmiths, machinists, cleaners, and other mechanics accompany this royal caravan on all its journeys, under the command of a special engineer.

Why Elsie Was Sent to Bed.

While little Elsie's elder sister, May, was entertaining her latest acquisition, a most dignified and genteel young man, in the parlor Elsie was relegated to the dining-room to play with her doll.

This particular one, the possessor of a kid body and a bisque head, had been somewhat ailing of late, owing to the fact that its head was gradually becoming detached and its pivotal eyes refused to perform their functions of opening and closing. After considerable probing for the cause of the trouble Elsie made the discovery that there was something inside of it and finally succeeded in extracting a large roll of tightly curled hair. A moment later she burst into the parlor in a great state of excitement and shouted:

"Pity sakes! No wonder Dorothy was sick! Look what was in her stummick! She must have swallowed Sister May's rat!"

THE OLD TIME METHODS CONQUERED THIS FIRE; SERIOUS LOSS PREVENTED

Peterborough's up to date fire brigade did some pioneer service at a blaze in Ashburnham this morning in a barn at the rear of 193 Maria street. The barn is the property of Mr C. B. Adams.

The call was received at the fire hall from box 52 at 10.45 this morning. When the scene of the conflagration was reached it was found that the barn was too great a distance from any hydrant to permit hose attachment with a hydrant and the Chief formed the men into an old time corps of volunteer fire fighters. Water was carried from the canal in buckets and what chemicals were necessary were also used to put out the flames which made very little headway before they were under control and the damage will probably not exceed $10.

The firemen pitched the hay and straw from the barn into the road and the precaution was a wise one. There were some barns and houses nearby and if the flames had spread nothing could have saved them.

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT HAS THROWN OPEN A BIG AREA IN ALGOMA

Under order in Council, signed yesterday, the 1,430,300 acres of land set apart by the former Provincial Government in Algoma district as a land grant to the Algoma Central and Hudson's Bay Railway Company, has been thrown open to prospectors and settlers.

This immense tract has been held in reserve by the Crown under the land grant for over four years, and is now released under the renewal legislation of the past session. The land was given to the company on February 4th, 1905, for the building of their line, a gift which is now renewed on the condition accepted by the company, to spend $25,000 per month in construction work.

In its opening to prospectors it is provided that they shall obtain title to all minerals found except iron, coal, iron pyrites or nickel, which were given to the company, while the Government is bound to sell the land at 50 cents per acre to all bona fide settlers.

Present indications are that the opening of this territory will mean an inrush of prospectors.

Mr. L. A. Cote, Assistant Manager Hotel Victoria, Quebec, Canada, writes a letter to the Peruna Drug Mfg. Co., given below:

MR. L. A. COTE.

AFTER USING PE-RU-NA I AM COMPLETELY CURED

Mr. L. A. Cote, Assistant Manager Hotel Victoria, Quebec, Can., writes:

"I suffered with catarrh for about eight years, and have tried many physicians or specialists for this sickness, and never obtained any relief. It was only after using your Peruna medicine that I began to get better. I have used ten bottles up till now, and am glad to say that I am completely cured. I am glad to let the public know it. A good thing is never too dear."

We have on file many testimonials like the one given here. Probably no other physician in the world has received such a volume of enthusiastic letters of thanks as Dr. Hartman for Peruna.

WEDDING BELLS

McFAUL—ANDERSON

A very pretty wedding took place on March 24, 1909, at the residence of Mr. Charles Anderson, Wimbledon, N.D., when his sister, Miss Ida Elizabeth Anderson, became the wife of Mr. William J. McFaul, of Hannaford, N.D., eldest son of the late James McFaul, of Bethany.

Promptly at 3 o'clock the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march announced to the assembled guests, numbering about seventy, the approach of the wedding party. The bridesmaids and groomsmen entered the room as follows:—Esther Anderson and James McFaul, Anna Calverude and Oliver Simonson, Mary McFaul and Clyde Golden, followed by the pretty little flower girl, Bertha Kjelson, niece of the groom, carrying a basket of beautiful flowers, then the bride was presented by her brother Mr. Charles Anderson, and the groom by his step-father, Mr. Peter Stewart.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. B. Ludwig, of Wimbledon, N.D., in the drawing room, the bridal party standing beneath an arch of evergreens artistically decorated with flowers for the occasion.

The bride was handsomely attired in white taffeta silk and wore a bridal veil nicely adorned with a wreath of orange blossoms and carrying a bouquet of white carnations. The groom was dressed in the conventional black, the bridesmaids and flower girl in white swaine silk carrying pink carnations and the groomsmen wore the customary black suits. After the ceremony and congratulations the bride led way to dining room where sumptuous repast was partaken of. The evening was spent in different kinds of amusements until after midnight, when the guests departed for their homes, wishing Mr. and Mrs. McFaul a long happy and prosperous married life.

The groom is a grand-son of Mrs. William Spilsbury, of this city, and a special feature of the event was that it took place on Mrs. Spilsbury's 67th birthday, March 24th, 1909.

DID NOT KNOW HIS JAW WAS BROKEN

Man Who Figured in Mix-up on Charlotte Street Did Not Know of Injury Until Told so by Policeman

Chas. Beavis, who was arrested on Monday night on Charlotte street, and was sentenced to six months in the Central Prison by Magistrate Dumble, is suffering from a broken jaw.

It is not known just exactly how the unfortunate man met with the accident. Whether he received it in the mixup the night of his arrest or by falling as the result of intoxication, cannot be ascertained. Before being taken to the Court House Jail P. C. Adams noticed the jaw was swelled considerably and when Beavis was taken up on the hill the jail surgeon was summoned and an examination proved that the jaw bone was broken.

The prisoner received medical aid, and it will probably be one month or six weeks before the jaw will be completely healed.

KING OF GAMBLERS.

Prince of Monaco Expends Much of His Revenue on Science.

The Prince of Monaco, occupant of the smallest thronedom in the world, is one of the most interesting and praiseworthy notables of European court life. Though he draws his revenue largely from the gambling syndicate that controls Monte Carlo, he expends his wealth in furthering scientific knowledge and the nautical museum which he is having built and which is now almost on the point of completion will be one of the most complete institutions of its kind in existence. And, more than this, a great part of the treasures it is to contain have been gathered by the prince, in his own boat, from every quarter of the marine world. For more than 20 years he has been engaged in making the collection and in publishing the results of his discoveries. From Spitzbergen in the north to the ice barrier of the southern seas the prince has carried his quest, and to assist in capturing his prizes of the sea he has invented many curious devices that seize and convey to the surface the fragile denizens of the deep without injuring them.

Apart from all this the prince is a model ruler in his little state. No one there knows what money troubles are. The land is so fruitful that it yields fine crops if any attention whatever is given to the tilling of the soil. And for those who are too lazy to win a livelihood from the earth, visitors from all countries of the world, pleasure seekers, who troop to Monte Carlo with swelling pocketbooks, are willing to spend their cash with a prodigality unequaled anywhere else in the world.

The smallness of his domain enables the prince to watch every detail of its administration. Every street must be clean and spotless, or the derelict workman is called upon to explain to the despot why the work has been so poorly done.

No native is allowed to play at the casino. Let foreigners come and spend their wealth liberally if they will, that is their own matter, but the prince will not have the poor of his kingdom dropping sums they can not afford with the inevitable harvest of discontent, misery and tragedy.

For diversion, this curious ruler, who has the power of an Ivan the Terrible, but who lives more like a Herbert Spencer, sets out on his trips of sea exploration. In the six years between 1885 to 1891 he first attracted the notice of scientists by the discoveries he made on the Hirondelle. Now he has a new and finer boat, especially equipped for the work, and named Princess Alice II. Like most other wealthy Europeans of scientific bent the prince is giving considerable attention to aerial navigation and has had a number of dirigible airships, so-called.

Bean Milk.

"Pigeon milk is a myth," said a milkman, "but there actually is a bean milk. It is drunk, put in tea and coffee and even frozen for ice cream. The Japs are the inventors. This milk is made of the soja bean. The bean is first soaked, then boiled in water. After the liquid turns white, sugar and phosphate of potash are added, and the boiling is kept up till a substance of the thickness of molasses is obtained. Nobody could tell this bean milk from condensed milk, and when water is added it can't be told from the fresh. The Japanese poor use nothing else."

In Chase & Sanborn's Seal Brand Coffee you have the fragrant berry at its best, with nutriment and stimulant combined.

Rightly made it is a strength-giving draught of real pleasure. Try it to-morrow morning.

HORSEMEN ARE INTERESTED IN THE STALLION SHOW

The stallion show on the Market Square under the auspices of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition directors promises to be a most successful affair. Great interest is being displayed in the event by the horse breeders of the district and the indications point to a very large attendance and a fine showing of horses. It should be understood that in order to exhibit stallions it is necessary that exhibitors should be members of the association and those who are not members should take out tickets which will give them all the privileges of the association during the fall fair. The exhibition on the Market Square will take place on Saturday, April 24th and the classes will be as follows;

Imported Clydesdales.
Canadian bred Clydesdales.
Three-year-old imported Clydesdales
Three-year-old Canadian bred Clydesdales.
Shire.
Percheron.
Coach.
Hackney.
Standard Bred.
Thorough bred.

Pedigrees must be produced.

Mr. F. J. A. Hall is the secretary of the exhibition.

The show will be of interest to horsemen in general and to breeders in particular. All the finest stallions in the district will be exhibited.

This will be the first stallion show held in Peterborough for some time and great interest is being shown in it by the horsemen and agriculturists in this section of the province.

FOUND WITH HEAD HACKED TO PIECES

Vani Simoffe, a Macedonian, Found Dead in Cellar at Toronto House This Morning—Robbery Supposed Motive for the Crime—Horrible Murder.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, April 22.—Vani Simoffe, a Macedonian, aged about 45 years, was found dead in the cellar of a house at 16 Eastern avenue this morning, with his head hacked to pieces with a hatchet. Simoffe was employed at the Grand Trunk round house, working at night. He left the round house this morning at 7 o'clock, and at 8.30 the body was found by another Macedonian, Pella Steoff.

The house in which the murder occurred is in the Macedonian colony, and it is said eight persons live in it. It is supposed robbery was the motive for the crime, but that the murder or murderers were frightened away.

AND. CARNEGIE TALKS PEACE; DISARMAMENT THE REMEDY

In His Presidential Address to New York Peace Society Multi-Millionaire Declares That Time Has Come When Nations Must Cease to Arm

New York, April 22.—The Peace Society of the City of New York held its annual meeting yesterday at the Hotel Astor.

In his presidential address, Andrew Carnegie pleaded for an international league of peace "prepared, if necessary, to enforce peace among erring nations, as we enforce obedience to law among erring men; this league finally to be perfected by an international supreme court. To this complexion must it come at last."

While the world individually had advanced in every respect, considered nationally, all was reversed. The chief nations of Europe were spending half their revenue for armament, as if mankind were still in a savage state. Never were nations as busy as to-day in the hopeless task of becoming "too powerful to be attacked."

"Europe," said Mr. Carnegie, "has awakened at last to the presence of impending danger. Britain and Germany are the principal contestants. Britain has a strong case. She cannot feed her people if supplies of food be interrupted on the sea. The fear of starvation would instantly create panic and general pillage of food supplies would ensue. She is powerless without open ports and open sea. Hence she claims she must possess overwhelming fleets and must oppose the great advance which the other powers urge, the immunity of commerce upon the sea.

"Germany also has a case, quite strong enough to give her the loyal support of the nation. She also cannot feed her people and has to import food largely. Articles of food were imported in 1906 to the value of over $1,100,000,000. In a contest her danger from lack of food supplies would be serious indeed, were imports by sea prevented. Hence, she also feels that she must possess an all-sufficient navy.

"Europe is at last realizing the danger into which the policy of mutual arming has led, but is slow to see that there is but one mode of escape, and that through concurrent action of some or most of the naval powers.

"Within a small radius the two gigantic fleets of Britain and Germany will operate, often in sight of each other. The topic of constant discussion in every ship will be their relative power and the consequences of battle. The crews of the respective navies will regard each other with suspicion, jealousy and hatred, in this representing only two truly the feelings of their countrymen. Under such strain a mere spark would suffice. A few marines ashore from two of the ships, British and German, would be enough—a few words pass between them, blood is shed, and the pent-up passions of the people of both countries sweep all to the winds. The Governments are too weak to withstand the whirlwind, or, being men of like passions with their fellows, probably are in part swept away themselves after years of jealous rivalry into thirst for revenge. Such the probable result — given national jealousy and hatred, any trifle suffices to produce war.

"We have no right to assume that either Germany or Britain would decline a conference or refuse to consider a league of peace proposed by the late Prime Minister of Britain, but whatever might be the result we should be able to fix the responsibility for consequences upon the real disturber of the world's peace. The peaceful nations have a right to know the guilty nation or nations, whether one or both—heavy, indeed, will be its or their responsibility."

ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT IN THE KINRADE MURDER CASE

Special to The Review.

Hamilton, April 22.—That Ethel Kinrade was making secret arrangements to leave her father's home and take up housekeeping with a wealthy relative will be in fact the startling testimony to be given at the inquest to-night by the relative in question, Miss Minnie Fagen, subpoenaed yesterday. Miss Fagen, it appears, was to buy a house and Ethel was to go and live with her, and after they were settled Ethel was to write her father about it. No reason has been assigned by Miss Fagen why Ethel should leave home other than that the girl wanted more money than her father allowed her.

The general public will not be admitted to the inquest to-night, it is announced, while only bona fide newspapermen will be allowed to attend, and it is even rumored the press representatives will be kept out.

MRS. EVA FAY CREATED A SENSATION IN BENNETT'S THEATRE AT HAMILTON

Yesterday's Hamilton Spectator says:—

"One sitting on the right of the house who asks in the name of Beckman—F. Beckman," said Mrs. Eva Fay—last night in her act at Bennett's. There was silence on the part of the woman in the centre of the stage for a few seconds.

"You are thinking of a revolver, Beckman," continued Mrs. Fay in her high-pitched voice.

"Yes," said Beckman.

"You are thinking of canned fruit—no you thinking of a fruit jar. Is the revolver in the fruit jar?"

"Yes," came the answer once more from the querist, who was moving about uncomfortably in his seat, and the people in the house were starting to crane their necks. It was a large audience, and the most intense excitement prevailed.

"Well, I see a gun," said the thaumaturgist, leaning forward in her chair with her arms stretched out. "It is a revolver, and it is not in a fruit jar. Oh, no, I don't know the name of the street, but it comes to me as Herkimer street, and there on the south side of the street I see a board walk. It is between Bay and Caroline streets, and under the board walk I seem to see there is a gun. I don't know whether it is the one you are thinking of or not, but if you go there I think you will find a gun."

When the last word of this startling answer had died away the audience was in a turmoil. People were standing up all over the house, and when Mrs. Fay described the place where the gun was to be found there was a gasp. A frantic outburst of applause after this answer showed the interest the people have in this most mysterious of cases, and that the public will swallow any story handed out.

W. E. Ely, Mrs. Fay's business representative, was seen this morning, and seemed to take the finding of the revolver as a matter of course. "Has Mrs. Fay been told of the finding yet?" he was asked.

"I told her this morning," he said, "She wasn't the least bit surprised, but I had to tell her twice to make her believe it had been found so soon." When asked if Mrs. Fay had figured in cases of gun finding before this one, he said she had not happened on such a big mystery as this in her travels before.

TWO TENTS HAVE AMALGAMATED

Peterborough and Lift Lock Tents of K.O.T.M. Have United

At a meeting of Peterborough Tent No. 69 and Lift Lock Tent, No. 16, Knights of the Maccabees, held in the Knights of Pythias Hall last night, it was decided to amalgamate the two tents. The amalgamation will take place at once and the name retained will be Peterborough Tent, No. 69.

There was a large attendance at the meeting and it was felt that it would be a good step to amalgamate. Provincial Commander F. W. Trusler was in attendance.

FIFTEEN ARE DEAD

Terrific Gale Sweeps Northern Ohio for Five Minutes —Many Injured.

Cleveland, O., April 22.—A squall which swept along the southern shore of Lake Erie yesterday left death and ruin in its wake.

Six persons were killed, nine fatally hurt and at least 50 injured, and property valued at more than $1,000,000 was destroyed.

Fred Grugel committed suicide during height of the storm because he was afraid he was about to be killed. He rushed into a barn out of the rain and drank carbolic acid. He left a note explaining his action.

The wind reached a velocity of nearly 100 miles an hour for a few minutes. Day was made as dark as night. Trees and frame houses were blown down in all parts of the city. Lightning started many fires.

A young woman was blown into Wade Park Pond and drowned.

The roof was blown from the main building of the Case School of Applied Science and from Adelbert College.

Hail accompanied the high wind, which lasted only five minutes. Immediately after the rain, a score of fires were reported as a result of lightning.

At Wellington, south of here, the wind unroofed the plant of the American Machine Co., partially unroofed the Big Four freight station and damaged about fifty houses.

St. Stanislaus Church, at East 65th street and Foreman avenues, was practically ruined. The damage to the building is estimated at $125,000.

A PROFESSOR HAS RESIGNED

Winnipeg, April 22.—Several important changes in the staff of Manitoba College will become effective at the close of the present term. Rev. Dr. Bryce and Rev. Dr. Hart have resigned and their resignations will be considered by the senate on Monday next.

The retirement of Dr. Bryce from the college which he founded over 30 years ago will be matter of regret among all those interested in the institution. Dr. Bryce was born of Scottish parents at Mount Pleasant, Ont., April 22, 1844, and was educated at the Brantford High School and at the University of Toronto, from which he graduated with honors in 1867.

NEW ARCHBISHOP TO BE ELECTED

Toronto, April 22.—A meeting of the House of Bishops of the Anglican Province of Canada will be held at the synod office on Monday, to elect a successor to the late Archbishop Sweatman. The Bishop of Ottawa, as the senior bishop of the province, will, it is expected, be elected to the succession, to the presidency of the provincial House of Bishops and in the position of archbishop.

This will not dispose of the question of the Anglican primacy of Canada, which was also rendered vacant by the death of the late archbishop. That will follow on Monday, or at a subsequent date, at a meeting of the House of Bishops of the general synod of Canada, which includes the bishops of ecclesiastical provinces of Canada and Rupert's Land.

Expects 200,000 Immigrants.

Ottawa, April 22.—W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration, stated to the Commons' committee on agriculture and immigration yesterday morning that he expected the immigration to Canada this year would total 200,000 and that 70,000 of these would come from the United States.

As a result of the rigid inspection system in force at ports of entry during the past year 4,500 immigrants been turned back as undesirables.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CODE

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth Introduces More Severe Criminal Penalties

Ottawa, April 22.—Hon. Mr. Aylesworth yesterday afternoon introduced a bill to amend the criminal code.

It makes a corporation, municipality or company liable to be proceeded against by summary process before a justice of the peace. It provides for punishment by imprisonment for carrying an offensive weapon, such a a dagger, knife or dirk. The manufacture and circulation of immoral publications or pictures is aimed at in penalties that shall be extended not only to persons who offend against the present law, but also to those who assist in distribution or circulation or have the offensive publications in their possession for circulation. The provision is also extended to the exhibition or circulation of plates for the manufacture of immoral pictures or literature. The bill increases the penalty for procuring women from two to five years, and the present provision relating to the keeping of a disorderly house, gaming house or betting house extends to an opium joint.

It is made an indictable offence to steal silver or gold bearing quartz and a criminal offence to reproduce or sell pirated musical compositions. A provision is inserted extending the time during which cattle may be confined in railway yards in the course of transportion to 36 hours.

On the suggestion of the Attorney-General of Ontario a provision is inserted of withdrawing cases of homicide from the jurisdiction of the courts of the session.

The budget debate has been fairly launched. After the big guns of yesterday some lighter artillery were fetched up to the battlefield yesterday, and to-day and to-morrow there will be some more. About forty members, mostly new men, want to get at the great financial problems of the country and this is their opportunity.

On the Conservative side Mr. Perley and Mr. Ames spoke, while the Government view of the situation was taken by Lloyd Harris and Dr. Clarke of Red Deer, who only got going when the House adjourned at 6 o'clock, under the Wednesday rule.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

The U.S. schooner Levi Woodbury was captured while poaching in Canadian waters by the cruiser Kestrel and towed into Vancouver.

R. L. Borden will address the Canadian Club at Boston in November next. Earl Grey, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Geo. E. Foster have also been invited.

The Montreal Board of Trade refused the invitation of the Detroit Board to the conference on better trade relations, saying the matter had no interest for them.

The U. S. War Department has authorized Governor Hughes of New York to attack the ice jam at Niagara with dynamite, and the work will start to-morrow morning.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth and Mr. J. S. Ewart will meet Hon. Mr. Hunt of Newfoundland in London in May to prepare the joint case for submission to The Hague Tribunal regarding fisheries. Mr. Aylesworth will remain and undergo treatment for his hearing.

Wm. Jennings Bryan at Kansas City yesterday said: "I make the emphatic statement that I have no intention of retiring from politics. I began to fight for Democratic principles long before my party heard of me, and, as I live, I shall continue to do so as long as I have strength."

UNIQUE BANQUET

Survivors of First Parliament of Canada Were Dined at Ottawa Last Night.

Ottawa, April 22.—A banquet was given by the Canadian Club last evening in honor of the surviving members of the first Parliament of Canada. Eight of the 24 survivors were present. They were Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Hon. Wm. Miller, Hon. Wm. Ross, Sir James Grant, Basile Benoit, Hon. G. B. Baker and Sheriff Hagar of Prescott.

Earl Grey came up from Montreal for the reunion and sat on the right of President Gordon Edwards, while Sir Wilfrid Laurier sat on the left of the chairman.

Letters of regret were read from Hon. Edward Blake, Sir John Carling, Frank Killam of Yarmouth (youngest member of the first Parliament), Senator Macdonald of British Columbia, Sir Alphonse Pelletier, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec; Dr. Hugh Cameron of Nova Scotia, who also claimed to be the baby member of the first House; Hon. Jas. Young; Judge Savoy of Annapolis; Francis Hurdon of Toronto, and Hon. A. R. McClellan; also from Sir Richard Cartwright, who is ill. Survivors not heard from are Lord Strathcona, Sir Charles Tupper, Hon. W. H. Ray, L. De V. Chipman, H. Nathan.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier proposed the toast to the first Parliament of Canada.

R. L. Borden proposed the eleventh Parliament.

Hon. J. K. Kerr, Speaker of the Senate, and Hon. Charles Marcil, Speaker of the Commons, replied. Hon. R. W. Scott introduced the toast, "The Dominion of Canada."

FINANCE REFORM IN GERMANY

Berlin, April 22.—Prince von Buelow, the Imperial Chancellor, delivered a long address on finance reform, which, he said, it was the unanimous desire of the nation, should be settled this session.

Responding to deputations, representing all classes of the population, from nearly every state in Germany, the Chancellor said that the proposals to tax electricity, gas and advertisements had been definitely dropped. Other taxes would be introduced in their places, while the death duty would be changed into an inheritance tax, so as to meet the popular wishes.

THEY BELIEVE IN HAINS' DEED

Flushing, N.Y., April 22.—A special panel of 150 talesmen was exhausted yesterday without getting an additional juror in the trial of Capt. Peter C. Hains, jr., for the murder of Wm. E. Annis. Seventy talesmen were examined.

Several of the prospective jurors expressed the opinion that they could not conscientiously vote to convict the defendant, as they believed that he was morally right in killing Annis if the latter had invaded the home of Capt. Hains and had been guilty of wrongful relations with his wife.

A number declared that there was a higher law governing such cases than the state law.

The prisoner continues to maintain the same stolid indifference to his surroundings; he scarcely speaks a word to anyone.

THE REPENTANCE CAME TOO LATE

Kingston, Ont., April 22.—Death, under very sad circumstances, came to James Currie, 53 years of age, until a short time ago employed as waiter at the Frontenac Club. He was run down and killed by a train near Hudson, N.Y.

On Good Friday he and another Kingston man complained to the police that their wives had eloped. Currie took the affair very much to heart, sold out his household effects and left town, leaving his young son in care of friends.

Tuesday Mrs. Currie returned to the city with the other woman, to find her home broken up. In the afternoon, while endeavoring to get trace of him, she received a telegram of his death.

The women do not admit that any men were concerned in their going away.

SULTAN WANTS TO KEEP THRONE

Constantinople, April 22.—The conflict between Mussulman piety and the political ideas of the west has brought the Turkish people to the verge of civil war.

The Cabinet debated the situation for four hours yesterday.

The Sultan's primary demand is to remain the constitutional sovereign, with all the spiritual powers of the califate, with liberal allowance for his household, while he also asks for a variety of minor guarantees which it would not be difficult to grant.

The demands of the Committee of Union and Progress, is that the Sultan offer no resistance whatever, and submit unconditionally.

SENSATION PROMISED AT INQUEST TO-NIGHT

Biggest Evidence Says Blackstock—Only Four Witnesses Have Been Subpœnaed, However, and No Hint of Startling Developments Can Be Gained.

Hamilton, April 22.—Interests is again becoming keen in the Kinrade murder mystery, the inquest into which resumes to-night.

A despatch from Preston yesterday morning stated that Miss Florence Kinrade was seriously ill there at the Hotel Delmonte on account of nervous breakdown, and would not be able to be present to-night, but a reporter who called at the hotel last evening was positively informed that the Kinrades were not there, and never had been. This is in spite of the published reports of the past three weeks or so that they were at Preston. The proprietor said that the arrival of a Mrs. and Miss Kennedy of New York had been garbled into the visit of the Kinrades.

While G. T. Blackstock, K.C., of Toronto, who is representing the crown as special examiner, is quoted as having said yesterday that he expected perhaps the most important evidence yet to be divulged this evening, there doesn't seem to be much appearance of it on the surface. Subpoenas for four witnesses were made out by Coroner Anderson and served yesterday, three for the crown and one at the request of George Lynch-Staunton, K.C., the solicitor for the Kinrade family. The three crown witnesses subpoenaed are: Misses Erskine and Wild, milliners, employed by the Stanley Mills Co., who think they saw Miss Florence Kinrade in the store the morning of the murder, although she swore she was not out of the house that morning, and Luke Coppie, a boy who used to deliver groceries at the Kinrade home.

The witness who has been subpoenaed at the request of Mr Staunton, is Miss Fagan, who lives on Main street, near Ferguson avenue. Her testimony will be that on the afternoon of the murder, while she was standing at the corner of Pearl and King streets, about three-quarters of a mile from the Kinrade residence, she saw three men coming up Pearl street in a great hurry. One of them fitted the first description Miss Kinrade gave of the murderer. He was covered with perspiration and was winded. He was talking in great excitement about the big crowd that had gathered about the Kinrade residence.

These four witnesses are all the local people who will be called so far as the local police know. There was some talk of calling C. S. Wilcox, but as all he is prepared to swear to is that he heard several explosions which he thought were reports of blasting at about 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, it is doubtful if he will be called.

The police say that they made a thorough search of the roof of the Kinrade house and that there was no trace of the revolver. This is in response to a tip that a Toronto young lady has dreamed on three successive nights that the revolver was on the roof of the Kinrade home.

A despatch from Virginia says that Jimmy Baum, the actor-mechanic mentioned by T. L. Kinrade as being a suitor of Miss Florence, had left Norfolk in company with a Pinkerton detective, and would be in Hamilton for the inquest.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Ireland In the Way.

London, April 22.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The conference between members of the Free Importation of Canadian Cattle Association and M.P.'s, the chairman, ex-Baillie Watson of Glasgow, declared that Irish M.P.'s were the stumbling block. J. W. Cleland, M.P., thought neither the present nor the next Government would take up the question because it was not political. Wm. Henderson declared Ireland's attitude was absurd, Ireland having all the animal diseases possible. It was decided to ask the M.P.'s to form a committee to further the movement.

Canadian Shipping Unhurt.

Fort William, April 22.—Shipping at the Canadian head of the lakes will not be seriously affected by the strike of the Lake Carriers' Association boats, while on the other hand it will give Canadian lines, all of which are on excellent terms with their employes, a decided advantage.

There are a dozen American boats ready to sail with cargoes from here, and Port Arthur this week for Buffalo. Owners claim to be able to man all of the vessels and to deliver their cargoes at ports well within contract time, but this is doubted here.

THE SCHOOLBOOKS

Speaking to the Globe, Sir James Whitney expressed intense satisfaction with the figures. In handing out after announcing the name of the successful tenderer, an official statement, the Premier alluded to the fact that for years past he had maintained that better school books could be secured at a much more reasonable price. The statement mentioned is as follows:

"The contract for the new Ontario readers supplies handsome, modern school books at prices which are without a parallel in Canada. The retail price of the set of five readers is forty-nine cents. From this there is a discount of twenty per cent. (available to anyone), making the net price of the set thirty-nine and one-fifth cents. This astonishing result is due mainly to two causes: the policy of the Government in insuring high quality and standard by making and owning the plates, and, secondly, in throwing the printing and publishing open to public competition. This policy has met with complete success. Ontario will now have school readers of unsurpassed quality at prices not enjoyed by any other province.

"The history of the situation in brief is this: When the Whitney Government assumed office in 1905 the price of the Ontario readers was $1.15 per set. The contract for these expired in December, 1906. A short contract for a year and a half was then awarded to the lowest tenderer, after public competition, at forty-nine cents for the set. But these were the old readers, and the preparation of a new series was at once begun. The result may be conveniently shown as follows:

Old readers.	1905.	Reduced price 1907.
Primer	10c	5c
Part II	15c	7c
Second Reader	20c	9c
Third Reader	30c	13c
Fourth Reader	40c	15c
Total for set	$1.15	49c

	New readers.	Net prices.
Primer	4c	3 1-5c
Part II	6c	4 4-5c
Second Reader	9c	7 1-5c
Third Reader	14c	11 1-5c
Fourth Reader	16c	12 4-5c
Total for set	49c	39 1-5c

"The prices secured in 1907 were derided as bargain rates for the stock. Similar rates for the new books, it was declared, could not be got again. The Globe ridiculed the result as a 'fake reduction.' The Canadian Courier in an article attributed to Mr. J. A. Cooper (a member of the Text-book Commission), and who is widely quoted, said:

"'This reduction in price lasts only one and a half years. What will happen then is a matter of conjecture. The probability is that if a new set of readers is prepared and the binding brought up-to-date the price will go back to the old figure, if not higher.'

"The fallacy of these arguments is now exposed. Those who used them for political purposes are left in an unenviable position. The new readers are to be printed on superior paper, attractively illustrated, handsomely bound in the newest and most durable fashion. They will not only surpass the old readers in mechanical production, but their literary quality is declared by competent judges to be superior to that of others. The new books will also contain more pages than the old. The Primer contains ninety-six pages, compared with sixty-four in the old; Part II one hundred and twenty-eight, instead of ninety-six; the Second Reader two hundred and twenty-four, as against one hundred and eighty-four; the Third Reader three hundred and fifty-two, instead of two hundred and eighty-eight, and the Fourth Reader four hundred and sixteen pages, compared with three hundred and forty-four.

"The prices obtained by Ontario as compared with those under the new contract made by Saskatchewan and Alberta are as follows:

THE WAYS OF CIVILIZATION

A case of diabolical cruelty to wife and family was told in the Recorder's Court today when Alfred Desjardins, a strong, healthy man was charged with ill-using his wife.

Released a few weeks ago after doing a term of four years in the penitentiary Desjardins went back to his home at 73 Wolfe street. When he left his wife four years ago she was strong and well able to earn her own living and support her family of young children by doing washing and other odd jobs. A short while ago, however, the poor mother met with an accident, being rendered almost blind, owing to some lye, used in her work, getting into her eyes. On finding her thus incapacitated from working at her usual charwoman duties the brutal husband compelled her to go out on the streets (with their youngest child, a little mite of four) and beg from door to door. After consenting to this for some time the wife at last refused to continue longer in the debasing trade, and support a brutal husband who spent most of her earnings in vicious living.

Yesterday the matter came to a crisis when on the wife and mother refusing to go out on the street the brutal husband struck her with his fist and kicked her almost to death.

Mr. Recorder Weir today read him a severe lecture and sent him down for 9 months without the option of a fine.—Montreal Star.

Nine months for beating up a poor woman! Such is the punishment meted out by a man of reputation to a heartless scoundrel and an inhuman brute with a previous conviction that had carried a four years' penalty. It is difficult to understand how any magistrate could so far ignore the claims of the wives of such men to protection as this one has done. It is not, doubtless, that he wished to be lenient. It is the value we moderns put upon the feelings of the poor. God help us! It is shocking in the extreme. We read of the Mongoloid Turanians and Babylonian semi-civilisation as the "superior person" in the novel reads of the doings of the great world about him. We prate of progress and compare ourselves to the immortal gods and not with the mere men of the Past. But when it comes to the consideration of human feelings and human possessions, we give such a man as Desjardins nine months in the common gaol for his "trifling offence," while had he stolen something more enduring than the heart, health and hope of a poor woman he would have got his four years over again. Rabelais regarded civilisation as a farce and it must be confessed some of it has that appearance.

EDITORIAL NOTES

"Without the law of libel the press would become either the most hideous engine of oppression or else fall so low that men would no more mind being attacked in the press than they mind having faces made at them by a small boy in the gutter," says the London Spectator.

Thus, we find, "The White Man's Burden" phrase employed as being synonymous with the appropriation by whites of non-white territories; with the exploitation of lands and their dusky aboriginals in the interests of the dominant race; with the selfish exclusion from a continent, so acquired, of even a percentage of eager would-be emigrants from neighboring non-white (albeit highly civilized) allied countries; with exclusion from certain parts of an Empire of civilized non-white citizens of that very Empire! Service, not selfishness; love not lust, must inspire our conduct towards the so-called "inferior races," if we would deserve the honor of being bearers of burdens, helpers in the evolution of humanity.—Yours, etc.,

L. W. RITCH.

South Africa British Indian Committee, 28 Queen Anne's Chambers, S.W., March 16th.

What he describes as his own conservative estimate of the wealth of the United Kingdom was a total of about £11,500,000,000. Of that sum five millions of persons owned £10,900,000,000. One-ninth of the population owned 95 per cent. of the entire capital stock of the United Kingdom. Thus the whole of the country regarded as a business undertaking was in the hands of a handful of people. Taking the income of the country at 1,800 millions a year, there were about five million persons who took one-half and thirty-nine millions the other half. Of the five million persons who took 900 millions of income, about one and a quarter million persons, or 250,000 families, took 600 millions out of the 900 millions. From this state of facts the most terrible inequalities resulted, evidences of which could be seen along the embankment and other parts of Westminster almost within a stone's throw of that House.—Dr. Chiozza-money.

OF INTEREST

Ireland's Greatest Dramatist

A young Irish dramatist has lately died in Dublin whose fame is probably known to few on this side of the water. Yet the Manchester Guardian declares that his "fame is as safe as Shelley's" and adds that "no one with a sense for the higher values in letters could touch his work and not feel that it had authentic greatness, and that its heat and light came up from the central fires of human passion." John M. Synge, who had just completed his thirty-seventh year was identified with W. B. Yeats and Lady Gregory in the conduct of the Abbey Theatre whose idea has been the establishment of a national drama. To the repertoire of this house Synge contributed a number of plays of the most important of which The Guardian editorially writes thus:

"His 'Riders to the Sea' is the tragic masterpiece of our language in our time; wherever it has been played in Europe from Galway to Prague, it has made the word tragedy mean something more profoundly stirring and cleansing to the spirit than it did. That was his best, but two at least of his other plays had superb qualities—'The Shadow of the Glen,' a harsh, sane humor, biting as carbolic acid to slight minds softened with the sentimentalities of our ailing theatre; 'The Playboy of the Western World,' a wonderful infusion of the Irish peasant imaginativeness, a kind of mystic intoxication of fancy and tongue in which the delight of molding each mental image into words exhilarates the mind to reach out further and further at wild new beauties of figuration. No such gift has been made to modern Ireland by any of her children as this disengagement of the very essence, the 'virtue' in the old sense, of the native imagination of Irish country folk. Such services make nations for they make national qualities apprehensible and sensuous so that the idea of them can be grasped and cherished by plain men and omen. Like nearly all artists who endow a modern nation with some treasure wholly new and wholly its own, Mr. Synge met little reward and much bitter opposition; most, if not all, of his dramatic writing was done for nothing; the most splendidly Irish of his longer plays was hooted by Dublin crowds; Irish newspapers called him a calumniator of Irish character because he gave it the magnificent distinction of great portraiture and not the contemptuous insult of a touched-up and prettified photograph.'"

This sketch of Mr. Synge's brief but picturesque career is given in the London Times:

"Mr. Synge was born in Dublin and educated at Trinity College. After he took his degree he divided his life curiously between the Continent and the remoter Irish districts. He was frequently in Paris, where in 1899 he first came under the influence of Mr. W. B. Yeats. For some months of the year he lived in the Arran Islands and acquired an intimate knowledge of the Irish language and of the primitive manners and customs of the people. Two years ago he published a book on these islands which is full of descriptive passages of great poetical charm. Mr Synge first came into prominence in connection with the Irish National Theatre Society with the two plays 'Riders to the Sea,' and 'In the Shadow of the Glen,' which were produced in 1905. In the same year he wrote 'The Well of the Saints.' His most remarkable—certainly his most sensational—work 'The Playboy of the Western World,' was produced three years ago at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin. The first performance ended in a riot, and for some weeks afterward a piquant controversy half personal and half literary, raged in the Irish press. It is said that Mr Birrell, (who made his first appearance in Ireland about this time, was astonished to find Dublin obsessed not with any matter of Home Rule or the land, but with the question whether Mr Synge's play was or was not an insult to Irish womanhood.

"In England and elsewhere Mr. Synge's dramatic merits were more calmly appreciated and your own critic referred to the 'Playboy' as being, perhaps the most remarkable play of its year. At the time of his death Mr Synge was engaged on another Irish play called 'Deirdre.' It is believed to have been practically completed and it may yet be produced in Dublin. He published last year a play called 'The Tinker's Wedding' which is especially characteristic of his candid, yet exceedingly subtle, dramatic method. It has not been, and is not likely to be, produced in Ireland. As an Irish dramatist, both in his conception and treatment of the problems of rural life, Mr Synge was greatly in advance of his time. The general public failed to appreciate the extraordinary delicacy of his style. The audacity of his attacks on Irish institutions and conventions provoked bitter resentment in some political and religious quarters."

An Irish-American who knew him well writes an appreciation for the New York Evening Sun from which we quote the following:

"I never heard him utter any word of bitterness about any Irishman. He never talked rancorously of any man with whom he differed in politics. He never ran down another writer's work or another dramatist's work or criticized it or sneered at it. And more than all I never heard him indulge in any little or petty gossip. He would laugh at it—a round, hearty, cheery laugh—but he didn't retail little petty gossip. He wasn't one of the chorus in the whispering gallery that is Dublin. He was a silent man unless you drew him out. His death is an irreparable loss. When I think of Synge and how he loved to tramp the open roads and how he loved the open country and when I think now that he is dead, I can not help but recall the words of George Borrow, 'There is a wind on the heath, brother—life is sweet.'"

Editor Stanley of the Fernie Ledge, was fined $100 for contempt of court in criticising Mr Justice Irving with undue severity.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 21.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning the offerings were [illegible] cattle, 180 sheep and lambs, 250 hogs and 1,000 calves. A feature of the trade was the stronger undertone to the market for cattle, owing to the small supplies coming forward and the increasing demand for local consumption, on account of the fact that butchers generally have now worked off their surplus stock, and in addition to this, there is a steady demand for small lots for export account to complete shipments with. The advance in prices was fully ¼c per pound, but there were really no choice steers offered, and for the best on the market 5¾c was paid, while other sales of lower grades were freely made at 5c to 5½c, and 3½c per pound. Good heavy cows sold at 5c to 5½c, and common at 3½c to 4½c, while good to choice bulls brought 5½c to 1¾c, and inferior grades 3½c to 4½c per pound. Supplies of sheep and lambs were a little larger than usual, for which the demand was active and prices ruled firm. Yearling lambs sold at 6½c to 7c, and old sheep at 5c to 5½c per pound. Spring lambs brought from $3 to $6 each, as to size. There was a glut of calves on the market, of which the bulk was poor in quality, and sellers, in order to make sales, had to accept low prices. The demand was good for picked lots, and such sold at $5 to $7 each, but the common and inferior went at $1.50 to $3 each. In hogs, the feeling was very firm, under a good demand and small supplies, and sales of selected lots were made at $8.25 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars. At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the supply of live stock consisted of 300 cattle, 100 sheep and lambs, 1700 calves and 400 hogs. There was a good demand for cattle, and, as there were some choice Ontario stall-fed steers offered, weighing 1300 to 1400 pounds and well finished in every respect, buyers were eager to secure them, and sales were made at 6¼c per pound, while choice stock of lighter weights brought 5¾c to 6c, and good 5c to 5½c. The lower grades of steers, cows and heifers sold at from 3½c to 3¾c per pound. The demand for sheep and lambs was active, and sales of the former were made at 5c to 5½c, and the latter at 6½c to 7c per pound, while spring lambs sold at from $3 to $6 each, as to size. Calves were very plentiful and met with a good demand at prices ranging from $1.50 to $7 each, as to quality. A very firm feeling prevails in the market for hogs, and sales of selected lots were made at $8.25 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.

SAVING PLANTS IN WINTER.

Suggestions as to the Best Means of Protection.

The utility of protecting plants, bulbs, shrubs and trees of all kinds is not sufficiently appreciated. Even those of reputed hardiness in any given climate will well repay the expense of partial protection from the severity of low temperature.

The degree of cold that plants will resist without being injured cannot be determined except by actual experiment, as their power of resistance depends entirely on their environment. A plant sometimes will be destroyed by exposure to a temperature not lower than it had previously encountered without sustaining any apparent injury. The exact process by which cold destroys plants is a matter upon which there is yet room for conjecture. The mechanical action of frost on vegetable tissue undoubtedly is a cause of injury.

It is well known that mere degrees of cold do not indicate the extent of the injury that plants suffer during winter. The moisture of the soil and the moisture of the atmosphere are of equal importance. Plants that pass with safety through a below zero cold in December frequently will be destroyed by the dry winds of March, although the thermometer may not indicate 10 degrees of frost. The moisture of the plant is evaporated, and the injury will depend upon the amount thus evaporated.

In a climate as changeable as ours it is by no means an uncommon occurrence to have all the seasons represented in a period not exceeding forty-eight hours. Consequently during midwinter plants suffer more here than in climates much colder, where the ground is covered with snow the entire winter. To the layman it is hard to explain why plants that are perfectly hardy in Maine when transferred to the White House gardens at Washington frequently are destroyed by 10 or 15 degrees of frost because of no covering.

The thickness of protection should depend upon the size of the plants. Of course all this is more particularly for newly planted material. All trees will be much better with a blanket four inches thick. For trees two to three inches in diameter make a mat of at least three feet across the roots of whatever material there is to be had. Borders of shrubbery and herbaceous plants and roses are better if the spaces between them are entirely covered three inches thick. Bulbs of all kinds—narcissus, tulips, hyacinths and lilies—if covered two inches thick with manure, three parts decayed, will be much benefited.

Now, in the spring don't rake off every bit of the protecting material you have used. Leave on as much as possible. Nature does not prim up all she laid down in November.

Cutting the Ice Crop.

In cutting or sawing ice be particular to get your cakes of even size and square. You can then pack the ice away tightly and solidly without any air spaces between the cakes or layers. If you get your ice in the house in a solid mass and keep it covered with sawdust or cut straw, properly tamped in, there will be no trouble with ice melting and giving out in late summer, when it is needed most. In packing away ice leave it a foot or fifteen inches from the wall, and with every layer put sawdust on the outside to hold it in place.

To Disestablish Church.

London, April 22. The long promised bill for the disestablishment of the church in Wales, was introduced in the House of Commons yesterday by Premier Asquith.

A DETECTIVE'S RUSE.

Clever Method by Which He Secured Some Evidence.

"I had to resort to a queer ruse once to get an admission from a man I was after," said a private detective. "There had been some trouble at a club between two young men. One threw a glass of wine into the other's face. The other did not resent the insult as he should have done. When his father heard of it he threatened to disinherit his son unless he whipped the man who had thrown the wine in his face. The father was a member of the same club, and he made a wager of a wine supper that his son could and would whip the other fellow. Soon after this the son met the man who had insulted him and whipped him. The fight occurred on a prominent street, and as two of the young man's friends were with him at the time there was talk of an action against them and his father for conspiracy. Our agency was retained to get the evidence needed.

"It was decided that it would be necessary to get an admission from the father of the young man who had made the assault. I was told to get it. I tried many ways and failed. He did not know I was a detective. He had known me for a number of years, but thought I was engaged in other work. I had another plan to get from him what I wanted. I told him a metropolitan publication was having the affair written up and illustrated.

"I said I had seen the picture of the fight which had been prepared for it. He was pleased at the publicity that the fight was to get, for the story of the affair at the club had been printed, and he wanted it known that his son had avenged the insult. I intimated that if he cared to see it I thought I could get him the picture that had been prepared for publication. He was eager to see it.

"I had a friend, a newspaper artist, who made me a picture. He made a faithful copy of the street scene where the fight occurred, and he made a fair likeness of the figures in it. The picture showed one man stealing up behind another and striking him from the rear. Behind him were two other men, who were supposed to have accompanied him to see fair play. The father was thought to have been in the neighborhood, but as he wasn't seen he was left off the picture. He examined it carefully.

"'Who are these two men?' he asked, pointing to the two onlookers.

"'They are the two Blacks, who went along with your son to see that he got fair play,' I told him.

"'That's all right,' he said, 'but who is this?' pointing at the man who was striking at the other from behind.

"'Why, that's your son,' I told him.

"'That's a lie!' he exclaimed. 'My son stood right in front of him and hit him squarely in the face. I told him to do that and stand up in front of him all the time. I was right across the street, and the two men who were with my son were close enough to see all that happened. They will tell you that he did not hit him from behind. He faced him fairly and whipped him fairly. That was the way we made it up to do. If that's printed I'll whip the man who made it!'

"It wasn't printed, nor were there any court proceedings taken on account of the alleged conspiracy. The men concerned in it on both sides got together and settled it out of court."

"The Ghost Bloke."

The writer once overheard an amusing conversation outside the New Bailey, London, England. Prof. Pepper, the great criminal analyst and chemist, had been giving his evidence in a murder case, and a couple of costers were standing on the pavement discussing the chances of the prisoner. "This 'ere bloke Pepper seems to have wrapped it up for 'im (prisoner) orlright," said one. "What Pepper?" replied the other. "Who's 'e?" "Why, the ghost bloke. He sees things what other people carn't; and lor' help the chap he gives evidece agin." Probably Prof. Pepper would not feel very flattered to know that he was confounded with the man who originated the far-famed Pepper's ghosts—that thrilling entertainment of our childhood; but the two costers are not the only people who have credited him with having dealings with the supernatural.

Taken by Surprise.

There are some hospitable creatures who are greatly disturbed if they cannot meet every demand made on them, although there are cases when it is ridiculous to expect them to be able to be equal to the occasion. Recently a barn took fire on a large estate, and the firemen of the village worked hard to put out the flames. After it was all over the husband asked the fire-fighters into the house to partake of coffee and whatever edibles were on hand. His wife welcomed the men with steaming cups of coffee, doughnuts and pies. Then she said apologetically, "Oh, if I had only known this was going to happen, I would have had a lot of things baked up."

An Old-Fashioned Woman.

There was an old-fashioned woman who would blush if company caught her with less than six different kinds of cake and seven different kinds of preserves in the house. If a guest liked coffee for supper, she thought it was right that she should have it. Her pies were always rich, and she used lots of butter and cream. She had never heard of the diet cure and believed in people eating just what they liked. What a pity it is that she isn't alive, so we folks who are tired of dieting could go and visit her!

Natural Gas And Miranda.

By MARY ALDINE

Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.

Mr. Samuel Perkins, assisted by two Italians, all with their coats and vests off and perspiring profusely, was boring an artesian well on his farm.

Suddenly the drill was forced out of the ground. There followed a great puff of vapor that had the odor of bad eggs and sulphur mixed together. Mr. Perkins had struck a natural gas well.

A month later Mrs. Perkins was saying to him:

"Samuel, remember that we spell our name P-a-r-k-i-n-s, also that a month hence we sail for Europe. We've got money, and we've got a daughter Miranda. We are going to give her a chance."

"A chance for what?" asked the husband, who was trying to get used to wearing a collar and a coat around the house.

"To get polished up and to marry some one worthy of her. You needn't sit there thinking that a few weeks ago Miranda was hanging out the clothes. We've struck natural gas, and that makes a difference. We sail in four weeks."

"I did kinder think we might go to Niagara Falls for a week or so"—began Samuel as he rubbed his chin.

"What's Niagara Falls to people with money? What are they to Miranda? Samuel Parkins, can't you realize that you struck gas?"

"I know I did."

"We are climbing for the top of the ladder. We can't be kept down. Haven't you got it through your head yet? It's Europe and polish. It's Europe and a husband for Miranda. If them Chicago butchers can take their daughters to Europe and marry them off to lords and dukes, why can't we?

"Isn't natural gas just as high toned as pork chops? You keep a coat on and your shoes black and get used to looking like somebody and leave the rest to me."

Mr. Parkins would rather have sat on the steps of the village and related for the five hundredth time what his emotions were when he struck gas, but he was dragged off to Europe.

Miranda betrayed a surprising lack of interest, but Mrs. Parkins did the thing with all her might. She had native wit and observation. By sitting in a corner most of the time and having as little as possible to say the husband and father made out after a fashion.

In due time he even became interested in things. He became so interested that one evening after they had been in London for a fortnight he asked his wife:

"Mary, are we hitting the pike all right?"

"Hitting the pike!" she repeated in scornful tones. "Samuel, cut the pike and other things out. Miranda and me are watching ourselves every minute, and you want to do the same. Don't you leave the spoon in the cup when you drink your coffee, and don't tuck your table napkin clear up under your ears. If you spoil Miranda's chances I'll never forgive you."

"But what I want to know is has any feller come around yet?" persisted the husband.

"No, not exactly. But I've noticed different ones looking at her and sorter edging around. You leave that part of it to us, and you tend to yours. Whenever you can, you just drop in a word about natural gas and millions."

"Oh, I won't spoil nobody's chances. I didn't want to come at first, but now that I've got over here I raytber like it. Makes a feller feel as if he was somebody to have a boy ready at every turn to brush off his coat.

"I guess I'd be proud to have a lord or a duke for a son-in-law. That's Miranda's lowest figger, hain't it? She hain't coming over here and then take up with no hayseed?"

It was Paris after four weeks in London, and there was a continual improvement in the family. Miranda and her mother picked up as much as one French word a day, and the husband and father left his fears behind him and assumed a little swagger and a patronizing air that sat well on him.

He had struck natural gas at home simply by accident. He reasoned that he might strike a husband for Miranda abroad in the same way. Therefore whenever he came across any one who would listen to him and who could speak English he introduced gas wells into the conversation.

It was always in the plural. It was never one gas well, but half a dozen. He also tried his best to make the head waiter understand the gas question, and if he did not succeed entirely he at least elicited the exclamation:

"Gas from the ground, mon dieu! And each well $1,000,000! How you must suffer with so much money!"

"Yes, a heap of suffering, but I grit my teeth and stand it."

When Mrs. Parkins announced that they were to leave Paris for a resort in the Alps, Mr. Parkins had his opportunity to ask:

"Any feller in sight yet?"

"Samuel, hain't you got no polish in these last two months?" demanded the wife.

"Of course I have."

"Then show some of it. No gentleman would speak in that brutal manner. I'm glad Miranda was not here."

"Well, has any lord or duke been making up to her?"

"Making up! Making up! Humph! Mr. Parkins, are you in Europe or Texas? My daughter Miranda cannot be made up to. I catch your meaning, however, and in order that you may not use any more such expressions let me say that I'm not worrying."

"You mean"—

"I mean that we are going to Switzerland to stop for a month or more at the same hotel with a lord."

"By George, but you don't mean it!" exclaimed the husband. "How in thunder did you bring it about?"

"Samuel!"

"Yes, but that's a cute trick of yours. You'll have him penned right up."

"Samuel Parkins!" cried the wife as she flushed up.

"Oh, well, I won't say nothing more. You'n Miranda go right ahead, and I'll back you with natural gas enough to run all France. I guess it hain't for me to mix in."

Just how Mrs. Parkins located the lord doesn't matter. For a five franc piece Parisian chambermaids have been known to locate a whole duke. He wasn't registered as a lord, but that wasn't expected. He would be incog. Mr. Parkins took it that any of the forty men around the hotel might be his lordship, but the wife, with the keener intuition of her sex, spotted the right man within twenty-four hours.

Then Mr. Parkins came to the front like a man. He introduced himself to the victim and talked of America and gas wells and dollars. There was enthusiasm in his voice as he talked of the gas that would continue to pour out of the earth for centuries to come, and he worked up considerable pathos over the admission that he hadn't enough wells to supply over half the United States. Mr. Parkins had done his full share. The rest devolved upon other shoulders.

A day or two later his lordship strolled up a mountain path by himself. A little later Mrs. Parkins and Miranda strolled up the same path. His lordship was overtaken just in time to rescue Miranda from walking out on an overhanging rock that would have surely given way with her weight and dropped her into the valley a mile below.

The half fainting girl and the shattered mother were assisted down the path to the hotel, and Mr. Parkins found them in bed to recover from the shock. He heard the story and then rushed downstairs. When he appeared half an hour later there was a bland smile on his face, and he was rubbing his hands.

"Mr. Parkins, what have you done?" asked the wife as she sat up in bed. "Have you been saying anything to his lordship?"

"Now, don't you folks get into a sweat about me," replied Mr. Parkins. "Mebbe I haven't polished up quite as fast as you have over here, but I know when to do the right thing for all that."

"And you've seen the lord?"

"I have."

"And talked with him?"

"For sure. Yes, sir—had quite a talk with him."

"Samuel Parkins, what did you say?" asked the wife as she sat up straighter and a look of fear came into her eyes.

"What should I say under the circumstances? I thanked him from the bottom of my heart for saving Miranda's life. You don't think I spoke about the weather, do you?"

"And what else, Samuel?"

"What else, pa?"

"I offered him $25 in cold cash."

Two shrieks shrieked out in chorus, and two females went into mild hysterics, only Miranda's was suspiciously like laughter, while her mother's was the real thing. It was a long minute that Mr. Parkins stood there, hands in pockets and wondering what had happened. Then his wife forced back her emotions and faintly asked:

"And—and—what?"

"And he took it and said, 'Thank ye.'"

Two days later as they sat in the train bound for home Mr. Parkins noticed a tear stealing down Mrs. Parkins' cheek. He turned to her and asked:

"Ain't you feeling chipper today?"

"Chipper! Chipper! How could I feel chipper?" exclaimed Mrs. Parkins in fierce tones.

"Dunno, but you mustn't blame me. I didn't know that he was a lord that went about saving human lives for cash on the nail! And, anyway, Miranda kin marry Joshua Rawlins to home. He writes to me that he's going to give up farming because he's struck gas too."

The Facetious Suburbanite.

The second story man had climbed into the front window of the facetious suburbanite's villa and was engaged in rifling the latter's pockets of such random possessions as were to be found therein.

"Ah, good evening, my friend," said the facetious suburbanite from the depths of his bedclothes. "Aren't you working overtime?"

"We can't help it in our business, governor," replied the burglar. "We ain't got no reg'larly organised hours of work. It's to do while you can with us, day and night."

"That's a shame!" said the facetious suburbanite. "You ought to get together and form a burglars' union for your own protection."

"We ain't a trade," retorted the burglar scornfully. "We're an industry."

"Then you should be incorporated into the steal trust," said the facetious suburbanite.

Whereupon the midnight marauder laughed so long and loud that he was overheard by the policeman on the corner, who, recognizing the laugh, immediately fled to a place of safety.—Judge.

MILLIONS OF CELLS.

The human body is composed of countless millions of cells. These cells are constantly dying and new ones are being created. Dead cells are removed from the blood by the bowels, kidneys and skin. These great eliminating organs filter this waste matter from the blood, and thus purify the blood.

If there is Constipation, or non-action of the bowels—if the kidneys are strained or weakened—if there is defective skin action—then the dead cells are not removed from the body. The blood thus becomes loaded with impurities, and we suffer for it.

The only way to purify the blood is to cure the skin, bowels and kidneys. When these organs are healthy and doing their work as nature intended them to do it, waste matter is promptly removed and the blood is kept pure and rich. "Fruit-a-tives"—the famous fruit liver tablets—act directly on the skin, the bowels and the kidneys. "Fruit-a-tives" purify the blood because they keep the whole body strong, vigorous and healthy. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Cigarette Paper Saves Him.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 22.—Harry Brown, a Reading Railroad brakeman, was saved from death after a fall from a train by means of a tiny torch, made from cigarette paper. Brown fell from his train near this city early yesterday morning and broke his leg. While lying on the track, cold and suffering intense pain, he was unable to attract attention. Finally he found a package of cigarette paper in his pocket, and, twisting the paper into small torches, he lighted several and attracted the attention of some train men. A few minutes after he was rescued from his dangerous place a train passed the track on which he had lain.

Canada's Racial Policy.

Was Discharged

The case of the blacklisted man who was found under the influence of liquor and was remanded last week, when he appeared in court was discharged at the police court this morning.

The magistrate gave him some good advice which was to the effect that being a respectable married man with a family he should know better than to waste his time and money on liquor, and he hoped that the lesson that had been taught would be of benefit to the accused.

A SIGNIFICANT GATHERING IN MISSIONARY INTERESTS

Laymen's Dinner at St. Andrew's Last Night—Delegates to Laymen's Congress Give Their Impressions—Definite Organization Effected.

One of the most sweeping evangelistic movements in the history of the Protestant churches in Canada is the Laymen's Missionary Movement which has taken such a firm hold on the men of the church that a surprisingly large and powerful interest has been shown and the strength and significance of the movement are increasing in all parts of the continent. The recent Congress at Toronto gave evidence of the earnestness of those identified with the movement which promises to be one of the most stupendous powers for good and the spread and advancement of Christianity of any effort of the Christian church.

It is a noteworthy fact that the laymen of Peterborough are taking an active part in the great work and the gathering of men last night at St. Andrew's bespeaks a great deal for the progress of the movement among the members of that particular congregation and the splendid gathering should stimulate a general interest in the city.

About sixty men assembled at the laymen's dinner in the lecture room. The feature was the very interesting reports of the delegates to the recent congress in Toronto. The dinner was served by the Ladies' Aid Society of the church. The course was a most appetizing one. In fact the spread was very elaborate and the tempting dishes won the verbal and active acknowledgment of the company. Dinner was served at seven o'clock and the speechmaking commenced at eight o'clok. Mr. Andrew McFarlane was in the chair and made the opening address in which he emphasized the great value of the Laymen's Congress in Toronto and expressed his desire that St. Andrew's should use its privileges in the matter of the missionary work that had been outlined by the congress and stated that it was a matter of personal responsibility.

DELEGATES REEPORTS.

Mr. Wm. Langford, jr., reported his visit to the Toronto Congress and in a very neat and forcible speech expressed his enthusiasm in this department of the church's work.

Mr. John Hill, another of the delegates spoke of the large benefits that would accrue from the congress and he also felt sure that the St. Andrew's men would not fail in bearing their share of the world's evangelization.

Mr. John Matthieson declared the Toronto Congress had been the greatest event in the history of the world and in its great scope was destined to increase the interest and expansion of the missionary work of the church throughout the world. He favored strongly the suggestion submitted by Mr. Langford that the matter be taken up in the congregation at once to give everyone the opportunity of taking a share, however small in this great movement.

Mr. Richard Lees, who also went to the congress as a delegate from St. Andrew's, gave a very comprehensive address dealing with the origin of the present movement, the extent of its operation, the important ground gained and the continuous increase of interest among laymen in all departments of life in the larger as well as the smaller centres of the continent and particularly in Canada.

All the speakers referred to the share in the world's evangelization that had been given to the Presbyterian church in Canada and the possibility of St. Andrew's taking a fair share in the amount allotted.

$5,000 FOR THE WORK.

Rev. Mr. Potter announced the great amount of genuine interest that had been aroused in the missionary movement by the gift of Mrs. M. A. Maxwell, of Peterborough, who had donated $5,000 for the work of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission in Honan, China. This had been forwarded and a letter from Dr. McKay, the foreign missionary secretary, had been received, stating the pleasure it had given the committee to receive the handsome gift at a time when a strong appeal had come from the missionaries there for such a work in the education of the youth of China as Mrs. Maxwell's desires had indicated.

There was evident delight at the announcement as was manifested by the hearty round of applause.

A strong committee was appointed with power to increase its numbers, to undertake the work of increasing the interest in the work amongst the men of the church.

During the evening a resolution of congratulation for the splendid showing of the St. Andrew's hockey team in winning the church league trophy was expressed by Mr. R. M. Glover and met with much enthusiasm.

Mr. Jas. Browne sang "The Two Cities," and Mr. Mort Johnston also gave a solo, both numbers being highly appreciated.

At the conclusion of the transaction of the business of the meeting it was closed with benediction by Rev. Mr. Potter.

ENGINEER PREPARING THE PLANS

For the New Waterworks Dam Here—Large Amount of Detail is Involved

The Water Commissioners are going ahead as rapidly as possible in connection with the new dam. There is so much preliminary work, however, that operations will not be commenced on the dam 'till the end of July or the first of August. Mr. Kennedy, the engineer, was here a few days ago and is now preparing plans and specifications for the dam. This involves a large amount of work, and it will be several weeks before tenders will be called for.

A LECTURE OF MUCH INTEREST

Reminiscences of a Trip Through Italy—Y. W. C. A. Notes

The public are cordially invited to attend the lecture to be given by Mr. J. Adams, of the Collegiate Institute at the Y.W.C.A. tomorrow evening. His subject will be "Reminiscences of a Trip Through Italy." There will also be several musical numbers.

Keep in mind the date and place to attend the annual meeting of the association on Friday evening, March 30th. Mrs. Robert Kilgour, Toronto, the Dominion president, will address the meeting. There will be a short musical programme followed by a social half hour.

Our association members are thinking much these days of the first Canadian Y.W.C.A. summer conference to be held at the Elgin House, Lake Joseph, Muskoka, June 26th to July 6th, and many, we trust, are planning to spend their vacation in this delightful place and way. The conference will continue ten days. There will be daily morning and evening sessions devoted to Bible and mission study, and platform addresses. Among the speakers and leaders are: President Mackenzie, Hartford University; Dr. John T. Stone, Baltimore; Rev. John MacNeill, Toronto; Rev. Canon Cody, Toronto; Principal Gandier, Knox College; Prof. Gilmour, McMaster University; Rev. John Pringle formerly of the Yukon. The afternoons will be free for recreation, and jolly yachting excursions through the beautiful Muskoka Lakes district are promised, as well as tennis, boating, bathing, tramping, etc. We hope that many of our Peterborough girls will at once become enthusiastic and if possible plan to be at the first Canadian summer conference, June 26th to July 6th. The railways promise reduced rates.

THE BLOUSE AND SUPER-BLOUSE

First Matches Skirt and the Two Have Appearance of a Double Bodice

The up-to-date blouse should match the skirt in color, and it should have the appearance of a double bodice. That is, the collar, chemisette, and sleeves from the under bodice, and the rest of the blouse the upper one, including sleeves from shoulders to elbows. Sometimes there is even a turned-down lace collar arranged over the upper bodice. This is rather pretty but a perfect nuisance if the blouse has to be worn under a coat, as is generally the case. The collar is sure to get crushed.

SUPPLEMENTARY BLOUSE

The blouse for wearing with a directoire or pinafore gown must indulge in no such whimsies. It has to be in a straightforward design, adapted by its subservient position as merely supplementary to the gown. The sleeves should be long, and if not made of lace, very much tucked, and the collar and upper part must match the sleeve.

VANISHED POUCH

Contrast these sleeves to monstrosities of yore, after which we feel victims to the hideous pouch, one of the very ugliest fashions not even excepting crinolines, that was ever devised. For years this made artists and sculptors shudder while physiologists smiled at the grotesque absurdity. But now it has vanished, let us hope, forever. The bodice fits neatly and compactly and does every justice to a good figure, while making the best of an indifferent one. If only the waist line could have some abiding place we might be fairly happy about our gowns. Sleeves, it is true, are rather tight for comfort when made by one who studies economy in material rather than human anatomy but on the whole we should be content. One fears a change, lest a worse thing happen to us. Where for instance, shall we bulge out next. Or where be forced into exiguity.

DAIRYMEN ARE GETTING READY

Factories of the County Will Open Early in May

The dairymen of the county are preparing for the opening of the season. None of the cheese factories has opened yet but several will commence operations during the first week of May. If the weather turns warm it is expected that there will be a good crop of grass which means a large supply of milk early in the season.

ON THE LAST LAP

Mr. J. W. Stewart, of Foley, Welch & Stewart, the big railway builders, was in Edmonton the other day. Mr. Stewart is famous for what he keeps from newspapermen, but one tireless correspondent gathered from his silence that the close of the present year will see the Grand Trunk Pacific completed and construction trains running over the line as far west as the McLeod River. The grading of the Transcontinental is practically all completed to the Pembina River, and there is only the stretch between the Pembina and the McLeod to be completed. The steel head is within less than one hundred miles of Edmonton, and before June will have reached the city and be on its way to the west.

The foundations for the big steel bridges that will carry the transcontinental across the Pembina and McLeod Rivers are already advanced, and steel for the structures will be rushed through the moment that trains are able to run through to the Pembina, which should be in July or August.

Preparations for the completion of the last stretch of grading on the Edmonton-McLeod section, from the Pembina to the McLeod, are being made by Foley, Welch & Stewart, who have the contract. J. W. Stewart states that work will commence as soon as the frost is well out of the ground. There is only about two work to complete the grading through to the McLeod River.

Asked as to the contract for the Wolf Creek section of the transcontinental, Mr. Stewart said he had heard nothing as yet from the railway company, but was confident that work would be proceeded with on the mountain section within a few months.

A letter condemning boxing and wrestling as sports unfit for public patronage had been received by the sporting editor of the Review. It is signed "Fair Play," "whatever that means," in this special interest and as the writer uses only a nom de plume it will not be published.

If the author had published his name however, the communication would not have been given space, as it is of no particular public interest and the writer doesn't show particularly good taste in addressing his missive to the sporting editor. It would be about as appropriate to write to a butcher and condemn the sale of meat.

STOCK COMPANY AGAIN PLEASES

"A Millionaire's Revenge," which was given by the Fenberg Stock Company last night is written around the killing of Stanford White by Harry K. Thaw, and what lead up to it. The story is changed somewhat for stage adaption but one easily recognizes the author's inspirations. The play was written by Owen Davis, previous to the trial of Thaw, and the boldness of theme and character creation aroused considerable comment and interest.

The piece was ably handled by the company last night and held the close attention of the large audience.

The specialties were all appreciated the hoop rolling of Chas. Hammond being a particularly attractive feature. He does not employ the stereotyped business of the average hoop roller but does such surprisingly original and difficult work that one would think the hoops were actually endowed with intelligence.

MINIATURE WAR BETWEEN THE MILK DEALERS HERE

Milk is selling in Peterborough at five and six cents per quart. Some new-comers in the field have cut the price to five cents, but the others have not followed suit.

"I am going to sell at six cents per quart during the summer," said a milkman to the Review to-day. "There is no money in supplying it at five cents and those who are doing so will not last."

There is somewhat of a miniature war going on between the dealers at the present time, and the outcome will be watched with interest by the householders.

STRANGE SCENES AT WEDDING OF NEW YORK SOCIETY PEOPLE

New York, April 21—The wedding reception held by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. P. Hemme late Saturday night was an undoubted success. Harlem will remember it for a long time, and the practical joker who engineered part of it can be found he will remember it too, says the Herald.

Mr Hemme was married to Miss Clara Smith at their home. About 50 persons were present and there were songs and merrymaking as midnight approached.

There came a ring at the door bell and Mr Smith, thinking that some belated friend had called, hastened to respond. Outside stood six negroes carrying packages, who politely explained that they were from the caterer and had come supplied with silver and table linen to serve the supper. Mr. Smith had just explained that there was a mistake somewhere when two boys toiled up the stairs with a huge hammer and a bill for $12. They announced that they had come from a delicatessen store.

Mr. Smith was beginning to be interested, but further argument was interrupted by the arrival of a man from a grocery, who demanded $5 and set down a basket containing fruits and fancy table supplies. He was followed by a butcher boy, who was loaded down with a full consignment of expensive poultry. Then two stalwart youths appeared bearing a box between them which contained a dozen bottles of whiskey and a half dozen of champagne. Also they produced an ornamented pig's head, which they said had been ordered at a nearby saloon.

Mr. Smith had been reduced to a state of speechless wrath and was vainly trying to wave the army of intruders aside when two solemn individuals in black reached the landing and inquired in sepulchral tones if they should arrange the funeral. They came from an undertaking establishment and had a wagon outside filled with chairs and other paraphernalia.

The real wedding guests now swarmed out to the hallway, when there came the insistent clanging of a bell. Dr Goderich Smith, ambulance surgeon of Harlem hospital, came charging up the stairs, satchel in hand, and demanded to know, "where was the man who had been shot."

The question was never answered. About three minutes before word had been received in the East 104th street police station that three persons had been shot at the Smith house and that the murderer was struggling with a crowd in an attempt to escape. Captain Morris had hurried every available man into a patrol wagon. Policemen to the number of 22 now poured up the stairs, mounted to the roofs of adjoining buildings and took up positions to assure the capture of the murderer.

Then came the climax. With guests waiters, delivery boys, undertakers, physicians and policemen all talking at once the street outside resounded to the crash and rattle of fire engines and 30 firemen appeared on the scene, each of whom picked up the nearest uniformed person present and started downstairs.

It took three hours to straighten out the tangle and compose a list of grievances. And when it was all over Mr. and Mrs. Hemme had reached the conclusion that they were very much married.

Mr Smith's opinion is an exclamatory secret.

MISS EDITH MILLER A FAVORITE OF THE CONCERT STAGE

Miss Edith Miller, who sings at the Conservatory music Hall tonight, has had a most successful career on the concert stage and has a contralto voice of rich quality and perfect culture. She is a Canadian by birth and her beautiful voice and interesting personality aroused the interest of Lord Strathcona to the extent that he saw to it that she had the best of musical educations and her triumphs since have proven that the interest he displayed was justified in the fullest sense of the word and Miss Miller is now regarded as one of the leading contralto soloists before the public and has won the unanimous approval of the most intelligent and critical audience.

The other artists of the company are of the highest in the musical and and artistic centres.

The company appeared to a capacity audience in Kingston last night and tomorrow will give a concert at Montreal, under the patronage of Earl Grey.

THINKS MARTIANS MAY HAVE BEEN SIGNALLING US

Paris, April 21—While Prof. Pickering at Harvard is reported to have proposed a plan for signalling to the planet Mars by means of large mirrors, Martians are probably already signalling to us. In the opinion of M. Camille Flammarion, "every condition points to the probability that Mars is inhabited by animal life."

He said today, "but the time probably has not yet come for us successfully to signal them. It may be that they long have been signalling us. All cosmological studies go to show that Mars is older and has attained a greater development than earth. The Martians are probably infinitely superior intellectually to us who have yet learned to conduct the simplest affairs, and spend three quarters of our resources in maintaining engines of destruction.

"Martians were probably trying to communicate with the earth millions of years ago before our mammoth and cavemen period. Never having received a reply they possibly concluded that the earth was not inhabited by creatures of intelligence. In my opinion communication will not be established in our time but perhaps will be at a far distant day."

THE EDITH MILLER CONCERT TO-NIGHT

A musical event of interest will be the concert at the Conservatory Music Hall this evening by Miss Edith Miller and the superb assisting artists, Mr Alfred Heather, tenor; Mr. Thorpe Bates, baritone, and Miss Maud Bell, cellist. Mr. Harold Craxton, the brilliant English pianist, is the conductor of the concert.

SATURDAY'S RACE AT NEW YORK

HENRY ST. YVES

ALFRED SHRUBB

Who Meet in a Fifteen Mile Race on Saturday Night.

GENERATIONS AGO SAW BETTER RUNNERS THAN NOW

The numerous Marathon races which are being run all over America, have started some of the old-timers digging up records and comparing walkers and runners of twenty-five years ago with those of to-day. There are few men better qualified to compare these Athletes than Harry O. Messer, one of the old-time pedestrians now making Milwaukee his home and getting out dope on such events. Messer, who has walked and ran in six-day race in all parts of Canada and the United States during the past twenty-five years, who says he has covered a distance of over 3,000 miles on the tan bark track during that time, defeating most of the best men in the world, says that in his opinion the present day runners and walkers do not class with the sprinters of the old school.

COULD BEAT LONGBOAT.

"I consider Len Hurst, the Englishman, who is now in New York city, in a class by himself, and at fifteen to twenty-five miles or even a Marathon distance, which is 26 miles 385 yards, Hurst can defeat such men as Tom Longboat, Dorando, Johnny Hayes, Sidney Hatch and others easy. At the present time I do not believe that any of the above men who are looked upon as present day champions, could have defeated such men as George Cartwright, of England, the world's champion at fifty miles, Peter Hegelman, Peter Golden, of New York; Tom Howarth, of Philadelphia; Gus Guerrere, the Mexican; John Hughes, of New York; John Hanrahan, of Boston; J. J. Engleman, of South Bend, Ind., or Dave Bennett, of Canada. I have run against these men in many races, and with the exception of Hanrahan I have defeated most of them and also have met defeat at their hands. I have seen these men run twenty-five or fifty miles without stopping, not only for one evening, but to keep it up for six days in races of four to eight or twelve hours daily.

"Thirty years ago Norman Taylor the vetern of the civil war, when 50 years old, ran twenty miles in Madison Square Garden, New York, in one hour and fifty-eight minutes. Taylor held the world's record at that time. He now lives in Minneapolis, and although he is nearly 80 years of age he runs frequently, for the enjoyment, from Minneapolis to St. Paul, a distance of ten miles, in less than two hours.

DORANDO AND COREY.

"While in Chicago recently I witnessed the Marathon race between Dorando and Albert Corey, and while Dorando ran a splendid race and deserves all the credit that goes to the winner, he was pretty nearly all in at the finish, and if called upon to run the same distance for six nights in succession, as the old-time pedestrians used to do, Dorando could not have done it. While he has the speed for a sprint race he has not the build for a long endurance race, such as was in vogue a score of years ago. As for Corey, he is a very poor type of runner, in fact he had no endurance and he seemed to lack the courage that an athlete must have when called upon to test his ability against a trained runner like Dorando. Corey has claimed several records, but I doubt very much whether he would be able to hold his own against several men I could mention. Corey must have known that he could not run the Marathon distance without stopping, and his excuse about a sprained ankle was a joke.

"In the old days the runners were always willing to take a chance, but now the runners want to be guaranteed everything in sight, and have it paid to them before the race, the same as many of the champion boxers. If they have another international Marathon race I hope the stars and stripes will be represented by men who have the courage, even if they have not the ability.

RAN FIFTY MILES.

"I remember that during a six-day race of eight hours daily at Manchester, N.H., the week of February 3, 1890, sixteen of the best runners of this country took part. Cartwright and myself ran fifty miles without a stop the first day. Cartwright ran 56 in eight hours, and by so doing won first place. We must look back to Charley Rowell, the Englishman, who ran 100 miles in 13 hours 26 minutes and 30 seconds, and 150 miles in 24 hours on February 27, 1882, at Madison Square Garden, New York. This remarkable feat was performed on the first day of the six-day go-as-you-please race against such men as Johnny Hughes and others. Hughes made 150 miles in the first 24 hours, but Rowell managed to lead by a few yards, and therefore holds the record. Both men ran themselves off their feet in that time, and neither won the race, as at the end of the third day they were forced to retire.

George Littlewood, of England, who holds the 142 hour record of 623 miles and James Alberts, of Philadelphia, who holds the American record of 521 miles, have never been touched at such distances. The old-timers used to train from three to six months, while the present day athletes train two or three weeks for a contest. The records show for this as to the two best runners and it is all in favor of the old-timers."

WHAT ABOUT A SCHOOL BALL LEAGUE HERE THIS SEASON

A school baseball league is one important branch of organized ball that is being neglected in Peterborough this season. It is important in the sense that the game not only encourages healthy competition among the youngsters, but is perhaps the best school for the development of good players, and it seems hardly fair to the juvenile enthusiasts interested that their cause should be neglected.

St. Peter's hold the pennant for the championship of the league, and if someone would donate a championship trophy an interest would no doubt be stimulated, and the league would again enjoy an active season. It is desirable that steps towards the formation of the league should be taken at once.

RECORD RECEIPTS

$38,823 Taken in at Gotch-Mahmout Match—Mahmout Sails.

Chicago, Ill., April 20.—It was good-bye to Mahmout and Pierri this afternoon. The Turk and his manager took a train at 5.30 o'clock for New York, thence to sail at once for England. Both will go to Bulgaria, Mahmout's home.

The wrestler himself, defeated by Frank Gotch in the titular match on Wednesday night, is much cast down by his defeat, although he is trying to put a cheerful face on the situation. He will take a large number of good American dollars east with him and after getting them changed into the native coin of his own realm, doubtless will have enough on which to live comfortably for the remainder of his days. It would be hard to say how much he has accumulated since he has been in this country.

Mahmout has a wife and child in Bulgaria, and it is said to be his ambition to buy a farm, just like Gotch has done with his winnings. He is telling his friends that he does not care to wrestle any more, but they say that is only the talk of a disheartened man. Pierri is different. He is wilder than ever to get Gotch beaten, and said this afternoon he intended to bring over not one, but two more Turks, bigger and better than Mahmout. He says he will make the necessary arrangements during the summer and land in America not later than September, prepared to wager a good sum that one of his men can defeat the Iowa farmer.

Pierri is angry at the Empire Athletic Club's position regarding the $500 forfeit. Pierri had to pay the money and now he believes that it is the place of the club to pay this, inasmuch as it was a bad piece of matchmaking that brought up the quarrel about the shoes. He says that if he succeeded in getting on another match with Gotch he will do no business with the men who form the Empire Club.

One man is deeply disappointed at Mahmout's departure. That man is Dr. B. F. Roller, of Seattle, Wash., the college graduate, who is considered among the greatest of American heavyweight athletes. He wanted to get a crack at the Turk, believing that he has a good chance of defeating him.

"Never let anybody say that that wasn't a good wrestling match," Dr. Roller said today. "There was some of the finest kind of wrestling crowded into those seventeen minutes, and let me say further that the Turk is really a great wrestler. But Gotch sticks out so far and knows so much great wrestling that he can make almost anybody look cheap."

Gotch made his farewell appearance in Chicago for a few months Saturday night in a handicap match at the Empire Theatre. The champion left today for a tour of the west. He will begin his theatrical work in Iowa and show before his home friends and then continue his tour to the coast, meeting all comers on the stage.

The Empire Athletic Club, which promoted the match between Frank Gotch and Yussiff Mahmout, has issued a statement of the receipts and the earnings of each man. The figures doubtless form new records in wrestling history, as the crowd which picked every seat and available space in the big arena was by all odds the largest that ever saw a similar event in this country. Following are the figures:

Gross receipts, $38,823.00.

Gotch's 35 per cent. as winner of the match, $13,588.05.

Total for Gotch, including Turk's forfeit, $14,088.05.

Turk's 25 per cent. as loser of match, $9,705.75.

Turk's share, less his forfeit, $9,205.75.

Gross for Empire Athletic Club, $15,530.00.

Estimated expenses conducting show exclusive of amount paid the principals, $5,500.00.

Probable net profits, $10,000.

SPORTING TALK

Leon Koyl and Clifford Sullivan are leaving Lindsay to reside in Saskatoon. They were presented with a Bible and hymn book by the Sunday school class to which they have belonged, and all expressed regret at the coming departure of the young men and wished them success in their new home.

Peterborough can also get in on this. Both young men have a host of friends in this city, who will join with Lindsay in wishing their hockey boys all success in the west.

Fred Appleby will challenge the winner of the Shrubb-St. Yves race, which takes place at New York Saturday night.

The Edmonton Hockey Club Executive has decided to enter another challenge for the Stanley Cup. Lay down Fred Whitcroft.

Sir Thomas Lipton will challenge for the America Cup in August.

Cy Young never won an opening game until this year, when he pitched Cleveland to victory.

It is surprising how much of the doings of Tom Longboat are known to his less illustrious fellow Indians. Though many miles from settlements where daily papers can be secured, the Indians manage to find out how fares it with Longboat.

"Hello, Longboat!" someone shouted to a dusky and high-cheeked-boned muskrat trapper.

"Longboat, he no good now," was the reply.

This was after the Marathon derby.

Even the little fellows, just out of their papoose days, know the names of various Marathoners besides Longboat, Shrubb, probably, is a name better known to them than others, probably because it is more easily pronounced than Svanberg, St. Yves Dorando Pietri or others.—Lindsay Warder.

NO MEETING LAST EVENING

Only One Team Was Represented at Senior Baseball Meeting—Will be Held Later

The meeting of the senior city base ball league that was to have been held last evening at the YMCA. did not materialize. The TAS. was the only team represented and as a result another meeting will be called for in the near future.

Important business necessitated the representatives who were present at the last meeting being called elsewhere, but they have notified the secretary that they will be on hand at the next meeting or send some other representative.

In the meantime it is up to the teams to get out and practice hard so that they will be in good shape when the season opens.

The fans of the city are greatly pleased as a result of the league being formed and are as anxious as the players themselves to hear the cry of the umpires, "Play ball."

ATHLETICS

Next Tuesday night at 7.30, a one mile run will be held by the YMCA. All business boys of the association are invited to take part.

On Thursday night at 7.30 the business boys of the YMCA. will hold a wrestling tournament to which all boys of the association are also invited to take part.

BASEBALL

Today the baseball season of the Eastern league will be inaugurated. Toronto will play at Newark, Montreal at Providence, Buffalo at Jersey City and Rochester at Baltimore. According to the statements of the respective managers they all expect to land the bunting at the close of the season. This is only natural as a big supply of confidence is half the game. The fans of this city will await with interest the doings of the Toronto Maple Leafs with Joe Kelly at the helm again. One thing is certain, the team that will represent Toronto this year as well as its manager will be expected to do big things, and it will be a bad day for them if they fail to deliver the goods.

Russian Vengeance.

The Russian revolutionaries have absolutely no mercy on those who betray them. It is well known that in the year 1903 a traitor caught at Odessa was bricked up alive in a cellar.

Regnier, a French spy in the pay of the Russian police, for a long time eluded the vengeance of the revolutionaries. But they caught him at last, and that just at the moment when he fancied himself safe. His body was found in his cabin on a ship which reached Antwerp. He had been suffocated by fumes of sulphureted hydrogen. How this was done was never discovered.

The Considerate Clock.

"One kiss!" pleaded a departing lover.

"Nonsense!" exclaimed his fiancee in a teasing mood. "Some one might see us."

"Who?"

"Why, the clock; it has a face."

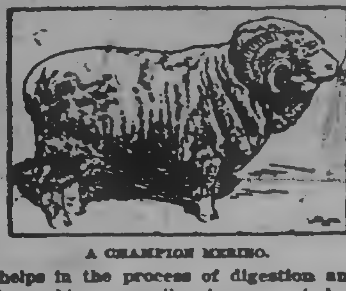
"Yes, but it keeps its hands in front of it!"

CARE OF THE RAM.

Exercise and Fresh Air Necessary to Keep Him Vigorous.

After the breeding season is over the ram needs some care and attention. This does not mean that he should be shut up in a warm, snug barn where never a blast will strike him nor that he shall be fed in bounteous supply the best that nature affords. He must be kept strong and healthy, and this he will not be if he is kept penned up and rolling in fat.

His most imperative need is exercise. This keeps his muscles strong and active, produces good circulation, helps in the process of digestion and keeps him generally vigorous. A hothouse ram, not able to resist cold or exposure, is a worthless article.



A CHAMPION MERINO.

Secondly, he needs good clover hay or corn stover, roots and only a little grain. Such feeds serve to maintain without fattening him. He has little to do the rest of the winter but to make wool, and, while he should not be starved, he certainly need not be stuffed. What he needs after the breeding season are about the things the ewes are getting.

Probably the easiest and best way to take care of him is to turn him in with them and let him enjoy their company as well as their food and exercise, since all will soon be bred.

Separator Helps.

The milk will separate best when it is yet a little warm. It is better that it be warm from the cow than that it should be left to get cold and then be warmed on the fire.

The separator can do better work and there will be less wear if it stands on a perfectly level base. It should be tried with the level occasionally, for the continual use of it is apt to get it to lean.

It is well to run a little lukewarm water through the separator just before letting the milk through. This will warm and wet the disks and all the inside working parts where the milk goes and will prevent the cream from adhering to them.

Handling a Vicious Bull.

The safest way to handle an ugly bull is to first blindfold him. Nothing takes the conceit out of a bull so quick as to deprive him of sight. It is a question whether a man is justified in keeping a bull that is known to be ugly, but sometimes animals that are otherwise very valuable get cross, and it is not always policy to turn them over to the butcher. By building a strong bull pen with convenience for handling such an animal he may be kept for two or three years in comparative safety.

THE HORSEMAN.

In Holland horses are fed the following daily rations with great success: Oats, 13 pounds; hay, 6.6 pounds; straw, 8.8 pounds.

Grease Heel in Horses.

A breeder gives the following remedy for grease heel in horses: Wash the parts with strong soapsuds, then use a mixture of carbolic acid, one ounce; glycerin, two ounces; olive oil, eight ounces. In case this does not stop the itching dissolve a half ounce of sugar of lead in a half pint of soft water and use twice a day.

Selecting the Stallion.

Nothing could be more shortsighted than the false economical policy practiced by so many mare owners in their selection of the stallion. It should be borne in mind that "like begets like," and in order to produce the best one must breed to the best. There can be no dependence placed on the occasional chance occurrence of a nick which results in a superior offspring from an ordinary parentage. It takes but a perusal of the market quotations to convince any one that there is money in horses if they are of the right sort.

Exercise For Horses.

More horses are injured by enforced idleness than by work. Days that horses are not at work they should run in the yard. Their hair may not lie quite as close and even be a little longer, but they will keep healthier and be in much better shape for the season's work for having their regular exercise every day either in the harness or out in the yard.

Mares Nursing Foals.

A breeder considers the following the best ration for mares nursing foals: Oats and bran in equal bulk, with about one-fourth in bulk of corn added, make a good ration for a mare in milk. This should always be moistened before feeding. The idea is to give a ration that not only increases the flow of milk, but materially enriches it.

Blindness in Horses.

The walk or step of a blind horse is always uncertain and unequal, so that he does not set down his feet boldly, when led by hand. Another sign by which you may know a horse that has lost his sight is that when he hears any one enter the stable he will prick up his ears and move them backward and forward. The reason is that a vigorous horse, having lost his sight, mistrusts everything and is continually in alarm at the least noise he hears.

The Lake Seamen's Union went on strike Monday because the lake carriers insist on "open shop."

What Dropping Water Can Do.

One of the Chinese modes of punishment is to place the culprit where a drop of water will fall on his head for hours, or even for days if he can stand it so long. The torture this inflicts is proved by an experience that Col. Fred Burnaby had in Vienna several years ago. A school teacher bet him that he would not be able to let a pint of water, drop by drop, fall on his hand. Burnaby laughed at the very idea of his not being able to stand it, and the test began.

Although the strong man talked and jested gaily at first, it was not long before he began to show signs of distress. At about the two hundredth drop—for the school teacher kept tally—an expression of pain crossed his face.

When the third hundred had been entered his hand began to swell and grow red. Then the skin burst and the pain grew more and more excruciating. Finally, at the four hundred and twentieth drop, Burnaby gave it up and acknowledged himself beaten.

Is Fastest Ship Afloat.

A wonderful performance was accomplished recently by the new British destroyer Swift in trials on the Clyde.

After having had new wing propellers fitted she steamed up to thirty-six knots, but under pressure two more knots were run off—equal to forty-three land miles an hour.

The Swift may thus claim to be the fastest ship afloat. She was built by Cammell, Laird & Co., of Birkenhead, and is described as an "experimental" destroyer.

As a matter of fact, she is twice the size of the usual ocean-going destroyers, and her special business is the destruction of destroyers. She was designed to accomplish thirty-six knots. The Swift came out of dry dock at Greenock.

Virago.

The word "virago," which dictionaries now define as meaning "a bold, impudent, turbulent woman, a termagant," originally signified, both by derivation and in use, just a manly woman, in the sense of a heroine or amazon. When Plautus spoke of a servant maid as a "virago," he merely meant that she was a strapipng young woman, and the Romans applied the word with no intention of irreverent rudeness to Diana and Minerva. The Vulgate even has "virago" simply for woman, as the name given by Adam to his helpmate. In Latin the word never became twisted into the unkindly sense that has come about in English.—London Notes and Queries.

Work of Large and Small Cows.

Small cows consume relatively more feed and produce more dairy products than large ones. The Jerseys per thousand pounds live weight consumed daily during the St. Louis dairy demonstration on an average 17 per cent more nutriment than the Holsteins, 20 per cent more than the Swiss and over 50 per cent more than the Shorthorns, but they returned 43 per cent more butter fat than the Holsteins, 70 per cent more than the Swiss and 100 per cent more than the Shorthorns.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 1909.

WARSAW NEWS

Warsaw, April 20—Mr Levi Payne of the firm of Clements and Payne, was in Peterborough on Saturday on business.

Mr and Mrs Chas Boyne were visiting friends in Douro on Thursday.

Miss E Swann of the Public school staff is back again after spending a week in Havelock.

Miss Ada Payne of Galesburg, who has been visiting friends here during the past week returned home.

Mr. Jas Bowie, butcher of Lang, makes his weekly trips to the village every Wednesday.

Several flocks of wild geese have been seen hovering around the village during the past week.

Apparently the poor birds were in doubt as to whether spring was here for good or not, at any rate they must not have known that we had a rifle club here.

We had a heavy thunder during the rain on Friday night. However no damage was done other than two young men who had called to see their sweethearts did not get home that night. They were afraid of the thunder. Wouldn't you!

The merchants of the village report that this year is as good a year as last for furniture and wedding presents. Cheer up merchants. A leap year comes but once in four.

Miss S Maloney, school teacher has returned after spending her Easter holidays in Downeyville.

Miss L Maloney, who has been attending Collegiate Institute in Peterborough was home for the Easter holidays.

Mr. Arch Hawthorne who has been spending his Easter holidays with his parents here, has returned to school at Norwood.

Mr. Albert Helms is building a new brick residence on Water street, next door north of the Bank of Montreal.

Miss M. Nesbitt of the Warsaw public school staff has returned after spending her Easter holiday with friends in Westwood.

Mr. Daniel Kennedy has engaged for a term with Mr D. Moloney.

The heavy rains on Monday morning found Mr. Walter Neival, our new stage driver, well prepared to meet it. Mr Newal has got a new stage which looks extremely gay and might with justice be titled "The Warsaw Pullman." It has a beautiful red gear, and a jet black box, beautifully striped and finished It has seating room from 6 to 8 passengers on its 3 seats, which are beautifully trimmed and cushioned. It has a top, closed is with best black rubber cloth, and no matter how heavy the rain is, Mr. Newal's passengers can enjoy their trip from the county town to the Dummer capital.

The village is losing one of its old land marks in the tearing down of the old Forester's hall, which has been believed to be unsafe, owing to the sinking of the foundation. The grand old structure has stood on the hill looking down on the village for almost a half century. Its shining spire which glittered with the last rays of sunset, has been a sure token, and has been looked upon for generations by the villagers as a dial to tell when the sun had sunk behind the western horizon.

The Barrier

By Rex Beach

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

Stark was almost constantly occupied at his saloon, for it was a mint and ran day and night. Runnion was busy with the erection of a substantial structure of squared logs, larger than the trading post, destined as a dance hall, theater and gambling house.

Burrell entered into a season of penance and flagellation of spirit, lightened only by the moments when he was with Necia and when she made him forget all else. This damnable indecision goaded him to self contempt. He despised himself for his weakness. His social instincts and training, his sense of duty and the amenities of life that proud men hold dear tugged steadily, untiringly at his reason, while the little imp of impulse sat grinning wickedly, ready to pop out and upset all his high resolutions.

It was on a heavenly day, spiced with the faintest hint of autumn, that Necia received the news of her good fortune. One of her leasers came into the post to show her and Poleon a bag of dust. He and his partner had found the pay streak finally, and he had come to notify her that it gave promise of being very rich, and now that its location was demonstrated no doubt the other "laymen" would have it within a fortnight. As all of them were ready to begin sluicing as soon as the ground could be stripped, undoubtedly they would be able to take out a substantial stake before winter settled and the first frost closed them down.

She took the news quietly, but with shining eyes, though her pleasure was no greater or more genuine than Poleon's, who grasped both her hands in his and shouted gleefully:

"Bien! I'm glad! You'll be riche gal for sure now an' wear plaintee fine dress lak I fetch you. Jus' t'ink, you fin' gol' on your place more queecker dan your fader, an' he's good miner too. Ha! Dat's bully!"

"Oh, well, they will find it on your claims very soon," she replied.

He shook his head. "You better knock wood w'en you say dat. Mebbe I draw de blank again. Nobody can't tell. I've do de sam' t'ing before, an' dose men w'at been workin' my groun' dey're gettin' purty blue."

"When you do become a Flambeau king," she continued, "what will you do with yourself? Surely you won't continue that search for your far country. It could never be so beautiful as this." She pointed to the river that never changed and yet was never the same and to the forests, slightly tinged with the signs of the coming season.

"It's very fine," agreed the Canadian. "I don' see w'y anybody would care for livin' on dem cities w'en dere's so much nice place outside."

"Yes," said Necia, "I've no doubt one would get tired of it soon and long for something to do and something really worth while, but I should like to try it once, and I shall as soon as I'm rich enough. Won't you come along?"

"I don' know," he said thoughtfully. "Mebbe so I stay here, mebbe so I tak' my canoe an' go away. For long tam' I t'ink dis Flambeau she's de promis' lan' I hear callin' to me, but I don' know yet for w'ile."

"What kind of place is that land of yours, Poleon?"

"Ha! I never see 'im, but she's been cryin' to me ever since I'm little boy. It's a place w'ere I don' get too hot on de summer an' too col' on de winter; it's place w'ere birds sing an' flowers blossom an' de sun shine an' w'ere I can sleep widout dreamin' 'bout it all de tam'."

"Why, it's the land of content. You'll never discover it by travel. I'll tell you a secret, Poleon. I've found it—yes, I have. It lies here." She laid her hand on her breast. "Father Barnum told me the story of your people and how it lives in your blood—that hunger to find the far places. It's what drove the voyageur and coureur du bois from Quebec to Vancouver and from the Mississippi to Hudson bay. The wanderlust was their heritage, and they pushed on and on without rest, like the salmon in the spring, but they were different in this—that they never came back to die."

There was a look of great tenderness in his eyes as he bent toward her and searched her face, but she was not thinking of him, and at length he continued:

"Fader Barnum he's goin' be here nex' Sonday for cheer up dem Injun. Constantine she's got de letter."

"Do you know," said Necia wistfully, "I've always wanted him to marry me."

"You t'inkin' 'bout marry on some feller, eh?" said the other, with an odd grin. "Waal, w'y not? He'll be here all day an' night. S'pose you do it. Mos' anybody w'at ain' got some wife already will be glad for marry on you, an' mebbe some feller w'at has got wife too! If you don' lak dem an' if you're goin' marry on somebody, you can be wife to me."

Necia laughed lightly. "I believe you would marry me if I wanted you to. You've done everything else I've ever asked. But you needn't be afraid. I won't take you up." In all her life this man had never spoken of love to her, and she had no hint of the dream he cherished.

While they were talking a boat had drawn inshore and made fast to the bank in front of them. An Indian landed and, approaching, entered into talk with the Frenchman.

By and by Poleon turned to the girl and said:

"Dere's hondred marten skin come in. You min' de store w'ile I mak' trade wit' dis man."

Together the two went down to the boat, leaving Necia behind, and not long after Runnion sauntered up to the store and addressed her familiarly.

"Hello, Necia! I just heard about the strike on your claim. That's fine and dandy."

She acknowledged his congratulations curtly, for, although it was customary for most of the old timers to call her by her Christian name, she resented it from this man. She chose to let it pass, however.

"I had some good news last night myself," he continued. "One of my men has hit some good dirt, and we'll know what it means in a day or so. I'll gamble we're into the money big, though, for I always was a lucky cuss. Say, where's your father?"

"He's out at the mine."

"We've used up all of our bar sugar at the saloon, and I want to buy what you've got."

"Very well; I'll get it for you."

He followed her inside, watching her graceful movements and attempting, with his free and easy insolence, to make friendly advances; but, seeing that she refused to notice him, he became piqued and grew bolder.

"Look here, Necia; you're a mighty pretty girl. I've had my eye on you ever since I landed, and the more I see of you the better I like you."

"It isn't necessary to tell me that," she replied. "The price of sugar will be just the same."

"Yes, and you're bright, too," he declared. "That's what I like in a woman—good looks and brains. I believe in strong methods and straight talk, too—none of this serenading and moonlight mush for me. When I see a girl I like I go and get her. That's me. I make love like a man ought to."

The girl laughed derisively in his face.

"Now, don't get sore. I mean business. I'm no soft talking southerner with gold buttons and highfalutin ways. I don't care if you are a squaw, I'll take you."

"Don't talk to me!" she cried in disgust, her voice hot with anger and resentment.

But he continued, unheeding: "Now, cut out these airs and get down to cases. I mean what I say. I know you've been casting sheep's eyes at Burrell; but, Lord, he wouldn't have you, no matter how rich you get! Of course you acted careless in going off alone with him, but I don't mind what they're saying around camp, for I've made little slips like that myself, and we'd get along."

"I'll have you killed!" she hissed through her clinched teeth, while her whole body vibrated with passion. "I'll call Poleon and have him shoot you!" She pointed to the river bank a hundred yards away, where the Canadian was busy assorting skins.

But he only laughed at her show of temper and shrugged his shoulders as he answered her roughly:

"Understand me, I'm on the square. So think it over and don't go up in the air like a skyrocket."

She cried out at him "Go—go—go!" and finally he took up his bundle, saying as he stepped out slowly:

"All right! But I'm coming back, and you'll have to listen to me. I don't mind being called a squaw man. You're pretty near white, and you're good enough for me. I'll treat you right. Why, I'll even marry you if you're dead set on it. Sure!"

She could scarcely breathe, but checked her first inclination to call Poleon, knowing that it needed only a word from her to set that nut brown savage at Runnion's throat. Other thoughts began to crowd her brain and to stifle her. The fellow's words had stabbed her consciousness and done something for her that gentler means would not have accomplished. They had opened her eyes to a thing that she had forgotten—a hideous thing that had reared its fangs once before to strike, but that her dreams of happiness had driven out of her Eden. All at once she saw the wrong that had been done her and realized from this brute's insult that those early fears had been well grounded. It suddenly occurred to her that in all the hours she had spent with her lover, in all those unspeakably sweet and intimate hours, there had never been one word of marriage. He had looked into her eyes and vowed he could not live without her, and yet he had never said the words he should have said, the words that would bind her to him. His arms and his lips had comforted her and stilled her fears; but, after all, he had merely made love. A cold fear crept over the girl. She recalled the old corporal's words of a few weeks ago, and her conversation with Stark came back to her. What if it were true—that which Runnion implied? What if he did not intend to ask her, after all? What if he had only been amusing himself? She cried out sharply at this, and when Doret staggered in beneath a great load of skins he found her in a strange excitement. When he had finished his accounting with the Indian and dismissed him she turned an agitated face to the Frenchman.

"Poleon," she said, "I'm in trouble. Oh, I'm in such awful trouble!"

"It's dat Runnion! I seen 'im pass on de store w'ile I'm down below." His brows knit in a black scowl, and his voice slid off a pitch in tone. "W'at he say, eh?"

"No, no; it's not that. He paid me a great compliment." She laughed harshly. "Why, he asked me to marry him." The man beside her cursed at this, but she continued: "Don't blame him for liking me. I'm the only woman for 500 miles around—or I was until this crowd came—so how could he help himself? No; he merely showed me what a fool I've been."

"I guess you better tell me all 'bout dis t'ing," said Poleon gravely. "You know I'm all tam' ready for help you, Necia. W'en you was little feller an' got bust your finger you run to me queeck, an' I feex it."

"Yes, I know, dear Poleon," she assented gratefully. "You've been a brother to me, and I need you now more than I ever needed you before. I can't go to father. He wouldn't understand, or else he would understand too much and spoil it all, his temper is so quick. Don't think I'm unwomanly, Poleon, for I'm not. I may be foolish and faithful and too trusting, but I'm not—unmaidenly. You see, I've never been like other girls, and he was so fine, so different, he made me love him. It's part of a soldier's training, I suppose. It was so sweet to be near him and to hear him tell of himself and all the world he knows. I just let myself drift. I'm afraid—I'm afraid I listened too well and my ears heard more than he said. My head is so full of books, you know."

"He should have know' dat, too," said Poleon.

"Yes," she flared up. "He knew I was only an Indian girl."

The only color in Doret's face lay now in his cheeks, where the sun had put it, but he smiled at her—his warm, engaging smile—and laid his great brown hand upon her shoulder softly.

"I've look' in bees eye an' I'm always t'ink he's good man. I don' never t'ink he'll mak' fun of poor little gal."

"But he has, Poleon. That's just what he has done." She came near to breaking down and finished pathetically. "They're telling the story on the street, so Runnion says."

"Dat's easy t'ing for feex," he said. "Runnion she don' spread no more story lak' dat."

"I don't care what they say. I want the truth. I want to know what he means, what his intentions are. He swears he loves me, and yet he has never asked me to marry him. He has gone too far. He has made a fool of me to amuse himself, and—and I couldn't see it until today. He's laughing at me, Poleon; he's laughing at me now! Oh, I can't bear it!"

The Frenchman took up his wide hat from the counter and placed it carefully upon his head, but she stopped him as he moved toward the door, for she read the meaning of the glare in his eyes.

"Wait till you understand—wait, I say! He hasn't done anything yet."

"Dat's de trouble. I'm goin' mak' 'im do somet'in'."

"No, no! It isn't that. It's these doubts that are killing me. I'm not sure"—

"I hear plaintee," he said. "Dere's no tam' for monkey roun'."

"I tell you he may be honest," she declared. "He may mean to marry me, but I've got to know. That's why I came to you. That's what you must find out for me."

"I'm good trader, Necia," said the Canadian after a moment. "I'll mak' bargain wit' you now. If he say yes he'll marry you I don' ask no more, but if he say no you geeve 'im to me. Is it go?"

She hesitated, while he continued musingly, "I don' see how no man on all dis worl' could let' you go," then to her, "Waal, is it bargain?"

"Yes," she said, the Indian blood speaking now, "but you must learn the truth. There must be no mistake. That would be terrible."

"Dere ain' goin' be no mistak'."

"If he should refuse I—I'll marry some one quick. I won't be laughed at by this camp. I won't be a joke. Oh, Poleon! I've given myself to him just as truly as if—well, he—he has taken my first kiss."

Doret smote his hands together at this and began to roll his head backward from side to side as if in some great pain, but his lips were dry and silent. After a moment the spell left him, the fire died down, leaving only a dumb agony in its place. She came closer and continued:

"I'll never let them point at me and say, 'There goes the squaw that—he threw away.'"

"You mak' dis very hard t'ing for me," he said wearily.

"Listen," she went on, lashing herself with pity and scorn. "You say Father Barnum will be here on Sunday. Well, I'll marry some one, I don't care who!" Then, with a sudden inspiration, she cried: "I'll marry you. You said I could be a wife to you!"

He uttered a sharp cry. "You mean dat, Necia?"

"Yes," she declared. "Why not! You'll do it for my sake, won't you?"

"Would you stan' up wit' me 'longside of de pries', lovin' dat oder feller all de tam'?" he asked queerly.

"Yes, yes! I'd rather it was you than anybody, but married I'll be on Sunday. I'll never let them laugh at me."

Doret held his silence for a moment; then he looked up and said in level tones:

"It's easy t'ing for go an' ask 'im, but you mus' hear bees answer wit' your own ears; den you can't t'ink I'm lyin'. I'll fetch 'im 'ere on dis place if you feex it for hide you'se'f behin' dose post." He indicated a bundle of furs that were suspended against a pillar and that offered ample room for concealment. "Dere's goin' be no lies today."

He pulled himself together and went out with the tired gait of an old man, his great shock head bowed low. A few moments later he returned.

"I've sent li'l' Jean for 'im. You get in dere out of sight—an' wait."

CHAPTER XII.

A TANGLED SKEIN.

When Burrell entered he wasted no time in greetings.

"I know why you sent for me, Poleon. I've heard the news, and I would have been up anyhow to congratulate her very soon. I call it pretty fine."

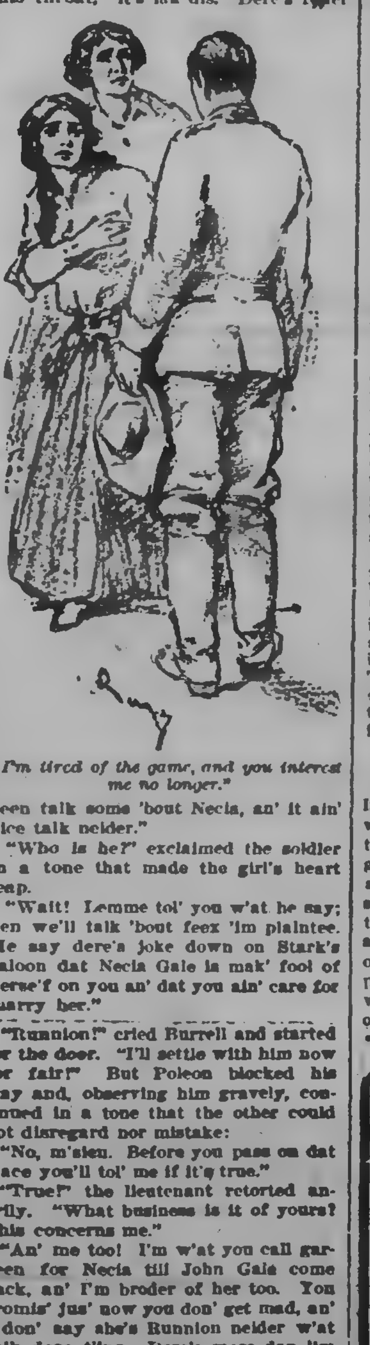
"Yes, dere's been beeg strike all right, an' Necia is goin' be riche gal."

"I'm as pleased as if the claim were mine, and you feel the same way, of course."

"You know me for good man, eh? An' you know I ain' try for bre'k up oder fellers' bisnesse, never! Waal, I'm come to you now lak wan good man to 'noder, biccause I'm got bad trouble on da min', an' you mus'n't get sore."

"There's no danger, Poleon. Let's have it. If there is anything I can do you may count on me."

"Waal," he began nervously, clearing his throat, "it's lak dis. Dere's feller been talk some 'bout Necia, an' it ain' nice talk neider."



"I'm tired of the game, and you interest me no longer."

"Who is he?" exclaimed the soldier in a tone that made the girl's heart leap.

"Wait! Lemme tol' you w'at he say; den we'll talk 'bout feex 'im plaintee. He say dere's joke down on Stark's saloon dat Necia Gale is mak' fool of herse'f on you an' dat you ain' care for marry her."

"Runnion!" cried Burrell and started for the door. "I'll settle with him now for fair!" But Poleon blocked his way and, observing him gravely, continued in a tone that the other could not disregard nor mistake:

"No, m'sieu. Before you pass on dat place you'll tol' me if it's true."

"True!" the lieutenant retorted angrily. "What business is it of yours? This concerns me."

"An' me too! I'm w'at you call gardeen for Necia till John Gale come back, an' I'm broder of her too. You promis' jus' now you don' get mad, an' I don' say she's Runnion neider w'at spik dose t'ing. Dere's more dan 'im been talkin'. Is it true?"

His sternness offended Burrell, for the soldier was not the kind to discuss his affairs in this way; therefore he drew back, scowling.

"Poleon Doret," he said, "it's not one's enemies who do him injury; it's his d——d fool friends. I have learned to regard you highly, because you are a brave man and an honest one, but it seems that you are a sentimental idiot."

"Dem is tough word," Doret replied. "But dere's reason w'y I can't tak' on no madness. You say I'm hones'. Waal, I'm hones' now, an' I come to you wit' fair words, an' I show my han' to you—I don' hol' out no cards, m'sieu'—but I don' t'ink it is you who have play square altogeder. I'm Necia's frien', an' I'll fight for her jus' so queecker lak you, but I mus' know dis t'ing for sure, so if you have de good heart an' de courage of good man you'll tell me de truth. Do you have the feelin' for marry on her?"

The pause that followed was awkward for both of them, while the girl, who stood concealed near by, held her breath and buried her nails in her palms. Why did he hesitate? Would he never speak?

"I am amazed at myself for listening to you," he said at last, "and quite shocked, in fact, at my answering your questions, but perhaps I'd better, after all. First, however, let me say that the little girl is just as pure now as she was before she knew me."

CUTS

BURNS & SKIN INJURIES

Zam-Buk is used by eminent doctors in serious cases, is applied to the gravest cases of eczema and blood-poisoning, and is widely used in the Army and Navy. BUT, Zam-Buk is just as useful for cuts, burns, and bruises, sustained by the housewife in the kitchen, as for the serious wounds sustained by the soldier!

Children, too, like Zam-Buk, because it stops the smarting of a cut, or burn, or scratch, so quickly.

Zam-Buk combines the "Doctor" and the "Insurance Co." Applied to a cut, a barbed-wire scratch, or a wound filled with dirt or dye, it kills all the poison and disease germs, and "insures" you against all danger from blood-poisoning. At the same time, it stimulates the cells to rapid action, and heals the injury in quick time.

Zam-Buk cures eczema, scalp-sores, ringworm, eruptions, festering sores, blood-poisoning, open wounds, boils, abscesses, varicose ulcers, and all diseases of the skin and tissue.

All Druggists and Stores sell at 50c. box, three for $1.25, or post-free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

Freak Dress In Paris.

As a rebuke to the Directoire gowns and huge hats women intellectuals of Paris are appearing on the boulevards clothed in all the simplicity of the fifteen century dresses and in trousseau.

Chief among them is Mme. Dieulafoy, who adopted masculine dress for its convenience when accompanying her husband on his archaeological travels, and has retained it ever since. Then there is Mme. do Montifaut, who is a familiar figure in the newspaper world of Paris, with her bowler hat and short boxcoat, below which appear the tails of an undercoat.

Prominent among Parisian ladies of letters who dress in the modes of bygone days is Mme. Georgette Leblanc (Mme. Maeterlinck), who has before now appeared at the theatre in a Louise XVI costume—a gown of flowered silk, with pointed bodice, panniers and voluminous coiffure. As a rule, however, Mme. Leblanc affects a "Byzantine" fashion. She shares this taste with Mme. Edmond Rostand, the wife of the Academician, and herself a poet, whose velvet gowns, falling in straight lines from shoulder to hem, with antique girdle, have inspired more than one painter.

Another authoress who affects Byzantine dress is the Baroness Deslandes, first wife of the Prince de Broglie, who appeared not long ago in American vaudeville, who always attends balls with her hair hanging in unconfined masses down her back. The Countesse de Notilles, whose charming verse has caught the antique spirit, also follows the Byzantine fashion.

Tightening Fences.

For tightening barbed or other wire in long lengths the farm wagon is a very handy and efficient tool. One of the rear wheels is raised from the ground, and the wire is passed once around the hub and fastened to a spoke of the wheel. The wagon is then braced by any suitable means and the wheel turned in the manner of the mariner's wheel. In this way a pull of a hundred pounds on the tire will exert a force of 400 or 500 pounds on the wire.

Willard S Berby aged 82, of Brockville was killed while changing a belt on a pulley with a stick.

William Bowman says he transferred the picnic grounds at Port Stanley to London forty years ago, but the deed has been lost and was never registered.

ASSAULT CHARGE AGAINST CHIEF HOWARD DISMISSED; FINE IMPOSED ON REYNOLDS

Police Court Cases Which Resulted From Trouble at the Fire Station Were Heard This Morning—Chief Was Charged With Assault and Reynolds With Trespass.

The case of Chief Howard, who charged Frank Reynolds with trespass and the counter charge of Reynolds, charging Chief Howard with assault was heard at the police court this morning. The trial lasted about three hours and resulted in Chief Howard being acquitted on the assault case and Reynolds was fined $5 and costs amounting in all to $7.60, which was paid by him.

The cause of the trouble arose over Reynolds, who was formerly a fireman coming around the fire station while under the influence of liquor and causing a disturbance. Chief Howard withstood this as long as any other person in a similar position could be expected to, but Reynolds persisted. The Chief then wrote a letter to Reynolds in which he was politely asked to keep away from the station or the matter would be placed in the hands of the authorities. Reynolds did not appear to take any heed to this letter and when he went to the fire station on the night of April 3rd, an altercation arose between he and the chief with the result that Reynolds was forcibly put out of that place.

Mr. R. F. McWilliams appeared in the interests of Reynolds and Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the case for Chief Howard.

Mr. E H D. Hall, city solicitor, was present in the interests of the city.

The trespass case was called first and the first witness was

CHIEF HOWARD,

who said he knew accused, and he had been at the fire station on the date mentioned. A copy of the letter that he had written to Reynolds warning him not to come around the premises was produced and the accused identified it. The Chief said that Reynolds came into the billiard room, situated on the second floor of the building. He,—the Chief— requested the accused to leave the room. Reynolds answered "I got your letter" and used some uncomplimentary remarks after which the Chief advised him to go away from the premises as he must not come around in the condition he then showed. Accused appeared to be under the influence of liquor. Reynolds used the words, "I can clean up on anything around this joint." He acted like a man who had been drinking for some considerable time. Reynolds did not make any move to leave and walked over to Deputy Chief Grange. He —the Chief —repeated the request that Reynolds leave the fire station but accused struck at him. He guarded himself and knocked Reynolds down and then walked away leaving the accused lying on the floor. Reynolds got up and ran after him with the evident intention of striking him again. He let him up and knocked him down again and then picked him up and told him to get out and never come back again. He took hold of accused and put him out on the sidewalk, after which Reynolds attempted to land on the Chief again. Reynolds had been in the habit of coming in late at night much to the interference of the firemen in the discharge of their duties and had been warned twice before the letter was written. On the night of February 15th accused had caused such a disturbance that the police had to be called.

Chief Howard requested the Chief of Police to take the matter in hand but had been told to write Reynolds a letter and he had done so.

Accused's counsel objected to the witness giving any more evidence as to receiving instructions to deal with the case. The objection was allowed

THOMPSON NEILL

Witness remembered Reynolds coming in to the fire station on the third of April. He was on duty as watchman for the day Reynolds passed through the reception room, with another of the firemen. He did not see the row upstairs but had opened the door for the Chief to put Reynolds out, who was resisting. Reynolds attempted to gain an entrance into the station three times but was prevented. Reynolds had struck at the Chief but witness had guarded off the blow.

FRED DAVIS

Witness had accompanied Reynolds through the station but did not know him. He had been standing outside the hall and Reynolds had asked to be shown through the station. From the visitors actions he concluded that he had been drinking.

To Mr. McWilliams witness stated that he heard the Chief request Reynolds to leave the station and accused had used insulting language. He had used insulting language. Witness had seen Reynolds attempt to strike Chief Howard and corroborated the Chief's statements as to the blows that had been struck.

This was all the evidence taken in the case. Mr McWilliams argued that the accused had the privilege of any other person who visited the fire station and he had behaved himself until ordered to leave. Chief Howard had showed no objection to the man being allowed in the station, therefore he was not guilty of trespassing.

Magistrate Dumble held that notwithstanding the letter that Reynolds has received notifying him that his presence would not be tolerated at the fire station, he had gone there evidently for the purpose of causing trouble but he reserved judgment until after the other case was heard.

ASSAULT CASE.

Both the counsel for defendant and complainant were willing to allow the evidence that had been previously submitted to stand in this case, with the understanding that any other evidence could be supplemented when called stated that Reynolds had come to him for treatment on the night of the trouble. There were wounds on the forehead and eyes but accused did not appear to be under the influence of liquor. He could not say if the attack of pneumonia which Reynolds suffered from was caused by the wounds he had received at the fire station.

DR. McCLELLAND

FRANK REYNOLDS

Witness said he lived near the fire station and had previously been engaged at that place but recently had been employed at the Wm. Hamilton Co. On the evening of April 3rd, as he had heard of changes being made at the hall he visited the station with the intention of seeing them. He went in with Davis, and was shown through the hall. On coming to the head of the stairs he met the Chief who said "I thought you were told to keep away from here." He replied that he had been but as it was a public building he did not see any harm was being done as long as a man behaved himself. The Chief told him to get out and hit him with his fist. He did not grind his teeth as the Chief had stated. He did not make any motion to go towards Grange. He made no resistance to the Chief, and the Chief had kicked him, and followed him out on the street. He did not make any attempt to hit the Chief until outside the door and was not the worse of liquor.

Chief Howard had used profane language towards him and had kicked him several times while he was coming down the stairs from the billiard room.

To Mr. Gordon, the accused denied that he had been under the influence of liquor.

Five witnesses were called, who gave evidence to the effect that as far as they were able to say, Reynolds was not intoxicated on the day or night of the trouble.

FRED DAVIS

when called again said he did not hear the Chief use and profane language. He would have been sofe to hear them if any had been used.

GEORGE GRANGE

corroborated the statements of the other witnesses in regards to the mix-up. He thought Reynolds was under the influence of liquor and he had used abusive language. He did not hear the Chief do any swearing.

CHIEF HOWARD

said he did not kick Reynolds nor had any bad language been used by him.

This was all the evidence taken and Magistrate Dumble in giving judgment, stated that Reynolds had been warned not to come to the fire station on account of the trouble that he caused but had not paid any attention to it. Chief Howard was there to enforce discipline and he had a perfect right to use force in a case of this kind, although it might have been better to have let the authorities deal with the case. He then gave the above judgment.

INSPECTOR HAS THIS PRIVILEGE

Of Looking Over Express Parcels in the Discharge of His Duties

A case to which an amicable agreement was reached was heard at the Police Court this afternoon.

Fish Inspector Watt claimed that he did not receive fair treatment at the hands of the official in charge of the Canadian Express Company room at the Grand Trunk Station.

Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for defendant.

According to Mr. Watt, he asked to be allowed to search some parcels at the express room yesterday and was told to get out or he would be thrown out. He complained to the police authorities and the result was the case this afternoon.

The Magistrate explained to the official of the company that the inspector had full power to act in such cases and as this was all the complainant wished to have understood the case was dismissed.

This Commission the annual report of which for 1908, is just to hand, was created by Mr. Carnegie in 1904 for the purpose not only of rewarding brave men and women, but for providing for those dependent upon them in case of death or injury. The amount of the fund is 5 million dollars of first collateral, 5 per cent. bonds of the U. S. Steel Corporation. Heroes and heroines can not continue in receipt of any reward unless they conduct themselves properly. The field of operation embraced by the fund is United States, Canada and Newfoundland. RANDOM PHILOSOPHY

Some people are continually calling attention to their own importance. No doubt it is necessary.

Don't look for your neighbor's faults with a magnifying glass. Remember he can see yours with the naked eye.

Trust no man blindly; thyself may be a rogue some day.

When some men attempt a joke it is like breaking a pane of glass with a sledge hammer.

The nearer the bone the sweeter the meat.

VALUABLE BEAUTY HINTS.

How to Make Yourself Look Younger Than You Are.

There is probably no compliment which affords a woman greater pleasure than to be told that she does not look her age. Many women do not feel as old as they really are, but their looks betray their years. It is quite possible, however, for them to appear young as well as to feel young and, in fact, take five to ten years off their age by employing proper treatment.

Take the cheeks, for instance, which as age creeps on have a tendency to sink, while the skin becomes sallow, and lines appear about the mouth. Massage is the only means by which the cheeks can be made plump. Take the tips of the fingers and pat or lightly strike the cheeks, using a little cold cream. Patting is good for any face, and it is one of those things which if practiced in moderation do a great deal for the skin, pinking it, smoothing it and rounding it out into that delicious plumpness which is so much desired by every normal woman.

But the woman who wants to look young must retain her curves. In the young there is always a set of pretty curves, and these must be reclaimed should they have disappeared. The most attractive of these curves is the one that is made by the cheek, a pleasing curve at the side of the face rounding from the temple to the chin.

A woman's next care must be for her eyes. The nose can take care of itself. You can do little with an ill shaped nose. But you can make the rest of the face so attractive that a small defect of the nostril is not noticed.

To attempt to treat the eyes with drugs to make them bright is of course extremely dangerous. No medicine should go into the eyes as brighteners. But the eyes can be made to grow bright by intelligent care of them. Early hours will keep the eyes in good condition. But as every woman cannot keep early hours and as many women would think the penalty of early to bed too much to pay for optic beauty the best thing to do is to take proper care of the eyes. Do not rock while you are reading, for this compels the eyes constantly to change their focus and injures them. Do not face a strong light. Do not read or write when you are mentally exhausted. Never wear glasses that do not fit the eyes, and do not look fixedly at one spot too long. Rest your eyes frequently by closing them, and never upon any account press upon the eyeballs.

If the eyes are small they should be made larger by reducing the fat of the face. Small eyes are usually caused by the cheeks being too fat. Plump cheeks are pretty, but fat cheeks are a drawback to beauty. The fat woman generally has twinkling little eyes, and the woman who once had large, dreamy, sentimental orbs will find that as she grows stouter the dreamy sentiment disappears behind the mounds of fat that grow up under her eyes.

The beauty of the eyes are greatly assisted by nice long lashes and good eyebrows. If the lashes are short they can be treated, not by cutting them, but by bathing the eyes in a weak solution of boracic acid and by using tepid water upon them when they are tired. Cutting the lashes seldom gives good results, while the pulling out of the lashes in the hope that they will come in thicker is positively injurious.

The woman who wants to take ten years off her age must fight stoutness. No very fat woman ever looks young, and one way of telling a woman's age is by her weight. A very slender figure is always youthful in its lines. If a woman keeps her figure she will keep her grace and youth, and to this she can add the pretty artifices for the preservation of her face.

Ornament For Girl's Coiffure.

There is quite a fashion for wearing a wide triple bow of soft satin or silver or gilt gauze in the hair. This sketch shows just how this is adjusted. The double fillet is of thin silver and goes half way round the head, bringing the triple bow of silver gauze at the side of the head back of the ear. This is a very pretty ornament and is usually most becoming to any girlish face.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZED BY LIBERAL MEMBERS FROM WESTERN CANADA

Dr. Clarke of Red Deer and Ralph Smith of Nanaimo in Budget Debate Express Strong Views on Tariff Question.

Ottawa, April 23.—Two free trade speeches were made by Liberals in the House yesterday afternoon. One was by Dr. Clarke of Red Deer, an English disciple of Adam Smith, who has been only seven years in this country, but who, he told the House, is farming over 1,000 acres in the west and making more than was required for the needs of his family; the other was by Ralph Smith of Nanaimo, also an Englishman, who adheres firmly to the unrestricted trade theory. Both were applauded by their own side of the House, although each handed out some criticism of the Government.

Mr. Smith evoked from Mr. Cowan of British Columbia a challenge to the Prime Minister or himself to resign his seat and test the feeling in British Columbia with reference to the Government's treatment of that province.

Dr. Clarke of Red Deer, resuming the budget debate, discussed protection v. free trade. Sixty years ago Great Britain began a policy of free trade and the United States a policy of protection. At that time the shipping tonnage of the United States was 2 1-2 millions, and of Great Britain 4 1-4 millions. To-day, after 60 years, United States tonnage has fallen to 1 3-4 millions, while that of Britain has increased to 11 3-4 millions.

Mr. Jamieson (Digby) declared that the Liberal party was not only committed to the continuance of the policy of protection, but it was doing more and paying bounties to favored industries.

Ralph Smith attacked the expenditures of the militia. "You can't make anybody believe," he said, "that retrenchment on productive works is necessary when you are spending $7,000,000 on the frills and foppery of a militia. What are we spending the money for? Is it fashionable to have an army? The greatest contribution we could make to the Empire was to establish in this country a happy and contented population of free British subjects. If we made a contribution to the British navy, take it out of the militia expenditures.

Continuing, in the evening Mr. Smith made a plea for reciprocity in coal with the United States. He did not think it possible that the mines of Nova Scotia would ever be able to supply the Ontario market. In 1908 the importations of bituminous coal amounted to about six million tons, with a duty of about three million dollars, but he was sure that the enormous development in the west following reciprocity in coal would more than compensate for the loss of revenue. Giving the total consumption of the various railways as nearly five million tons a year, at a cost of nearly $15,000,000, Mr. Smith declared that the 53 cents a ton duty was taken out of the people.

ST. KITTS' SOLDIERS HERE ON MAY 24TH

19th Regiment Has Accepted Invitation Extended by the 57th Regiment of Peterborough-- There Will be a Big Time.

Special to the Review.

St. Catharines, April 23.—The most successful drill of the season was that which was held by the 19th St. Catharines Regiment on Tuesday evening. The turnout was excellent, 217 men taking part in the evening's parade.

During the evening the good news was imparted to the men that the regiment had been invited to spend May 2th as guests of the 57th Peterorough Regiment, and also that St. Catharines crack regiment had received an invitation to take part in the celebration of July 1st in Buffalo.

An hour having been spent in company drill, the regiment was once more formed up and was addressed by the Colonel. He reiterated his announcement made earlier in the evening that the Regiment had been invited to spend May 2th in Peterborough and Dominion Day in Buffalo. He was not able from his position on parade how many had signified their intention of accepting. Each company would, of course, have to pay part of the expense entailed from the company funds. A financial sacrifice, not individually, but from the company, would be required, and he, therefore, suggested as wished to accept the invitation, to so signify. The response was general, every man in the regiment signifying his intention of going. "That means we accept the invitation," said the Colonel. The same expression of opinion was manifested in regard to the Buffalo trip.

WANT RECIPROCITY WITH DOMINION

Trade With Canada is the Cry in Detroit

Detroit, April 23.—"Trade with Canada" is the watchword in Detroit today. There was opened yesterday afternoon, and continues in session until to-night, a conference representing boards of commerce and other bodies, of more than a dozen states on or near the Canadian border, the object of which is "better trade relations with Canada," and the purpose of which is to secure reductions in the tariff bill now before Congress. The conference meets on the invitation of the Detroit Board of Commerce in the assembly hall of the new Y.M.C.A. Delegates are present from New York and Boston in the east and Chicago, Milwaukee and Duluth in the west, and from most of the cities and states between. Governors of states are present, either personally or by official delegates. Plainly, this conference means business. Without preliminaries, Governor Warner of Michigan welcomed the delegates, and gave a most emphatic endorsation to the purpose of the conference. He described Detroit as the second oldest trading post on the lakes, where for 200 years trade with Canada has been carried on. He pressed home on his fellow-countrymen the rapid development of Canada, its enormous resources, and the material advantage of wide and cordial trade relations.

Passengers Spent Anxious Night.

Montreal, April 23.—Two train loads of passengers spent an anxious night on a storm-swept bridge near Rouse's Point Wednesday night. They were crossing the bridge, one either way, and the ends of the bridge showed signs of weakness, so that they were afraid to cross in the fierce storm of wind and rain which raged around them. They had to stay there all night.

To Explore Africa.

Ottawa, April 23.—John Thompson, Portage du Fort, Quebec, one of the best known bushrangers of the Ottawa district, has been engaged by an English syndicate to proceed at once to Central Africa for exploring and reporting on the natural resources.

ELECTION CASES FALL THROUGH

Parry Sound, April 23.—At the Assizes just closed there were some interesting election cases. A D.R.O. was accused of giving a ballot to an elector whose name was omitted from the list in error. Owing to the technical nature of the offence, the crown and court interceded and the case was not given to the jury, but is held over to be reported to the authorities. A recommendation was made by the grand jury to have the law amended to meet such cases, where errors are made without criminal intent.

The case of Frank Unger, charged with attempting to bribe an elector was shown to have been a mistake of intentions, and the accused was acquitted.

Ed. Thompson, accused of personating another person of the same name, was also a case where the elector acted in good faith, believing himself to be the person whose name was on the list, and he was acquitted.

NEW SEALING ARRANGEMENT

Victoria, B.C., April 23.—The United States may abrogate the Paris award of 1894 governing pelagic sealing in the Behring Sea as a result of conditions which have arisen owing to the influx of Japanese sealers not bound by the regulations, as Japan is not a party to the award according to statements made by Joseph Boscowits, a prominent local sealing schooner owner, who has returned from London, Washington and Ottawa, where he had interviews with officials regarding the sealing question.

The abrogation of sealing treaty under which the United States forbids her vessels to leave U.S. ports on a sealing cruise and spends nearly half a million yearly in patrolling the sea and guarding rookeries, will result in United States schooners again being permitted to go sealing after twenty years. Mr. Boscowits said he was informed at Ottawa by Hon. L. P. Brodeur Minister of Marine, a few days ago, that the question was to be taken up and the whole matter thoroughly gone into.

For St. George and Merrie England!

for st George and merry england .....

This is St. George's Day, and every "true-born Englishman" is rejoicing accordingly. The traditions of a people are crystallized in its patron saint. Sometimes people may wonder what good the patron saints are doing anyway, in view of all that is taking place, but it is well that men should cling to the best traditions of their race. That "race" is both a a matter of pride and prejudice is proven by the fact that children of parents alien to the race of their adoption retained the national prejudice of the latter, and not that of their own race. On being informed, however, of the facts, they reverted to the traditions of the race from which they sprang.

St. George, the tutelary saint of England and special patron of chivalry whose cross forms part of the Jack, was of Greek origin, and Christian parentage, born at Lydda, in the beautiful vale of Sharon, A.D., 270. He died a Christian martyr at Nicomedia A.D. 303, in the reign of Diocletian. He was first proclaimed "Patron of the Realm of England" by King Edward III., who founded in his honour the Order of the Garter, the blue ribbon of chivalry.

MRS. KINRADE AND FLORENCE NOT PRESENT AT INQUEST

Despite Instructions From Examiner to Be Present at Hearing Mrs. Kinrade and Florence Absent Themselves—Subpœnas Are Made Out and Served—Clerk in Store Contradicts One of Florence's Statements.

Hamilton, April 23.—The failure of Mrs. Kinrade and Miss Florence Kinrade to appear at the sitting was the feature of the inquest last night. Very little was secured from the witnesses called.

Mr. Blackstock asked that Mrs. Kinrade be called, and there was an expectant wait for a minute or two.

"Isabel Kinrade," called the court crier thrice, but there was no response.

Mr. Blackstock suggested that Florence Kinrade be called, and once again the crier's voice resounded through a hushed court room. Still there was no appearance.

"I am under the necessity of asking you to adjourn these proceedings until to-morrow night, or such time as is convenient," pursued Mr. Blackstock. "Mrs. Kinrade and Miss Florence Kinrade were notified to be here to-night, and it was our expectation that they would be here. We received no intimation from them to the contrary, and I shall have to ask you now to adjourn these proceedings until the crown can take such steps as may be necessary to enforce their attendance upon this inquest."

It was agreed that the inquest should resume to-night at 8 o'clock, and the inquest adjourned at 9.45, after a session of 60 minutes.

As a result of an order from the Attorney-General's Department all the passes issued were yesterday morning cancelled, it being stated that the disorder at times in the courtroom during previous sessions had worried Mr. Blackstock. There were, however, about 100 interested auditors present, outside of a small army of newspaper men, who were last night banished beyond the railing. The only individuals allowed within the sacred enclosure were Mr. Blackstock, Crown Attorney Washington, George Lynch-Staunton, K.C., counsel for the Kinrade family, and his junior counsel. On former occasions the public overflowed almost to the coroner's desk. Dr. W. Bruce Smith and Dr. Clarke of Toronto Asylum were again present, and also a number of medical specialists interested in pathological research.

The witnesses last night were not apparently of great weight, but the later developments increased and emphasized the importance of some phases of it, and especially of the contradictions involved. Mrs. Ernest Kinrade, sister-in-law of the murdered girl, was examined at some length. She gave her evidence in a drawling nasal tone, and spoke in a low voice. She remembered scarcely anything of a striking character as to the points on which Mr. Blackstock asked his questions and adopted the conventional phrases previously used by other members of the family in describing their relations.

Next to the non-appearance of the Kinrade women, the greatest sensation was caused by the evidence of Miss Erskine, employed in the big Stanley Mills Co.'s store. She swore clearly and definitely that she saw Florence Kinrade in the blouse department of the store on the morning of the tragedy. She could not fix the time and was not aware if she bought anything. She knew Florence Kinrade, who was frequently in the store, very well by sight.

Florence Kinrade swore a month ago that she had not been out of the house the day of the murder, and did not get up till late in the morning.

Reticence even beyond ordinary is observed by the crown officials engaged in the case, but it is clear that far greater advances have been made than has been generally supposed. That a crucial point in the enquiry has been reached is obvious and it seems clear that the crown is not at fault.

After the inquest, Coroner Anderson, proceeded to the City Hall, where he made out new subpoenas, which were served on Mrs. Kinrade and Florence Kinrade this morning.

Jimmy Baum arrived at 6.30 last night in company of Detective Rogers. The intention of the crown is to have the testimony of Mrs. Kinrade and Florence once more before calling Baum.

BLOWING UP THE ICE AT THE FALLS

Engineers at Work With Dynamite -- Great Damage Done by the Ice

Niagara-on-the-Lake, April 23.—United States engineers have been busy all afternoon dynamiting the ice jam at the mouth of the river, off Fort Niagara. Their plan is to push planks out over the ice banks to the edge of the mass and plant 500-pound charges of dynamite, so that the explosion will tear off great chunks and rend the field. The effects of the explosions were spectacular, great ice cakes being lifted a height of one hundred feet or more and distributed over a wide area. They were effective in opening a small channel around the fort and thus affording an outlet to the currents which have been sapping the foundations of the most ancient stronghold west of Kingston. The work will be continued to-day and indefinitely until some adequate relief is afforded. It will be slow and costly work.

The Niagara Navigation Co.'s wharf is apparently to go the way the Turbinia's wharf has gone. The ice has worked its way underneath and the platform is slowly but surely buckling upward. The earth filling behind has caved in badly. Teams have been busy since early morning hauling brush and debris to throw in and stay the current. Twenty carloads of stone would not be sufficient to fill the chasm which now exists on the spot where the Queen's Royal Hotel bus usually waits for passengers in summer. The work of filling in will be a problem for the stone as dumped in would immediately slide under the wharf, and fifty carloads might go out of sight. The only way to achieve the end desired will be to sink next to the wharf some hundreds of fresh faggots, and stake them to the bottom and then fill in with stone. The big wharf itself should be of concrete.

TOO MANY DIVORCES IN THE DOMINION

Ottawa, April 23.—Chairman Ethier of the private bills committee protested yesterday morning when 21 divorce bills with Senate recommendation were presented. Said he:

"For six years I have presided over this committee, and for thirteen years been a member of it, and while we are accustomed to have half a dozen each session, the limit is reached this time. I think it amounts to an abuse. Those of us who are fathers of families should think of the great social evil that is involved, and not do in this country as they do in the States. The committee should assert its rights to see if the proof given in the Senate is proper. The Senate is granting divorces in cases where a court would not give separation. If you prove a man is a drunkard or a gambler, it is not sufficient to justify divorce."

SITUATION NO BETTER IN TURKEY

Many Thousand Dead and More Trouble is Expected—Depredations by Mobs

Constantinople, April 23.—The situation in Asiatic Turkey, according to the latest intelligence received here, is distinctly threatening.

The wave of fanaticism which originated in Adana some ten days ago and found its expression in the killing of the Christians, apparently is spreading generally through the eastern provinces. Upward of 10,000 Armenians were massacred in Syrian towns and villages, principally in the Vilayet of Adana, during outbursts of fanatical zeal at the time of the spring festival in honor of Mohammed and upon the receipt of the news of the overturn of the "heretical" Government at Constantinople. One embassy places the estimates of killed as high as 15,000.

The Government has sent urgent commands to the Vilayet of Adana that the mob must be put down and the leaders harshly dealt with. The attacks on the Armenians appear to have been instigated solely by the reactionaries.

A despatch from Mersina says the Armenian town of Madjin is beleagured by Moslem tribesmen, who are only waiting sufficient numerical strength to rush the improvised defences erected by the Armenians. The Armenians, however, are well armed, and will put up a vigorous defence.

Another despatch from Tarsus dated April 20, and sent by courier to Mersina, sets forth that the missions there were giving shelter to 3,000 refugees and were well protected. Martial law has been declared and the situation was showing some improvement. Five hundred houses had been burned in the Armenian quarter of the city, where fifty persons had been killed. Others had been killed in the surrounding villages.

The town of Kirikan, which is located a short distance from Reilan, and southeast of Alexandretta, has been sacked and burned.

At Avas, on the west coast of the Gulf of Alexandretta, 218 murderers have been released from prison. They at once joined the mob and began depredations.

The revelation releases from the presidency Elder R. C. Evans of Toronto, Canada, and confirms the appointment of Albert A. Smith of Lamoni. The presidency of the church is composed of Joseph Smith, his son, Fred W. Smith, and his nephew, Albert A. Smith.

MAN WITH BLOOD STAINS ON CLOTHING HELD AS SLAYER OF MACEDONIAN

But No Charge Has Yet Been Preferred Against Him—Murderer Sought Money on Dead Man, But Failed to Discouver It.

Toronto, April 23.—Met in the semi-darkness of the basement of his lodging-house at 16 Eastern avenue as he returned from his work, Even Simoff, a Macedonian, ash cleaner, employed at the G.T.R. roundhouse, was battered to death with a hatchet sometime after seven o'clock yesterday morning.

With what appears to be fresh bloodstains on his coat, overalls and shirt, Palla Stefoff, an unemployed Macedonian, living in the same house, is held by the police on the tentative charge of being a "material witness."

Stefoff tells of finding the body and his story is not altogether satisfactory to the police.

Simoff, who was a married man with a wife and child in Europe, left his work at 7 o'clock. Three other Macedonians left with him. One of these rode to his home in Trinity street, while the others says that they walked with Simoff to the corner of Front and West Market street, when Simoff left them to go north to King street to buy honey.

Here Palla Stefoff takes up the tale. He says that he got up at 6 o'clock and set out in search of work. He went to the C.N.R. freight sheds and to Kemp's works. He did not go in, but asked some Macedonians whom he saw outside. He then went back to the house about 8.30, buying meat and groceries on the way.

He found the back door, by which he had gone out, locked. He entered by the front door and on his way to the basement where he rooms with his brother, when in the half light, he saw the legs of a man. He did not know, he says, whether the man was dead or drunk, but was afraid and rushed to the street and there met George Bailey, whom he told that a man had been killed.

Bailey got P. C. Forbes in King street. They found Simoff's body with the head at the bottom of the stairs, battered almost beyond recognition. On the floor was a pool of blood and brains and blood was spattered on the wall to a height of four feet.

The body was removed to the morgue. The trousers were torn open as if the assassin had been in search of the money belt which many of the Macedonians wear. He left considerable money on the body, however. Sewn in the lining of the vest were found twenty-one French coins worth $4 each and three smaller ones of half that value. In a purse in a pocket $5 in Canadian money was found.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Sentence Boys to Lash.

Kingston, April 23.—For some time boys have been robbing the street railway of copper wire from tracks where it is used in completing circuits. The loss of the wire caused a great deal of trouble, as it meant extra electric power must be furnished. Detectives unearthed 50 pounds of stolen wire in a pawn shop, and put four youngsters, all 12 years old, under arrest. Three were found guilty yesterday and were given the cat-o'-nine-tails by the police, and the other discharged.

New York, April 23.—Revolt has broken out in the ranks of women in their crusade for separate cars on subway trains for their exclusive use. The Equality League of Self-Supporting Women, 22,000 strong, informed the public service commission yesterday that they do not care for separate cars and fear such an innovation would do men more harm than it could do good for women.

Fall Four Stories in Escaping Fire.

New York, April 23.—When Mrs. Rachael Matthewson and her daughter Rose discovered that fire on the floor below their fourth-storey flat in an eastside tenement had cut off their escape by the stairs early yesterday, they rushed to the front window. Mrs. Matthewson climbed out on the sill and lowered herself until she hung by her fingers. Rose followed her out of the window and clung with her arms about her mother's neck. The weight caused the mother's finger tips to slip from the window sill and just as a hook and ladder truck arrived they dropped the four stories to the sidewalk. The elder woman will die.

Woman Swept Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 23.—Shortly after 12 o'clock yesterday Mrs. Whipple, a 65-year-old Buffalo woman, either jumped or slipped into the river at Luna Island, and was carried over the falls. LADY WHO FORMERLY RESIDED HERE SUING TORONTO BROKERS

Toronto, April 23.—Claiming that she had been deceived over some stock transactions, Miss Rose A. Clarke, a Toronto woman opened an action in the Non-jury Court yesterday against Messrs. Baillie, Wood & Croft, stockbrokers. The amount claimed is $6,153 and damages.

The transactions between Miss Clarke and the brokers included fifty shares of Sao Paulo, bought in April 1906, on a fifteen point margin and a block of Louisville and Nashville stock. Miss Clarke in her action claims that the defendants never actually bought the stock for her or that if they did they converted it to their own use.

The defendants say they bought and sold the stocks as directed under Miss Clarke's direction and that if they pledged them they have the right to raise money on margined shares in that way.

The action will be continued to-day most of the evidence being written evidence obtained on commissions from New York brokers.

In a somewhat similar action brought against another firm of brokers several months ago, Miss Clarke was successful in obtaining judgment.

THE MISSIONARIES

There might be some excuse for excessive military preparations if they were ever used to a really good purpose, such as that of protecting women and children and missionaries of the gospel. If God Himself does not protect them it is possible that He lays that important responsibility on their kith and kin in which event a sad day of reckoning must be on its way to us. It has been the boast of the empire for long, too long, that to injure, or even insult a British subject would entail consequences so sudden as to be quite awe-inspiring. But this referred to matters of trade. Some one has said of missionaries, in a moment of inspiration, that they were made only to be eaten. It looks like it. Are our arms paralysed that we should stand by and see thousands of women and children butchered because they are Christians? Yet the British Empire is supposed to be founded on the very principles of the Christian faith. "Faith without works is dead," and that must be what is the matter with us. It can be under no other supposition that we listen, and yet hear nothing, have limbs to move, and walk not; have tongues to speak, and cannot lift our voices to proclaim war against the infidel butchers. It is plain that Gladstone and John Bright are both dead.

WHY MEN FAIL IN BUSINESS

"The summary of business failures in the United States in 1908, compiled by Bradstreet's, furnishes a good deal of food for reflection," says World's Work. "There were 14,044 failures, as compared with 10,265 in 1907. In this table, the causes of each 1,000 such failures are shown:"

WORKMEN ILLTREATED

"That the Trades and Labor councils of Fort William and Port Arthur are justified in petitioning the provincial government for an investigation of the conditions of labor in the railroad construction and labor camps is the opinion freely expressed in official circles here.

"One magistrate today described the conditions as "fierce." He said men in some of the camps were being abused. They were often buncoed into making a long trip only to find themselves out of a job, in an isolated locality after completing a rush job.

Such a case was brought out recently before a magistrate here, who found a verdict, giving the laborer recompense for the trouble and expense of making the trip.

"Local officials say the conditions are worse this year than ever before, and many will aid in the movement inaugurated by the labor organizations."—Fort William Journal.

It is customary for a certain number of reactionaries to declaim against the so-called pampered condition of labor. But where is the pampering—indeed, where is the justice of such treatment as the above. The builders of the railway, the capitalists, are treated with the most obsequious consideration—even to the extent of an occasional ten millions or so. But when it comes to providing for the decent treatment of the workingmen concerned it is left to the newspapers to deal with it. In fact even when it becomes a national crying shame the government still holds aloof. We rather wonder that Labor has so long put up with such conditions but probably it is due to the fact that the Labor employed is largely unskilled and unable to impress the politicians or those who concern themselves with movements to convert heathen who are not half so heathenish as many much nearer home.

POOR BUSINESS

Mr. R. M. Curry, Canadian Commercial Agent at Nassau, has forwarded the following letter regarding Canadian shipments to an importer in the Bahamas. It is not advanced that this complaint is characteristic of the exports to that colony, but it will serve to illustrate the manner in which the importer views such laxity in business.

"Being a Canadian and therefore interested in the development of trade between Canada and the Bahamas, I would like to call your attention to some shipment that have come here from that country, which are not only a disgrace to Canada, but will utterly ruin the trade. One, some time ago, was a lot of Nova Scotia potatoes, which were mixed, some so small as to be worthless, others far too large badly shaped, full of lumps and to cap the climax, covered with mud, so that by weight we paid at least one tenth for mud.

"More lately was a lot of apples, out of a barrel of which only 20 were not absolutely rotten, and those full of worm holes and bruised all over. Of another lot of potatoes a few were of good table size, but the greater part about the size of a large marble, which no one would buy. In each of these cases the importer said he would never buy more."—Farm and Dairy.

Despite the stringency of our laws respecting the quality and packing of fruit and vegetables for export and in spite of the reasonably earnest attempt to enforce these laws, would-be sharpers will continually be found seeking to evade the requirements of common honesty and those of a permanent trade as well. As a people it is said that we do not compare with the Chinese for honesty. Dishonesty is not treated in such a way with us as to discourage it. If a man who is known to be crooked "can get away with it," as the saying goes, he is applauded by all but a saving few. The saving few are the anchors of civilization. It is men like Lincoln, who repudiate crookedness with disdain not tolerance that rescue nations from speedy destruction. However, there is no doubt that we Canadians are open to the jibes and quiet laughter of the Danes and British who think that we are not quite out of our boyhood yet when temptation to surge is too strong to be resisted. The American are beginning to wonder at us too.

THE LAND WILL KEEP

There is no great hurry about increasing our population; the land will keep.—The Weekly Sun.

"Bystander," (Mr. Goldwin Smith) in the Weekly Sun discusses in the last issue of that journal the desirability or otherwise of filling up our country with the off-scourings of Europe. Let us suppose that we could transplant in a day all the bandits of Calabria and Sicily, the scum of the east-end and the Doukobors of Southern Russia to Canada. Would it be desirable? How, then can it be desirable now? We are bombarded with Chinese coolies on the west, and invaded by the bandits of Central and Southern Europe on the east. Our insanity statistics show an increase at an even more alarming rate than our criminal records. Ontario has become a hot-bed of vice, almost wholly due to the influx of foreigners, and an incomplete system of preserving law and order. The middle-west is saved by the quality of its immigrants,—farmers from the United States. Canadians are assuming burdens out of all proportion to their ability to handle them, and while these burdens may look very enterprising and progressive, they are unwise and productive of much harm in the immediate future. It is incontestable that the paying of large sums in foreign interest takes our money out of the country and gradually impoverishes us. The poor feel it first and worst, and when have we ever had so many poor! If it stopped there, however, it would not so much matter, but the increasing of the imports of vice is as alarming as detrimental. Let, therefore, our lands wait. It is our own people that we must govern for, and the lands belong to them.

EDITORIAL NOTES

When the administration of the law gets too complicated or weak lynch-law succeeds it. It represents the breakdown of civilization. Lynchings in the United States are a daily occurrence and are as popular as five o'clock teas.

It is no discredit to Hon. Mr Fielding to say that he is not at his best when engaged in the unfamiliar sleight-of-hand performance of producing a surplus out of a deficit. He evidently felt at a disadvantage and his budget speech was decidedly apologetic.—Ottawa Citizen.

A short time ago we saw a letter in a contemporary demanding the destruction of the little willow that goes far to redeem the stretch immediately below Matthews' Co. factory from unornamented wretchedness. We hope this willow will grow and flourish. A few more trees like the willow in similar unlovely spots would improve the appearance of the city vastly.

"Why should there be street arabs in England? Because the church is organized for doctrinal rather than practical purposes," the speaker said. "Social conditions in some of the larger cities and even the small towns in Canada were becoming such that conversion of the people was not to be expected. In Winnipeg men and women were herded together in congested quarters and conditions were such that schools or religious institutions were out of their reach. Though they had done much good there was too much coddling, pampering in class meetings today and each community was too much of an admiration society. Social service was necessary and a motto suggested by the speaker for the church of the future was "the co-operation of all who love for the service of all who live." —Dr. Workman.

Alienist Makes a Break.

Flushing, L.I., April 23.—A commotion was caused in the camp of the defence yesterday at the trial of Capt. Peter C. Hains, jr., for the murder of Wm. E. Annis, by Dr. L. S. Manson, an alienist retained by the defence, who declared that in his opinion Capt. Hains was not insane at the present time and that the defence would rest with the proof that the defendant was insane at the time of the shooting. Hains' lawyers promptly denied this.

Family In Burning House.

Parry Sound, April 23.—Fire at 3 a.m. yesterday destroyed the residence of Capt. James McLean on Cascade street. Before the alarm was given, the flames were through the roof, and the family were awakened by plaster falling on the bed. In a trunk $163 in money was destroyed and only a small part of the furniture was saved. Loss $3,000.

TREATING HORSE CORNS.

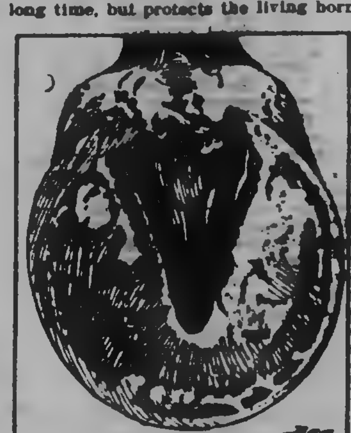
Preventive and Curative Measures Recommended by an Authority.

There is small understanding with the average horse owner of the suffering some animals go through on account of corns. The torture is acute, and the services of the animals are often lost to the owner without leaving knowledge of the cause. Dr. A. A. Holcombe, inspector of the United States bureau of animal husbandry, says of treating horse corns:

"As in all other troubles, the cause must be discovered if possible and removed. In a great majority of cases the shoeing will be at fault. For a sound foot, perfectly formed, a flat shoe with heels less thick than the toe and which rests evenly on the wall proper is the best. In flat feet it is often necessary to concave the feet as much as possible on the upper surface so that the sole may not be pressed upon. If the heels are very low the heels of the shoe may be made much thicker.

"If the foot is very broad and the wall light toward the heels a bar shoe, resting upon the walls, may aid to prevent excessive tension upon the soft tissues when the foot receives the weight of the body. A piece of leather placed between the foot and shoe serves largely to destroy concussion, and its use is absolutely necessary on some animals to enable them to work.

"Among the preventive measures may be mentioned those which serve to maintain the suppleness of the hoof. The dead horn upon the surface of the sole not only retains moisture for a long time, but protects the living horn beneath from the effects of evaporation. For this reason the sole should be pared as little as possible.



CORNS ON HORSE'S FOOT.

"As to curative measures, much depends upon the extent of the injury. If the case is one of chronic dry corn, with but slight lameness, the front should be poulticed for a day or two and the discolored horn pared out, care being taken not to injure the soft tissues. The heel on the affected side should be lowered until pressure is removed, and if the patient's labor is required the patient must be shod with a bar shoe or with one having stiff heels. Care must be taken to reset the shoe before the foot has grown too long, else the shoe will no longer rest on the wall, but on the sole and bar.

"I believe in cutting moist corns out. If there is an inflammation present cold baths and poultices should be used."

THE SHEPHERD.

Overfeeding or sudden changes from poor to very rich food, combined with want of exercise, if not actual causes, will contribute to the development of the loss of wool among ewes.

Selecting the Breeders.

Do not buy a ram for a breeder unless he has a good length of wool on his belly and legs—wool down to the hoof. In selecting ewes for breeders special care should be taken to secure good, thrifty animals of medium size, compact and well formed.

Importance of Dry Bedding.

Equally important as pure air, water, salt, good feed, etc., is the matter of dry bedding. Sheep do not like to stand with wet feet, and if your shed has nothing but a wet floor or bottom for them to stand on you will find a part of the growth in value which represents possible profits to you is soaking away into that wet floor, never more to be available to you. Keep your growing lambs warm and dry, and you will find you are conserving your profits.

Good Feed Brings Hardy Lambs.

Many sheepmen lose on their sheep because they allow their ewes to run down and become weak, with the result that their lambs are puny things, which have a hard tussle to pull through. Ewes should be fed liberally of both grain and forage. Oats, with some corn, with plenty of clover or alfalfa hay, will bring them to lambing time in a fit condition to bear strong lambs and take care of them. An occasional allowance of bran and meal will also be good for them from the time they are taken off pasture until they are turned out in the spring.

Value of Salt For Sheep.

Experiments recently made for the purpose of ascertaining the nutritive value of salt for sheep show that those which have been fed salt gained in weight four and one-half pounds more than those which received no salt. Moreover, the sheep which received salt produced one and one-third pounds more wool and of a better quality than those which received no salt.

PILES CURED IN 6 TO 14 DAYS
PAZO OINTMENT is guaranteed to cure any case of Itching, Blind or Bleeding or Protruding Piles in 6 to 14 days or money refunded. 50c.

TO EXPLOIT CANADA.

German Syndicate Has Been Formed For the Purpose.

German capitalists are preparing to exploit Canada on a large scale, according to Berlin despatches.

Rich deposits of silver and coal in the eastern part of the Dominion are to be mined extensively, and if the plans of the controlling syndicate are carried out the development of that part of Canada, which includes the best coal found in America, will be in the hands of Germans.

This remarkable condition is forecast by the well-informed, Boersen Courier, which makes an authoritative statement regarding the aims and objects of the syndicate, which was formed for the exploitation of Canada.

The Boersen Courier states:

"Former attempts on the part of Germans to participate in the economic development of Canada met with little or no success, but the enterprise, which was recently launched, appears likely to realize the rich expectations entertained in connection with it. The German Canadian syndicate, which includes representatives of the leading financial and industrial circles in Berlin, equipped an expedition in 1906 to explore Canada on scientific principles, with a view to discovering mineral treasures.

"This expedition succeeded in finding new important silver mines in East Canada, near existing silver mines at Cobalt. Subsequently large coal fields were discovered, which, according to the opinion of geologists, contain the best coal found anywhere on the American continent. It is estimated that these coal fields contain 9,000,000,000,000 tons of coal.

"We learn the German Canadian syndicate is about to delegate the work of developing these fields to another company, in which it will hold a controlling interest. The extraordinary success of the German expedition has greatly increased the prestige of the German race in Canada, because it is recognized there that this success was due to thorough perseverance and scientific research."

THE SLAVE LIBERATOR.

William Lloyd Garrison's Mother Was a Canadian.

In the spring of 1775, when the ice was breaking upon the St. John river, Nova Scotia, a young mother came down the stream with her baby to visit the farm of the baby's grandfather, where she purposed spending the day. The water had been quite clear of ice when she started, but it broke further up the river, and came floating down the stream, the great cakes surrounding and crushing the boat. The woman managed to escape with her baby and the boy who was rowing her to a cake of ice, and fortunately the ice floated shoreward. As it approached the bank the mother, after wrapping the baby in all the clothes she could spare, threw it ashore. Then with the help of an overhanging bough she and the boy followed. The little one was found unhurt in a snowdrift and lived to become the father of William Lloyd Garrison.

Not much is known of Abijah Garrison—that was the baby's name. He became a sea captain, and on one of his voyages he stopped at Deer Island, New Brunswick. There he met a lovely and beautiful young woman named Frances Lloyd. She was a "masterpiece of womankind," her son afterwards wrote, and the young sea captain fell in love with her at first sight. They were married and after a few years of wandering went to live in Massachusetts. There on Dec. 10, 1805, in the town of Newburyport, was born William Lloyd Garrison, who was destined to save the United States from the crime and curse of slavery.

Canada and "America."

Cy Warman, the well-known author, has sent the following letter to a London paper:

"From time to time we read over here the printed protests of English writers and speakers against the use of the word 'American' as applied to the citizens of the United States. These writers appear to feel that the monopolization of this name by the citizens of the United States has the effect of belittling Canadians. As a matter of fact, the Yankees are called Americans, and have been for a hundred years, and nobody has disputed the title; nobody cares to. Any Canadian who is ashamed of being called a Canadian does not deserve any flag, or any country or name.

"Another matter has to do with a point upon which Canadians themselves are somewhat sensitive. Canadians do not like to be referred to as 'Colonists' or 'Colonials.' Canada is nearer a nation than a mere colony, but, above all, it is the Dominion of Canada. It has always been called Canada, and has never been called a colony, so far as I can see, by the 'Fathers of Confederation'."

The Rise of a Township.

Rivers (Manitoba) is in the heart of the most fertile farming district in the Canadian West. It is 140 miles west of Winnipeg, and is destined to become the chief divisional point of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Here car-shops, roundhouses, and storehouses have been erected, the shops already employing upwards of 200 men, which number must shortly be augmented. In addition to the G.T.P., the town is also served by the Lenore to Brandon branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Local and adjacent elevators have a capacity of 350,000 quarters of grain, and from the Little Saskatchewan river excellent power can readily be obtained for milling and other purposes. The first settlement was made March, 1908, and there is now a population of over 600.

Fishery Industry Growing.

The number of men employed in the fishing industry in Canada in 1908 was over 71,000, not including many thousands of persons engaged in such seasonable industries as lobster and salmon canning on the east and west coasts. Thus, for instance, the salmon canning industry alone in 1908 gave employment to upwards of 13,000 persons.

The Dunnville, Wellandport and Beamsville Electric Railway will run to St. Catharines if voted a bonus of twelve thousand dollars.

STORY OF PRINCE RUPERT.

Strange Tales Lurk Behind the New G.T.P. Terminal.

The history of Prince Rupert will make interesting reading when it comes to be written, says Christopher Shale in a recent letter to Toronto Saturday Night. The many and various vicissitudes through which it passed have fallen to the lot of but few places, governments, corporations and private citizens having various fingers in the pie. Briefly the story is this as understood in British Columbia.

Port Simpson was the first prospective site, but land speculators, knowing this, stepped in there and held the land at a fancy figure. Of course, the company wanted to get the land as cheaply as possible, and as the advent of the railway company would give it its value, they felt this should accrue to them, so they looked round for some other harbor and chose Prince Rupert, to the dismay of the Port Simpson speculators. But here again the land speculator had got in ahead of them. Everybody, in this part of the world at least, has heard of the famous Kaien Island land deal of Mrs. Anderson, whereby 10,000 acres of Government property were acquired for $10,000. However, the company thought they couldn't do better than acquire her rights, so by paying $20,000 they did this.

The sale of crown lands in British Columbia is governed by a clause which provides that if any of the land is subsequently divided into a townsite, one-quarter of the lots revert to the crown. The G.T.P. Co. in an endeavor to circumvent this and secure complete control of all town lots, negotiated with the Dominion Government for acquisition of the adjoining Indian Reserve on Kaien Island, thinking, I suppose, that this was not provincial land and, therefore, they wouldn't have to yield up quarter of the lots. The British Columbia Government, however, insisted on its reversionary rights in the reserve, after the Indians were settled with; so the company, after buying out the Indians were still in the same position in relations to the Provincial Government. Meanwhile, while negotiations were pending and after the Indians were bought out (the reserve thus becoming provincial land) John Houston, of The Prince Rupert Empire, staked some mineral claims on it at the proper psychological moment, had them properly recorded, and thus, according to law, acquired first right to the ground; in effect stealing it from under the very nose of the company. In the matter of the townsite, he had subsequently to be reckoned with, given a free site and other concessions. Then, as a final blow along comes a man named Kane and gets the name "Prince Rupert" recorded as the name of his townsite, 15 miles or so from the real Prince Rupert, which, not yet being laid out, could not be recorded, and the law will not allow the same name to be applied to two different townsites.

So, what with having to deal, first with Mrs. Anderson for the land, then with Houston for his mineral claims, and lastly with Kane for their very name — which they chose with so much care and for which a prize was offered—the poor G.T.P. must by this time be convinced that they are no match for the keen intellects of the West. They must be sitting up, rubbing their eyes and wondering where they are going to have it handed to them next.

Manitoba school teachers will hold convention at Winnipeg.

HAT AND COIFFURE.

A Hairdressing Hint Just Arrived From Gay Paris.

THE "BILL" POSSUM MASCOT.

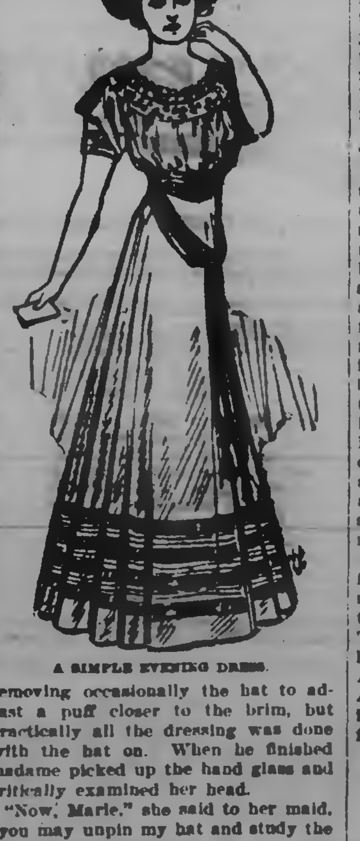
Mrs. Philip Lydig's Lamp Shade Hat. Stationery Used by the Smart Suffragette and a Dainty Ice For Bridge Party—Summer Frocks.

My Dear Elsa—It certainly was sweet of you, dear, to say you enjoyed that Barrie-Adams gush. But then I counted on your good nature when I selfishly unloaded my enthusiasm upon you. Blessed be friendship! And how many sins are committed in its name! Now, I'm going to give you a Roosevelt square deal by way of reparation—a hairdressing hint just arrived from Paris. Yesterday afternoon while waiting at M. X.'s to have my hair treated my attention was attracted by the entrance of a fashionably dressed woman, followed by a French maid bearing a large, round tin box. My first thought was, "It's Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who has just come from the safe deposit vaults, and she's preparing to take herself, stocks, bonds and securities out of democratic America over to dear aristocratic Europe." Nothing of the kind. Only another instance of my imagination gone horribly wrong, for the round "tin" proved to be merely the latest kind of hat box and the lady a great unknown. The smart chapeau, you know, must suggest faint odors of one's favorite perfume, and tin has been found to retain the fragrance better than the ordinary pasteboard box. Voyez?

M. X. looked perfectly nonplused when madame announced that she wanted her hair dressed for Aiken and added: "I've brought my piazza hat with me. When I get a new hat," she explained, "I always have my hair dressed to fit it, a trick I learned recently in Paris."

She then seated herself, while the maid took from the box a huge, stunning creation of lace and flowers and, standing by her mistress, chapeau in hand, awaited orders.

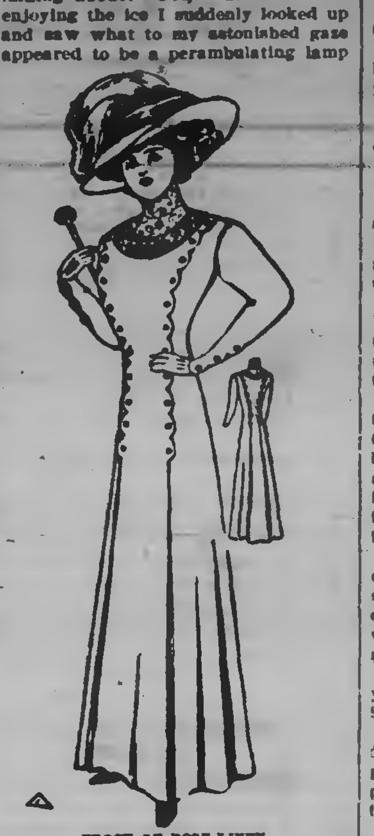
"Now," commanded milady to the coiffure artist, who was plainly in the position of taking a lesson in his own art, "take down my hair and brush it." An assistant having done this menial work, monsieur now took a hand in the actual dressing of the hair. He arranged the pompadour in a low, soft puff over the forehead—which is according to the new mode—and then tied the ends of the hair at the crown of the head with a brown silk string. At this point the maid anchored the hat on her mistress' head with smart pins. If you had only been there, Elsa, to have seen the funny sight madam presented at this moment! A charmingly put up pompadour, topped with a French creation and a long, straight tail of hair hanging down her back. Perfectly oblivious to the humorous side of the situation, milady turned to monsieur with a satisfied air and said, "Now do my back hair." He went to work with the manner of a Corot studying the effect of a bit of foliage coloring, removing occasionally the hat to adjust a puff closer to the brim, but practically all the dressing was done with the hat on. When he finished madame picked up the hand glass and critically examined her head.



A SIMPLE EVENING DRESS.

"Now, Marie," she said to her maid, "you may unpin my hat and study the hairdressing." Marie did as told. "The next time," blandly explained madame to monsieur, "it will not be necessary to put on the hat before my hair is dressed. Marie will study your work and be able to do it by herself before the hat is pinned on. But the first time a new hat is worn it should always be taken to the hairdresser to have the coiffure adapted to it." And away she went, the maid still carrying the hat for Aiken.

I looked at monsieur and laughingly asked, "Was she your first patient?" "Yes, but it's a good idea, and I'm sure madame is only the beginning of the end of a line of such customers." I learned, too, that bangs are coming in again, a fluffy little fringe worn straight across the forehead below the hardly perceptible pompadour. This style has been positively forced back on account of the hardening effect produced by hats worn low over the face. And, speaking of hats, after my coiffure lesson I went over to the Plaza to have some tea—no, not tea, for you know I loathe this 5 o'clock pick-me-up—but while dallying with an ice vanilla cream served in a champagne glass and covered with a small pyramid of whipped cream tinted a delicate green with sugar and flavored with pistachio and garnished with pistachio nuts—I'm explaining the confection, for I think it is such an attractive way to serve cream at a bridge, don't you? But what was I talking about? Yes, I know. While enjoying the ice I suddenly looked up and saw what to my astonished gaze appeared to be a perambulating lamp shade worn by Mrs. Philip Lydig. Instead of being manufactured in Tiffany glass this piece of headgear was produced with strings of enormous cut jet beads forming crown and what there was of the brim, a small projection from which hung a fine fringe of jet that reached almost to the nose of this pretty society matron. The effect of her dark eyes shining through the beads was weird and Turkishesque. Mrs. Lydig has always been famous for her marvelous creations in the millinery line, but since she has gone in for the ballot I thought perhaps she had dropped this sensationalism for one of more vital interest. And, talking of suffragettes, have you seen the literature sent out by the Equal Franchise league, of which Mrs. Clarence Mackay is president and Mrs. Lydig secretary? It's written on the most surprisingly feminine kind of stationery for women to use who yearn to be on equal terms with the stronger sex, daintily typewritten announcements done on the finest lavender paper with a hand wrought border in a white floral design. If their campaign is to be run on the same expensive basis the league will be soon in the hands of a receiver. Possibly, though, the next time you hear from me I will have joined the howling sisterhood, but in the meantime I am glad to think I am not bound to make the world go right. I find my time fully employed just now in getting a little dressmaker to make my summer wash frocks go "just right."



FROCK OF ROSE LINEN.

There are so many inexpensive materials that make up attractively, and this season the simple gown is the correct thing. This little seamstress is making me a charming rose colored linen dress in princess style. It has a graduated panel front and back and is seamed at the sides to make it fit closely to the figure. The panel is finished on the edge with scallops done in black wash cotton, and in each scallop is a black crochet button. It opens to the left of the front under the scalloped edge. The yoke is of cream Irish lace, with a deep circular border of black silk embroidered in rose shades. The sleeves are tight fitting and open part the way up with three scallops and crochet buttons. It's a mighty smart little affair.

Did I tell you Argyle G., who lives in Atlanta, has just sent me the cunningest possum charm? You know, these animals are the mascots of the Taft administration, the "Bill" possum having superseded the "Teddy" bear. A Georgia woman, Mrs. De Forest Algood, has gone into the possum making business and is coining money and fame.

Never Forget His Kindness.

Artemus Ward called on a friend the night before one of his panoramic lectures. There were some three or four large roaches scurrying about the room, and they attracted his attention. "I am very fond of roaches," he said. "Once in my own home I found a roach struggling in a bowl of water. I took a half walnut shell and put him in it. It made a good boat. I gave him a couple of the toothpicks for oars. Next morning I saw that he had fastened a hair to one of the toothpicks and had evidently been fishing. Then, overcome with exhaustion, he had fallen asleep. The sight moved me. I took him out, washed him, gave him a spoonful of egg and let him go. That roach never forgot my kindness, and now my home is full of roaches."

When Peggy Came Back.

By JANE MEREDITH.

"Yes'm. I saw it with my own eyes."

"Do tell!"

"Who'd 'a' thought it?"

"Are you sure he kissed her? P'raps he was just picking a leaf or something out of her hair."

"Well, Mrs. Demming, you needn't think that just because I ain't been married no man ever kissed me. I've had as many beaus in my day as ever you had!"

"Dear me, Miss Laviny, I didn't mean anything personal! Only it's quite a step from your porch to Mrs. Burkett's, and I thought"—

"I wasn't on my porch!" answered Miss Lavinia shortly. "I was right close to the hedge, picking currants."

The last phrase was spoken apologetically, as if prompted by latent shame at thus spying on a neighbor.

"Oh, I don't know but it's your duty, Laviny, to keep your eye open when there's such doings in the heart of a respectable community like ourn," was the unctuous reply of Mrs. Smithers.

"Well, that ain't all I've seen, either," announced Miss Lavinia, rising to this skillfully baited hook. "You know Cousin Sallie left her theater glasses behind, and they're a heap of help. I can stand in my second story front with them and see straight into her parlor."

A girlish figure bending over a strip of renaissance lace in the rear of the shop straightened up suddenly, and an exclamation escaped her lips. But the women clustered around the front door gossiped on excitedly.

"Didn't he take the train for town yesterday morning?" queried Mrs. Smithers.

"Yes. But he came back at early dusk, with his arms full of white paper bundles, and when he got on the porch he tossed them helter skelter on the settee and—and—hugged her!"

"Oh!"

"Ain't that dreadful?"

"If anybody but you, Laviny Hart, had told that I wouldn't believed it!" murmured Mrs. Smithers.

"It may look out of place for a single woman to say, but it does seem to me like a judgment on Doc Burkett for going off to marry a frivolous, do nothing Boston widow instead of some decent, thrifty girl in his own town. He ain't been dead three months, and here is another man hanging around his widow. Perhaps he's an old sweetheart. Everybody knows Doc was well fixed."

"Yes, and they do say," interposed Mrs. Demming, "them as was around when he was brought home that day, that she stood around like a statue, never shedding a tear and just doing what old Dr. Green ordered, like some machine."

"Perhaps she knew it wasn't no use to do anything anyhow," suggested Mrs. Marsden, who had a retreating chin and weak, fishy eyes.

"What's that, Becky Marsden?" snorted Miss Lavinia, turning severely on her insignificant neighbor. "What do you know about it?"

"Nothing," hurriedly replied Mrs. Marsden. "Only I was reading a novel yesterday where a woman got tired of her husband and put something in his coffee that didn't smell nor taste nor anything, and he"—

"Lawzee, Becky, I always knew you was light headed," snapped Miss Lavinia. Nevertheless the group of gossips turned suddenly silent and gazed at each other wide eyed.

"My, wouldn't it be awful if we had a poison case here?"

The girlish figure in the rear rose now, and a clear voice rang across the stuffy little shop:

"You've no right to say such things. You don't know Mrs. Burkett and never wanted to treat her right, and you're wicked, wicked women to talk about her that way!"

Astonished silence fell upon the women. Then Mrs. Smithers' voice, no longer oily and complacent, rose cuttingly.

"That's a nice way for you to speak to your elders, Peggy Smithers, and I'm ashamed of you. D'you mean to call Lavinia Hart a liar?"

The girl fingered her bolt of braid nervously.

"No, aunt, but I can't sit here and listen to such dreadful things about Mrs. Burkett. I've worked for her, and I know she's a lady through and through, and she's not doing anything wrong. There's a reason"—

"Well, Miss Peggy, seeing as you're the only one in this party that has a visiting acquaintance with Mrs. Burkett, you might just walk up there and see who that man is."

"Oh, aunt, I can't! I couldn't ask such a question!"

"You don't need to ask. Worm it out while you're there. You can take up that new set of points you've made. Perhaps Mrs. Burkett might like to wear them with her widow's black." The last words came spitefully.

The girl stood in a pleading attitude.

"This is a nice way to treat your old aunt that's given you bed and board for ten years now. Now, you stop sniveling and trot along."

Poor Peggy! Before those words "bed and board" she never hesitated. They formed the spiritual lash which her aunt swung with unmerciful hand. The girl never stopped to reckon the mittens she knit for the shop, the lace she made or the interminable days of fine sewing as a recompense for the obnoxious "bed and board."

Drearily she lifted her simple sailor hat from the shelf beneath the counter and started on her hateful errand.

The great trees arched protectingly over her head, the wild strawberries bloomed at her feet, and from the woodlands came the calls of her favorite birds. But her eyes were heavy with unshed tears. Was it not bad enough to listen day after day to the gossip that emanated from her aunt's shop without being forced into a partnership with the gossipers?

Languidly and tremblingly she mounted the broad steps leading to Widow Burkett's porch. That much discussed lady met her at the door. Her quick glance detected the misery in Peggy's face.

"Come in, child. You look utterly worn out," she remarked, ushering Peggy into the dim, cool parlor. "What have you there? Oh, such lovely lace collars! I must have one of them. But I'm afraid this sort of work is pulling you down. You're looking bad, Peggy."

The girl flushed guiltily, and her tongue clung to the roof of her mouth. Mrs. Burkett studied her curiously.

"It is a long walk from the village, and as soon as Ned comes in we'll have some lemonade. He makes famous lemonade."

Ned! That must be the awful man. And she called him by his first name with such a proud light in her eyes. A brisk step sounded in the entry, the knob rattled, and Peggy turned dizzy.

"Ned, dear, this is little Peggy Smithers, who made that lovely lace for me. Peggy, this is"—

Peggy had risen mechanically, and as she caught the next words she raised her eyes, swimming with tears, to Mrs. Burkett's astonished gaze. Delicious little chills were chasing up and down her hot spine. Oh, if only she might rush from the house down the shady street to the shop! But, no; that man stood between her and the door.

Peggy had never seen just such a man before. He stood so very tall and straight, laughed in such friendly fashion with his eyes and helped her to tiny cakes and a drink, all cool, sweet and sour, with the air of Prince Charming of fairy book fame! From somewhere—far, far away—came the trill of a riotously happy bird. Peggy raised her eyes once more to Mrs. Burkett's face, and this time there were no tears.

"Why, you're looking better already, Peggy. And now, if you won't have any more cake or lemonade, I shall carry you off to my room. I want you to see the beautiful silks and embroideries Mr. Lameroux has brought me from Japan and China."

* * *

The gossips at Mrs. Smithers' shop were becoming restless when Peggy came back. The girl fairly shivered with suppressed excitement, and her hand trembled as she stuck the hatpin through her sailor.

"Well, ain't you never going to speak?" snapped her aunt. "Didn't you hear anything?"

"Yes; I heard lots, aunt," answered the girl, trying hard to keep the exultation from ringing in her voice. The women leaned forward eagerly.

"His name is Mr. Edward Lameroux"—

"Hoity toity!" sniffed Miss Lavinia.

"Just like a novel," murmured Mrs. Marsden.

"And he's just home from China and Japan, and he's going to stay a year this time, and he's brought her the most beautiful silks you ever saw, and I'm going there to sew on 'em for a whole week, and she gave me the queerest candy. It came from China, too, and it burns your mouth, but it's good—and"—

"Lawsee, Peggy! Why don't you get down to facts?" ejaculated Miss Lavinia. "Is he going to marry her?"

"No!" exclaimed Peggy in a final burst of triumph. "He can't. He's her twin brother, and he's in the navy, and he's been gone five years—and"—

Mrs. Demming rose abruptly, saying: "I declare I forgot that batch of bread. Like as not it's all over my clean floor."

Miss Lavinia, looking decidedly aggrieved, departed in silence. One by one her visitors left, and Mrs. Smithers stood alone, absently dusting and redusting her tiny showcase.

And in Mrs. Burkett's parlor the widow was saying:

"I do feel so sorry for Peggy, Ned, dear, that I believe I'll ask her aunt to let me take her to Boston when we go back. She is so handy with her needle, I know I could get her lots of work."

"Well, if she's so handy why don't you have her for your maid?"

The widow laughed softly.

"She'd simply ruin me, Ned. The child adores me."

"I don't believe you could be ruined, and think what it would mean for that child to be taken away from those harpies. The life must be torture to her sensitive nature."

"It may cost something to get rid of the aunt; but, then, I believe Peggy's worth saving."

Mr. and Mrs. Billington were going to the theater.

Mr. Billington was nervously waiting in the hall, taking a few last impatient puffs from his cigar, while Mrs. Billington was still upstairs trying to put her hat on her head in such a manner that she could take it off again at the theater without disarranging her hair.

"Aren't you ready yet?" called Billington.

"In a minute," replied Mrs. Billington, her mouth full of a hatpin.

"We'll be late!"

"Can't help it; hurrying as fast as I can."

Unemployables Not Wanted.

Lord Northcote, in dealing with immigration, at a political meeting recently in England, said: "As to immigration, there is no desire to keep any man out of the colonies who is able and prepared to maintain himself, but Canada does not desire to have an army of unemployables."

This is the right view of the situation. It must be apparent to the most simple-minded that Canada is not at present a favorable field for the artisan. Canada is a farming country and is destined to be more so year by year. To develop the country it is the agriculturist that should be selected and urged to come to Canada.—Telegram, Winnipeg.

Rev. M. A. McPherson of Little Bras d'Or, who for some time past has had a gang of men prospecting for coal at Leitche's Creek, near Sydney, N.S., has been rewarded by a find of about an 8-foot seam of anthracite coal of very finest quality. There is every indication of unlimited quantity.

The prospecting was done on the farm of James Benton, two miles from Leitche's Creek and the cost of running a line of railroad to deep water for shipping purposes will be slight.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE Y.M.C.A. "GYM" SUCCESSFUL

Exercises Were Executed in Very Creditable Manner—Results of Careful Training Were Evident All the Way Through

The closing exercises of the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium last night were well attended and as usual proved very interesting. The loud applause that greeted the performers at the finish of each exercise showed that their efforts were appreciated by the audience and this should act as an incentive both to the members and leader alike to take greater interest, if possible, in their work.

The wand exercises by the school boys were pleasing to watch, the young boys keeping good time and showed that they must have received good training. The German Horse and parallel bar, exercises by the leders corps, were well received by the audience who liberally applauded each exercise. As a result of careful learning this class did some pretty work which speaks highly as to the proficiency of the physical director. Mr. Collings. In the wrestling match, both contestants showed considerable knowledge of the game, and delighted the spectators by their quick and clever movements Lorne Fitzgerald secured the necessary fall after eight minutes of fast work. The obstacle race furnished plenty of excitement and was won by the Collegiate boys. The dumbell exercises were one of the most interesting on the programme. The light was turned off and the dumbells were illuminated by means of torches and this gave a pretty effect. The pyramids which the junior and senior members took part in were well formed and faultlessly executed and this number, which was the last on the programme, concluded with the formation of the letters Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Harold Brown presided at the piano during the evening and his work added much to the enjoyment of the different exercises. The programme was as follows:

LECTURED AT ST. ANDREW'S BEFORE LARGE AUDIENCE

Mrs. Hyslop the Dominion organizer for the W.C.T.U., addressed a large gathering in St. Andrew's Guild hall last night. Mrs. Hyslop is a native of Scotland, and in speaking she has a broad accent. She is a very forceful and most interesting speaker. She dealt particularly with the question as raised by Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians, and the first chapter showing how one person's freedom might be a stumbling block to another. She dealt fully with the large contribution Canada made annually to the liquor traffic. The victims included many of the brightest men from all the walks of life, and every fifth or sixth family in the country contributed at least one boy to the bar room. She quoted the words of Winnipeg's chief magistrate, who said that liquor was the cause directly or indirectly of a great many cases that came before him. She dealt with the great progress that has been made during the past century, describing and illustrating the change of sentiment in the individual as well as the corporate life. Alcohol stood condemned by medical science as well as the spiritual science. It is a narcotic instead of a stimulant. Any progressive country was uncompromisingly hostile to the traffic as it was a hindrance to progress and in speaking of the blind pig argument she said that one pig with its eyes open could do more than ten blind pigs.

Mrs. Hyslop also gave a warm description of the origin of the W.C.T.U., and of the progress it had made.

Mr. Downie and Miss Bingham rendered appropriate solos.

Mrs. Hyslop leaves this evening for Lindsay.

WERE ENTERTAINED BY THE ALEXANDRA DRAMATIC CLUB

The Fenberg Stock Company were the guests of the Alexandra Dramatic Club at Coleman's restaurant last night and a delightful evening was spent by the gathering. Mr. D. Oscar Waring made a splendid chairman.

Mr. Lando of the stock company, gave some amusing experiences of a company out west and Mr. Hamilton created great merriment with funny stories and witticisms.

Mr. Waring gave the toast to the Ladies which was replied to by Miss Cleveland.

Songs were sung by Miss Shediran, Mr. J. King and Mr. Florence and recitations were contributed by Mr Waring. Mr. Chas. Hammond made a neat speech wishing the Alexandra Dramatic Club every success.

Miss Evylena Gardiner gave a much appreciated pianoforte selection and after a most pleasant evening the members of the Dramatic Club escorted the players to their hotel.

FORMER PETERBORO PEOPLE PROMINENT IN SOUTHERN ALBERTA MUSICAL CIRCLES

The Nanton, Alta, News of March 25th—a copy of which has been received by the Review—contains an interesting account of the Southern Alberta Musical Festival which was held at Nanton on Wednesday, March 24. Mr. Jas. A. Dawson, formerly of Peterborough, won the prize for best baritone solo and the prize for the best duet was won by Mr. Dawson and Mr. Duggan of Nanton.

The Nanton male chorus, of which Mr. Dawson is conductor, also won first place. Miss Ethel Edgecumbe, formerly of Peterborough came a close second for the prize in the senior piano competition.

The News says in part;

"That the Festival was such an unqualified success, is due, not merely to the wise plans laid by the association's committee some months ago, but chiefly to the untiring zeal and executive ability with which these plans were carried out by the Nanton sub-committee consisting of Mrs Bryan who conceived the idea of the Festival and gave it its first start on the road to success, and Messrs. D. M. Duggan, George Coote, and J. A. Dawson. These spared neither time nor labor, during the past three months, on the task entrusted to them; and on March 24th had their reward in seeing this, the first Musical Festival in Southern Alberta, pass off as smoothly as though it were an old established institution.

The Nanton male chorus should certainly be congratulated upon the admirable way in which they rendered both these numbers. "Sweet and Low," was most artistically sung, and in the "Soldiers' Chorus" the articulation attack and tempo were excellent, the blending good, and the high notes given without any apparent effort, the conductor having his choir well in control and certainly giving one of the most creditable performances of the afternoon."

By the King's orders, Mr Roosevelt, will receive every consideration at Mobasa.

Distinctive Artistic Decorative WALL PAPERS

These three terms apply to our elegant stock of wall decorations. Those who are lovers of a beautiful home will readily grant that the papers or decorations of the wall make or mar the appearance of whole room, in fact the whole house where the room is a prominent one—when the paper and furnishings are chosen together and selected as to color and pattern scheme, the effect will be one that you cannot help but admit is not only in good taste, but is a something that is far more when purchased here. It is art, and art can hardly be defined; it unconsciously touches the cord of harmony and lends an attraction to the home that cannot be shaken off—make the home a place of artistic beauty—we can help you. It need cost no more, it may cost less than you will pay for an ordinary wall treatment. Let us give you ideas—It's all in the "knowing how".

FAST LAUNCHES AT STURGEON LAKE

Speed Boats Coming in for Attention---Motor Boat Craze at Lindsay

Fenelon Falls, April 22—Acquatic interests on the Scugog and on Sturgeon Lake are by no means on the wane this season. There are now about 75 launches of various sizes ready to ply these waters. This season there will be some faster launches, it is expected, than those that have won the races in past regattas. Lindsay will have a particularly fine fleet. A 25-foot cutter steel launch, fitted with a 15 h.p. three-cylinder engine, is being built for Mr. F. Knowlson. Mr F. W. Sutcliffe has purchased a twenty-foot launch equipped with a powerful Fairbanks Morse engine. Mr. James Barr and Col. Sam Hughes are talking of new outfits. Mr. Charles Reeves has purchased a handsome 25-footer, equipped with a 6 h.p. Irwin engine. Mr. Wallace Jones will have an 18-foot torpedo stern Perrin launch with reliable engines of suitable power.

Lindsay claims to have had the motor boat craze before any other place on the Trent Valley. The first gasoline launch was that of Mr. G. H. Grantham. It was called the Put-Put, and was brought to these waters in the nineties.

MR. W. CLUXTON HAS COMPOSED A NEW SONG

"The Stream of Life" Promises to be a Hit -- Played by a Rochester Orchestra

Mr. Walter Cluxton, formerly of Peterborough, has composed a new song entitled "The Stream of Life" which promises to be a big hit. Mr. Cluxton is playing with Miss Bonstelle's company at the Baker Theatre, Rochester, and the following clipping from a Rochester paper will be read with interest here:

"Mr. Walter Cluxton, a member of the company who is seen this week in the small character part of a butler, which he plays effectively, has composed the music for a song, "The Stream of Life," which was beautifully played between the second and third acts yesterday by the orchestra under the direction of Mr. August Rohde. It is an exquisite little song and the young composer is to be congratulated on his success in composition."

ONE MONTH IN JAIL WITH HARD LABOR

Was the Sentence Given East City Resident at Police Court This Morning

The Ashburnham resident, who was charged at the Police Court last week with attempting to assault a little girl and her mother, and was found guilty and remanded until this morning for sentence, will spend the next month in jail with hard labor.

The Magistrate in giving judgment said: "I have taken the trouble to enquire of a number of people in regard to your past life. They have all said that you have lived here a long time and that you are a hard worker, with a fair character. I am surprised that a man of your years and character should conduct yourself in the way that you have. The lesson must be taught that young children and women of our homes must be protected, and I will make the sentence as light as possible, one month in jail with hard labor.

FUNERAL OF LATE FATHER T. F. COLLINS

Mass De Requiem Was Chanted by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor -- Many in Attendance

Lindsay, April 22—The remains of the late Rev. Father Timothy Francis Collins were this morning interred in the family plot at the Roman Catholic cemetery with the last rites of the church of which he was a devout and zealous priest.

THE REMAINS ARRIVE

The body of the deceased priest arrived in town on the 8.05 GTR. train, accompanied by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor and a number of clergy. The members of the local CMBA., and the Knights of Columbus escorted the remains to St. Mary's church where the Litany of the dead was chanted by Rev. Fathers Keeley and Phelan and the rosary recited by Venerable Archdeacon Casey. The coffin was afterwards opened when the remains were viewed by the relatives and the large congregation present. The members of the CMBA. and Knights of Columbus remained at the church until this morning.

THE FUNERAL MASS

A large congregation assembled in the church this morning at 9.30 o'clock to assist in the solemn requiem mass, which is one of the most impressive ceremonies in the liturgy of the church. The mass de requiem was chanted by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor. Rev. Father T Spratt, of Wolfe Island, acted as deacon, and Rev. Father Hayes, of Toronto, sub deacon; Rev. Father Kelly, of Peterborough, first master of ceremonies, Rev. Father J. O'Brien, of North Bay second master of ceremonies. Messrs Basil Kingsley and John Spratt, acolytes.

THE CLERGY PRESENT

The following clergy were inside the sanctuary: His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, of Peterborough; Revs. T. J. Spratt, Wolfe Island; Moyna, of Orillia; J. O'Brien, Sault Ste Marie; M Fitzpatrick, Ennismore; P. McGuire, Lowneyville; C J. Phelan, Lakefield; Bretherton, Hastings; John Collins, brother of deceased, Sandwich; Hayes of Toronto; Dean McManus, Port Huron, Mich.; Jefcott, Toronto; Semande, Bursar of Assumption College Sandwich; Meehan, Belleville; T. Spratt, Wolfe Island; Hayes, Brockville; Galvin, Kelly and McColl, Peterborough; Scanlan, Grafton; P. McGuire, Wooler; Venerable Archdeacon Casey and Father Keeley, Lindsay, J F O'Sullivan, Victoria Road.

THE SERMON.

The sermon by Ven. Arch. Casey, was a splendid effort and many in the congregation were visibly affected as he referred to the exemplary character of the late Rev Father Collins and his zealous labors for Christ in the different parishes in which he labored. The piety and devotion displayed by him in the exercise of the duties of his holy office, were also referred to and the congregation were asked to send up their supplications to Almighty God that the deceased might merit the eternal happiness which comes to those who faithfully serve him.

THE FUNERAL

After the service the funeral cortege left the church in the following order: CMBA. and Knights of Columbus, hearse, hacks containing the relatives of deceased and visiting clergy, followed by a large number of friends. At the grave the funeral services were conducted by Rev Father Collins, of Sandwich, brother of the deceased. The remains were interred in the family plot beside those of the dead clergyman's mother.

The pall bearers were Messrs. T. Brady, W F O'Boyle, J O'Rielly, J. Shannon, J Rogers and J. Killen.

WEDDING BELLS

WILSON—WELCH

Yesterday afternoon the marriage of Miss Luta Alberta Welch, only daughter of Alderman and Mrs Welch to Mr John Melville Wilson, son of Mr and Mrs Thos. D. Wilson, took place at the home of the bride in Grange avenue, the Rev C. O. Johnston officiating. The drawing room was elaborately decorated with white and pink flowers, a canopy of smilax and ferns being arranged over a green platform, and from the centre of which hung a large floral bell, over the bride and groom. White satin ribbons formed a path for the bride who was given away by her father and wore a beautiful empire dress of all-over Bruges lace on white satin with design in pearl embroidery, the empire girdle being fastened by a splendid pearl clasp; long tulle veil and orange blossom wreath, and a shower of roses and lilies completed the dress. A splendid diamond ring was worn as the gift of the groom. Miss Ethelyn Ryerson, bridesmaid wore a pink silk marquisette a la princess, with lace garniture and small rose wreath in her hair. Master Alfred Greer was ring bearer and Miss Rhoda Greer was flower girl, in white frock and marguerites. The best man was Mr Thomas A Welch, After the ceremony Miss May Hinckley sang "Love's Coronation," and Mrs. Welch, wearing steel grey satin and grey and pink toque, held a reception and later on Mr. and Mrs Wilson left for New Orleans the going-away dress being of navy blue, navy blue hat and ostrich stole. In last night's presentation of "The Life of an Actress," Mr. D. Oscar Waring appeared to splendid advantage as Count de Fontenoy. With only a day's notice Mr. Waring mastered the part and played it in a manner that won him the approval of the audience.

Mr. Waring's make-up for the character was an excellent one and his deportment was easy and confident.

LORAINE CO. NEXT WEEK

Will Appear at the Opera House Commencing Monday the 26th

The most popular moving picture company that has visited Peterborough, the Loraine Amusement Company, will return for an indefinite season commencing Monday of next week. The company appeared here a short time ago and gave very entertaining programmes at a most reasonable price of admission.

During their coming engagement they will have a complete change of pictures and illustrated songs as well as new specialty artists. These will include some excellent vaudeville performers in novel and successful acts.

The amateur night of the Loraine Company's last appearance here will long be remembered by local theatregoers as the most hilariously amusing occasion for many moons and their next amateur night will be expectantly awaited. The company has had a most prosperous season this year and has been appearing to large business in all the towns it has been in and should enjoy a very large patronage during its engagement here.

SEE "THE HAWK AND THE DOVE"

Tonight the famed sensational play "The Hawk and the Dove" will be the offering. This is the drama that has caused such a furore for New England cities where the company has played and has caused more comment than anything else in a decade. While "The Lamb and the Brute" presented last year was sensational "The Hawk and the Dove" is even more so and it has been a common occurrence for several people to faint during the progress of the play. Yet the piece is not wholly trashy since it has for its aim the exploitation of theories of modern science and it is only by the sensational scenes that the real meaning may be clearly conveyed to the spectator. A man of physics has in his research come across an old formula to the effect that a transfusion of blood from one person to the other will change the entire nature and character of the people whom he uses for subjects. Upon this theory is the play constructed and in its workings out it reveals sensation upon sensation and thrill upon thrill. No one who likes a sensational play can afford to miss going to the opera house tonight.

The engagement of the Fenberg company will come to a close tomorrow when in the afternoon "The Life of an Actress" will be given and in the evening a story of New York detective life, entitled "Pinkerton Detective."

REBEKAH LODGE I.O.O.F.

The members of Golden Link Rebekah Lodge, No 81, IOOF, will attend divine service at St. Andrew's church on Sunday evening, April 25. The members are requested to meet in the school room at 6.30. M. Gibbs, Recording Secretary.

IS DIRE ENEMY OF DAN CUPID

Telephone Manager at Lindsay is Having Troubles of His Own

Lindsay, April 23—Manager T. J. Tilley, of the local branch of the Bell Telephone is a dire enemy of Dan Cupid. The cause of the enmity of the manager is the number of "hello girls" the golden god steals at every opportunity and the consequent embarrassment through lack of skilled operators at the central office.

"It comes like an epidemic," said Mr. Tilley this morning referring to marriages, in which the telephone girls figure as brides. "And an office loses several at once."

Just yesterday two young ladies employed at the central office were united in marriage to a couple of lucky young men. This means the necessity of training other young ladies to the duties required. Then in their turn these become infected with the marriage fever and another class has to be taught. And so it goes, ad infinitum.

THE AMATEURS THIS EVENING

Will Either be Appreciated or Hooked

In connection with "The Hawk and the Dove" which will be given at the Grand Opera House tonight the local amateurs will perform. Anyone who has seen an amateur night can appreciate the unceasing fun of the occasion.

Several aspirants for the cash prizes will take part tonight and "Za hook" will likely be in evidence.

"UNKNOWN" IS JIMMY KELLY THE FAST BUFFALO BOY

Gene Hurtubise's unknown who meets Corney Burns at the roller rink on Monday has turned out to be none other than Jimmy Kelly, of Buffalo, the well known lightweight. Kelly, who is increasing in weight every day, will tip the beam within the welter-weight measure and will weigh in at 142 pounds when he meets the clever local boy.

Kelly is one of the most effective performers in his weight division in New York State and haspeleaned up all his opponents in Buffalo and other parts of the state. He has also made a name for himself on the Pacific Coast, where he has won several battles in main preliminaries and main bouts. He is very fast with the mitts and a hard hitter.

BALL TOSSER'S CORNER

Rule 28—Section 1. Each side shall be required to have present on the field during a championship game a sufficient number of substitute players in uniform, conforming to the suits worn by their team mates, to carry out the provisions of this code which requires that not less than nine players shall occupy the field in any inning of the game.

Section 2—Any such substitute may at any stage of the game take the place of a player whose name is in his team's batting order, but the player whom he succeeds shall not thereafter participate in that game.

Section 3—A base runner shall not have another player whose name appears in the batting order of his team run for him except by the consent of the captain of the other team.

At the head of this column, the Review will publish daily an important rule taken from the Rules of Baseball. It is a recognized fact no ball player is perfect in the rules, regardless of his experience; but the fellow best versed in baseball law is going to advance more rapidly than the player who isn't. The Review also has a supply of handy score cards on which games can be recorded for publication in this paper. Captains of teams and secretaries of clubs can have same by applying at the Review office.

HERE ARE a few of the names by which the teams in the Western Canada Baseball League will be called;

Winnipeg, Maroons.
Calgary, Cowboys.
Regina, Statesmen.
Edmonton, Capitals.
Brandon, Angels.
Lethbridge, Miners.
Moosejaw, The Jaws.
Medicine Hat, Mad Hatters.

JOHNNY Evers will again be seen on the Cubs' lineup, and it's a safe bet at 50 to 1 that Kling will be back again very soon.

WANTED—Fielder Jones as manager of the White Sox.

TORONTO got away to a good start yesterday when they beat Newark.

IN ALL Eastern League games this season the visiting team will be allowed twenty minutes batting practice.

ANOTHER meeting of the Senior Baseball League should be called as soon as possible.

FOLLOWING are the possibilities in baseball for this city this season;—Midland league, Intermediate and Senior leagues, Church league, Public school league. If these do not furnish enough baseball for the fans, the Examiner team may arrange games with some third grade outside nines.

CORNEY BURNS WILL REPORT AT TORONTO ON TUESDAY

The Edmonton ball team will report in Toronto on Monday and practice a week or ten days at the Island. Corney Burns will be on hand on Tuesday to workout with the other members of the team until they leave for the west.

All the players have been signed, and Danny McGuire, the manager, in the course of telephone communication from Toronto with Burns yesterday told him that the prospects of a trophy-bidding nine were excellent.

The president of the Edmonton team is in Toronto sizing up the players who are already at the Queen City.

Edmonton's first game will be with Calgary on the latter's grounds May 12th.

A chimney had caught fire and when the firemen arrived, they were considerably handicapped by the dense smoke. The blaze started about half way up the chimney and the room in which teh firemen had to work was filled with smoke. However with the use of chemicals the fire was put out and very little damage resulted.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

BELLEVILLE REGIMENT IS NOT COMING FOR VICTORIA DAY

Major Clegg to-day received the official acceptance of the 19th Regiment of St. Catharines to the invitation extended that corps to visit Peterborough on May 24th. Col. Campbell writes that the 19th Regiment is happy to accept the kind invitation.

A letter has been received from Col. Stewart, of the 15th Regiment, Belleville stating that the Belleville corps will not be able to come to Peterborough for the holiday as a trip to Picton had previously been arranged. Col. Stewart wishes the 57th Regiment a most successful celebration on the 24th.

THIS CASE WAS FURTHER ENLARGED THIS MORNING

The case in the division court this morning of Charles Mack of the "Come Back to Erin" company against the management of the Grand Opera House was enlarged until the next sittings of the court. It will be remembered that the Opera House management seized the scenery of the company when they were here to pay what was the house's share of the receipts when the company's manager, announced that the play would be discontinued and told the audience to get its money back.

In Toronto the other day Justice Riddell ordered the payment of $40 before the scenery was released. This is the value placed on it by a valuator who examined it. This amount should have been paid into the division court here but it has not been yet.

The amount Mack was suing the local management for for loss of time to the company, etc, was $500.

FANCY SUITS FOR MEN NOW

The attire of the well-dressed man has undergone a revolution during the past year. Plainness in men's apparel is a thing of the past. Elaboration has come, and now we are to have fancy features in suits for men. No suit will be worn this spring that has not some distinguishing mark of the season's styling. The innovations are made for the sake of smartness, but the necessary touch of dignity will not be lacking.

Color harmony will be the chief new feature in male dress. The vogue for solid colors has resulted in a tendency towards color matching in various parts of the attire. Hose scarf and handkerchief worn in the breast pocket will be uniform in color for summer wear, and in many cases the uniformity will extend to the hat, shirt and belt.

The apparel modes for 1909 are distinctly novel. To be correctly informed as to what these style innovations mean is an absolute necessity for every man who takes any pride whatever in his personal appearance. Informal day dress (worn for any informal day or evening purpose, such as business, travelling or for country use, does not toe the mark of strict formality. The strict dictates of usage are not adhered to during the months between April and September. Nevertheless, such apparel as this has its essential features, the general points of which we will summarize:

The Suit.—Single or double-breasted coat with self of fancy waistcoat. Trousers of same material as coat. The approved coat style follows the two or three-button model with long neatly graduated lapels and deep centre vent. The skirt has a slight "flare" from the waist over the hips. It is in the sleeves and pockets that suits will show the novelty features. The cuffs will be worn in an endless variety of designs, in which buttons, seams and straps will form the features. Pockets will be cut both curved and diagonally, and designs similar to those used in the cuffs will be applied to them. Vests will show a flap depending from the outer edge of the pocket, and will be collarless.

The Shirt.—White or fancy shirts, plain or pleated, stiff or soft bosom will be the correct thing for informal wear. Cuffs will be attached on all informal garments. The coat style will be much worn. Stripes predominate in shirt patterns.

The Collar.—For informal wear the fold collar with the close front enjoys the most popularity. The wing collar with rounded tabs will also be accepted.

The Scarf.—The straight four-in-hand in the narrower widths has almost an exclusive call. The shades harmonize with the suit and range from taupe, the new smoke-shade, to grey, green and brown. Solid colors without pattern will be the choice of the dignified dressers, while the patterns will consist of stripes only.

The Shoes.—Either tan or black, laced or cut low. Dark red tan will also be a popular color.

The Gloves.—Grey, silk Lisle, chamois or light weight tan or dark shades of green.

The Hat.—Soft shapes in green, grey and brown predominate. The hard shapes will have flat rims and be worn in more subdued colors.

The Underwear.—Coat style shirts and knee length drawers of nainsook, pongee, silk or silk mixture.

DEPOSE SULTAN

This Action Decided on by Big Majority in Turkish Assembly.

Special to the Review.

Constantinople, April 23—By a big majority it was voted today in the assembly to depose the Sultan. Before this becomes effective however, its legality must be decided and in that time many things might take place.

When the news was made public in Constantinople it was received with great acclaim by the Young Turks and their adherents but from indications many of the troops stationed about Yildiz Kiosk where the Sultan is now staying will retain their allegiance to their old ruler.

To Irrigated Lands.

Some idea of the class of settlers now pouring into Bow River Valley, Alberta, and acquiring irrigated lands may be gained from the fact that one of the latest arrivals from Nebraska brought five cars of settler's effects and will immediately erect substantial buildings.

There is great activity throughout the valley, building operations being carried on throughout entire districts. A large number of additional stores are being erected in towns with a view to accommodating increased demands made by settlers. Farm work also is in full progress and settlers are busily engaged discing preparatory to seeding.

Schools in the West.

Provision for higher education is not neglected in the towns, springing up in the prairie regions. Moose Jaw is at present erecting a collegiate institute, which is stated to be a very handsome edifice, at a cost of $130,000.

TRAMP PRINTERS.

Some Years Ago There Were Plenty In Ontario.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago Ontario was overrun with tramp printers, and they were heartily welcome, too, because when a voters' list or "The Official Proceedings of the Township Council," or "Rules for the Government of Fence Viewers, Pound-keepers," etc., were given out to be printed it made the average country printing office busy for a month. The printers worked overtime, and the boss wore a clean white collar twice a week instead of fortnightly, feeling that he could be extravagant over the prospect of a little extra coin of the realm. Occasions are on record where even the office towel was washed. If a tramp printer happened along just at that critical juncture, he was welcomed with open arms and given a fortnight's work. Then he would fail to report the morning after drawing his pay and nothing would be heard of him for a year or more, when he would turn up just as mysteriously and asked for assistance. The stories he could tell of the other offices and of his experiences on the road were always interesting, and held the compositors spellbound, as they sat around the big box stove before seven in the morning or at noon hour listening to the Munchausenian utterances of their new-found friend.

In those days the supply of type in the average country office was wholly inadequate when it came to getting out either a voters' list or a fall fair prize list on the rush, the result being that four pages were about all that could be got up at one time. The printers could go on working at the next four while the first were being run off on the press, but as there would be a shortage of capital M's, and J's and periods, and a lot more "sorts," other letters had to be turned upside down for them, then when the first pages were liberated, replaced by the type obtained from the distribution of these. It occasioned a lot of swearing sometimes, but had the salutary effect of being the means of cleaning up all the "pi" around the office, hidden under imposing stones or thrown into the "hell box" by the devil, who was too lazy to sort it out. Frequently the tramp printer was given this work to do—and naturally the steady comps were mighty glad to have him round—and he didn't care. He could borrow all the tobacco, smoking or chewing, he required, and was willing to do any kind of work, especially when he could find a stool to sit on while at his case.

February's Accidents.

Industrial accidents occurring to 236 individual work people in Canada during the month of February, 1909, were reported to the Department of Labor. Of these, 76 were fatal and 160 resulted in serious injuries. The number of fatal accidents were 10 more than in January, and 13 less than in February of last year. In the railway service during the month, 23 were killed and [illegible] injured.

The most serious accident was the killing of seven construction hands by an explosion of dynamite north of Nepigon, Ont.

There were five trade disputes in Canada during February, affecting 295 employes, the lost of time being approximately 4,395 working days. One dispute was terminated through negotiations, another resulted in compromise.

Decimating the Moose.

"Can the game moose of Nova Scotia stand the slaughter which is going on and still thrive?" is a question that sportsmen are now asking themselves. Notwithstanding the safeguards which the Government has provided in the Game Act for the protection of the moose, and the care with which Chief Game Commissioner Knight and the wardens are administering the provisions of the act, the number of moose killed in Nova Scotia each year is probably greater than many people imagine, and prompts the question whether or not the moose will be killed off in this province ere long. During the season of 1908 (October 1 to December 1) the number of moose legally killed in Nova Scotia was 590, of which Halifax had the largest share of any county (151).

Savage Was Justified.

Indian gratitude has probably never been more sincerely proved than in an incident which recently occurred to James Oliver Curwood, the novelist and writer of boys' books, who returned from the Hudson Bay wilds a few weeks ago. Mr. Curwood is the author of "The Wolf Hunters," an exciting tale of the wild northland, in which the author has spent so much of his time. It was while gathering material for this story that he by the merest chance saved one of his Indian guides, Mukoki, from severe injury—probably death.

A few weeks after this, when Curwood and his two Indians were on their return to civilization, the bones of a huge bull moose were discovered, and near the bones of this moose was found the skeleton of a man. The story of the tragedy was plain. The unfortunate hunter had mortally wounded the moose, and had been killed by the animal. Naturally the writer wished to bring something of this wilderness tragedy home with him. The remains of the hunter were buried, but the old and rotting gun and splendid horns of the moose were carried along. After toting the antlers for 25 miles it was realized that they were too great a burden to pack two hundred miles and consequently they were left behind.

"I come get heem when snow fall," said the old Indian, whose life the author had saved.

Weeks and months passed, and back in civilization Mr. Curwood forgot all about the horns. One day recently he received notice from the Detroit customs officials that a package was being held in bond. Investigating, he found that they were the old horns. Mukoki, the uncivilized savage, had kept his word, and had traveled a full 400 miles in the wilderness to do a kind act for the white man whom he loved. He sent no word, with the exception of four niches in one of the prongs, which was his "forest sign." Mr. Curwood has dedicated his stirring book to this faithful old Indian.

London, April 23.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Standard congratulates Mr. Fielding on his excellent financial statement. It says he chose wisely in deciding to balance the national accounts rather by a reduction in expenditure than by imposing new taxation. The renewal of the practice of attaching sinking funds to loans issued in London should have the effect of making them more popular and at the same time putting the country's finances on a sounder basis.

PREVENTION OF TUBERCULOSIS

Convention of Association Engaged in This Work to be Held in Hamilton

The ninth annual meeting and convention of the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Consumption and other forms of tuberculosis is to be held in Hamilton on Wednesday and Thursday, May 19 and 20 next.

The morning of the first day will be devoted to the reading of reports and the appointment of committees. In the afternoon Dr. White, of Pittsburg sanatorium, will deliver an address on "The Duty of Municipalities in reference to Tuberculosis." In the evening of the same day his worship the mayor will deliver an address of welcome, after which Dr. Adami, of Montreal, will speak on a subject which ought to command attention, "How One Can Do Most Good in Arresting Tuberculosis at the Smallest Outlay."

The topic set down for general discussion during the forenoon of Thursday is "The Duty of the People Towards Consumption." Hon. Adam Beck, Mr. Downey, M.P.P.; Dr. Fagan, of Victoria, B.C.; Dr. Geo. D. Porter, and a number of others, both physicians and laymen are expected to take part in the discussion of this subject.

On Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock, the meeting will adjourn to the Mountain sanatorium to attend a reception given by the ladies of Hamilton. Not the least interesting part of the programme is the visit to the sanatorium when it will be seen how much can be done for the treatment and cure of consumption at a moderate cost. The success of the Mountain sanatorium should furnish an object lesson well worthy of the study of municipalities contemplating action for the reduction of tuberculosis within their own neighborhood.

THE BRUSH FAMILY

For cleaning, a stiff paint brush is much better than a whisk broom.

If you cannot afford the regulation flat-handled brush for cleaning behind the radiator, use a child's broom, which you can buy for five or ten cents.

Make it a practice to wash the broom at least once a week.

It does not take long to dip the broom in a pail of hot suds and then let water run over it, and the carpets look so much better when swept with a clean broom.

Scrub brushes after they have been used should always be washed out and put in the sun to dry. A wet brush lying around, in buckets or in the sink, is uncleanly, and is a sure way to draw water bugs and roaches. Of course most people know this and still they are careless, particularly maids.

It will be found an economy to possess two hair brushes instead of one. In this way one can always be clean, and there is a better opportunity to air them, which is just as important as washing them.

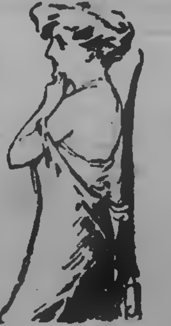
Gospel Temperance

The Gospel temperance meeting that will be held in the Crystal next Sunday afternoon at 4.15 o'clock, will be in charge of the Young People's Societies of the various churches in the city. Several of the societies have already consented to take part in the meeting. There will be special music, and as it will be the last meeting this spring, a large attendance is requested. The meetings will be resumed in September. The reason no meeting was held last Sunday was because of the mass meeting held at the same time in the opera house.

The Barrier

By Rex Beach



COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

Poleon threw up his hand. "M'sieu, dat's more closer to de insult dan w'at you call me jus' now. You don' need for spoke it."

"You're right. There's no need to tell you that. As for showing her certain attentions—well, I admit that I have, as you know; but, thank God, I can say I've been a gentleman and addressed her as I would the fairest lady I've known."

"An' you mean for marry, eh?" probed the other.

"I did not say so," Burrell declared at last. "It's a thing I can't discuss, because I doubt if you could understand what I would say. This life of yours is different from mine, and it would be useless for me to explain the reason why I cannot marry her. Leaving out all question of my sentiment, there are insurmountable obstacles to such a union. But, as to this talk, I think that can be stopped without annoyance to her, and, as for the rest, we must trust to time to bring about a proper adjustment"—

A low, discordant sound of laughter arrested his words, and, turning, he beheld Necia standing revealed in the dimness.

"What an amusing person you are!" she said. "I've had hard work holding in all this time while you were torturing your mind and twisting the honest English language out of shape and meaning. I knew I should have to laugh sooner or later. That's your Dixie chivalry, I suppose. Well, I've played with you long enough, Lieutenant Burrell. I'm tired of the game, and you interest me no longer."

"You—you—say you've been playing with me!" stammered the man. The bottom of things seemed suddenly to slide from under him. He was like one sinking in some hideous quagmire. He felt as if he were choking.

"Why, of course," she cried scornfully, "just as you took me up for amusement. You were such a fine, well dressed, immaculate mound of conceit that I couldn't resist the temptation, and you hid your condescension so poorly that I thought you ought to be taken down a peg. I knew I was a squaw, but I wanted to see if I were not like other women, after all, and if you were not like other men." She was talking rapidly now, almost shrilly, for she had never attempted to act before, while he stood dazed and speechless, fumbling at his throat while she railed at him. "You needn't waste time debating whether I'm good enough for you, because I'm not—decidedly I'm not your kind, and you are a joke to me."

He uttered an inarticulate cry, but she ran on unheeding, her eyes wide and glowing like coals, her lips chalk white. "You see, it's time I stopped such foolishness anyhow, for I'm to be married on Sunday."

"You are going to be married?" he muttered laboriously.

"Yes, to Poleon. Why, that's been understood for years."

He whirled upon the Canadian in a fury, and his words came hot and tumbling.

"D-don't blame him!" cried the girl hysterically. "It is all my doing. He had no part in it."

"Yes," said Doret in a restrained voice, "dis ain' no work of mine."

"You're a liar!" breathed the Kentuckian, now fairly wild with anger, but the other looked him squarely between the eyes and made no move.

"M'sieu'," he cried, "I'm livin' t'orty year an' never took no nam' lak dat before, but dere's reason here w'y I can't mak' no answer."

"Why, you aren't really angry, lieutenant?" mocked Necia. "It's only the joke of an ignorant half breed girl whose sense of humor is all out of gear. You mustn't quarrel over a squaw!"

She taunted him like a baited badger, for this thing was getting beyond her control, and the savage instincts of the wilderness were uppermost.

"You are quite right," he replied. "I am very foolish, and the laugh is with you." His lips tried to frame a smile, but failed. He bowed low and, turning, walked out.

The moment he was gone she cried breathlessly:

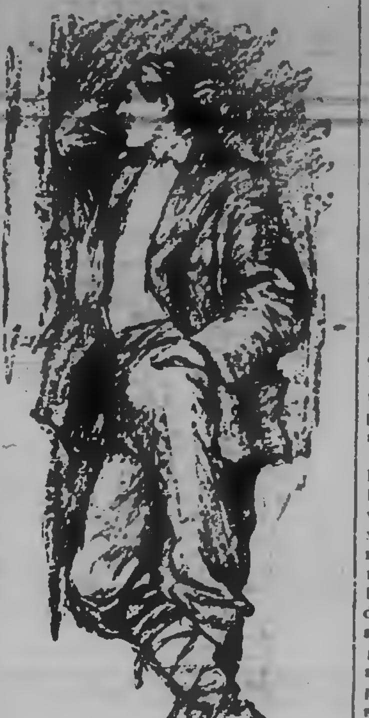
"You must marry me, Poleon. You've got to do it now!"

"Do you mean dat for sure?" he said.

"Can't you see there's nothing else for it after this? I'll show him that he can't make me a toy to suit his convenience. I've told him I would marry you on Sunday, and I'll do it or die. Of course you don't love me, for you don't know what love is, I suppose. How—could you?" She broke down and began to catch her breath amid coughing sobs that shook her slender body, though they left her eyes dry and feverish. "I—I'm very unhappy, b-but I'll be a good—wife to you. Oh, Poleon, if you only knew"—

He drew a long breath. When he spoke his voice had the timbre of some softly played instrument, and a tremor ran through his words.

"No! I don' know w'at kin' of love is dis, for sure. De kin' of love I know is de kin' I sing 'bout in my songs. I s'pose it's different breed to yours, an' I'm begin to see it don' live nowhere but on dem songs of mine. Dere's long tam' I waste here now—five year—but tomorrow I go again lookin' for my own countree."



"Five year I've wait—an' jus' for dis."

"Poleon," she cried, looking up with startled eyes, "not tomorrow, but Sunday! We will go together."

He shook his head. "Tomorrow, Necia! An' I go alone."

"Then you won't—marry me?" she asked in a hushed and frightened voice.

"No! Dere's wan t'ing I can't do even for you, Necia; dere's wan t'ing I can't geeve, dat's all—jus' wan on all de worl'. I can't kill de li'l' god wit' de bow an' arrer. He's all dat mak' de sun shine, de birds sing an' de leaves w'isper to me; he's de wan li'l' feller w'at mak' my life wort' livin' an' keep music in my soul. If I keel 'im dere ain' no more lef' lak it, an' I'm never goin' flu' my lan' of content nor sing nor laugh no more. I'm t'inkin' I would rader sing songs to 'im all alone onderneat' de stars beside my campfire an' talk wit' 'im in my bark canoe dan go livin' wit' you in fine house an' let 'im get col' an' die."

"But I told him I'd marry you—that I had always intended to. He'll believe I was lying," she moaned in distress.

"Dat's too bad, but dis t'ing ain' no doin's wit' me. Dere's wan t'ing in dis worl' mus' live forever, an' dat's love. If we kill 'im den it's purty poor place for stoppin' in. I'm cut off my han' for help you, Necia, but I can't be husban' to no woman in fun."

Poleon waited patiently until her paroxysm of sobbing had passed, then gently raised her and led her out through the back door into the summer day, which an hour ago had been so bright and promising and was now so gray and dismal. He followed her with his eyes until she disappeared inside the log house.

"An' dat's de end of it all," he mused. "Five year I've wait—an' jus' for dis."

Meade Burrell never knew how he gained his quarters, but when he had done so he locked his door behind him, then loosed his hold on things material. He raged about the room like a wild animal and vented his spite on every inanimate thing that lay within reach. As yet his mind grasped but dully the fact that she was to marry another, but gradually this thought in turn took possession of him. She would be some one else's wife in two days. The thought drove the lover frantic, and he felt that madness lay that way if he dwelt on such fancies for long.

As he grew calmer his reason began to dissect the scene that had taken place in the store, and he wondered whether she had been lying to him, after all. No doubt she had been engaged to the Frenchman and had always planned to wed Poleon, for that was not out of reason. She might even have set out mischievously to amuse herself with him, but at the recollection of those rapturous hours they had spent together he declared aloud that she had loved him, and him only. Every instinct in him shouted that she loved him in spite of her cruel protestations.

A man came with his supper, but he called to him to begone. There are those who believe that in passing from daylight to darkness a subtle transition occurs akin to the change from positive to negative in an electrical current and that this intangible, untraceable atmospheric influence exerts a definite psychical effect upon men and their modes of thought. Be this as it may, it is certain that as the night grew darker the lieutenant's mood changed. He lost his fierce anger at the girl and reasoned that he owed it to her to set himself right in her eyes; that in all justice to her he ought to prove his own sincerity.

An up river steamboat was just landing as he neared the trading post—a freighter, as he noted by her lights. In the glare at the river bank he saw Poleon and the trader, who had evidently returned from Lee's creek, and without accosting them he hurried on to the store. Peering in from the darkness, he saw Alluna. No doubt Necia was alone in the house behind. So he stumbled around to the back to find the window of her room aglow behind its curtain, and, receiving no answer to his knock, he entered, for it was customary at Gale's to waive ceremony. Inside the big room he paused, then stepped swiftly across and rapped at her door, falling back a pace as she came out.

Instead of speaking at once, as he had planned, to prevent her escaping, he was struck speechless, for the vision that met his eyes was that which he had seen one blithe spring morning three months before, but tonight there was no shawl to conceal her sweetly rounded neck and shoulders, whose whiteness was startling against the black of the ballroom gown. The slim gold chain hung around her neck, and her hair was piled high, as before. He noted every smallest detail as she stood there waiting for him to speak, forgetful of everything else.

She had put on the gown again to see if perchance there might be some mark of her blood or breed that had escaped her previous scrutiny, and, as there was no one to observe her, she had attired herself slowly, absorbed in her whimsy. Her wistful beauty dazed the young man and robbed him of the words he had rehearsed, but as she made to flee from him, with a pitiful gesture, toward her room the fear of losing her aroused him and spurred his wit.

"Don't go away! I have something I must tell you. I've thought it over, and you've got to listen, Necia."

"I am listening," she answered very quietly.

"Understand me, I'm not whining, and I'm willing to take my medicine. I couldn't talk or think very straight this afternoon, but you were wrong."

"Yes, I know now I was wrong. It was most unladylike, wasn't it? But, you see, I am only a little savage."

"I don't mean that. I mean you were wrong when you said I had played with you. In the sight of God, I swear you were mistaken. You have made me love you, Necia. Can't you see?"

She made no sign.

"If you can't, I owe it to you and to myself to set you right. I am not ashamed to acknowledge my love, and even when you are married to Poleon I want you to know that I shall love you always."

Even yet she made no sign. Was he not merely repeating the same empty words with which he had so often beguiled her? There was no word of marriage. He still considered her unworthy, beneath him.

"You do love me, Necia—you do! I see it in your eyes!" And he started toward her with open arms, but she shrank away from him.

"No, no! Don't touch me!" she almost screamed.

"My dear one," he breathed, "you must listen to me. You have nothing to fear, for I love you—love you—love you! You were made for me! You'll be my wife. Yes; you'll be married on Sunday, but to me, not to Poleon or any other man!"

Did she hear aright? Was he, her soldier lover, asking her, the Indian girl?

"You do love me, don't you?" he pleaded. But still she could not speak, and he tried to read the answer in her swimming eyes.

"You mean—you want to—marry me?" she murmured at last, hesitating shyly at the word that had come to play so momentous a part in her little world.

"Indeed I do," he declared, with emphasis, "in spite of everything, anything! Nothing else matters. I'll quit the army. I'll give up the service and my people too. I'll put everything back of me, and we'll start out anew—just you and I."

"Wait a moment," she said, retreating a little from his eager, outstretched arms. "Why do you need to do all that?"

"Never mind why. It's as good as done. You wouldn't understand."

"But I think I do understand now. Do I really mean all that to you?"

"Yes, and more!"

"Listen to me," said the girl quietly. "I want you to talk slowly so I may not misunderstand. If you—marry me must you forego all those great things you speak of—your profession, your family, your future?"

"Nonsense!" exclaimed the soldier. "If they don't bother me, Necia, why should you worry?"

"Would you really have to give up your family—your sister? Would those people you are so proud of and who are so proud of you—would they cut you off?"

"There is no question of cutting off. I have no inheritance coming. I don't want any. I don't want anything except you, dear."

"Won't you tell me?" she persisted. "You see, I am dull at these things."

"Well, what if they do?" he conceded. "You more than make it up to me. You outweigh a thousand families."

"And would your marriage to a—a—to me destroy your army career?"

"Well, it will really be much easier for both of us if I resign from the service," he finally admitted. "In fact, I've decided to do so at once."

"No, no! You mustn't do that. Tonight you think I am worth the price, but a day will come"—

He leaned forward and caught her hands in his.

"Meade, I can't let you do it."

"I'd like to see you help yourself," he said banteringly.

"I can and I will. You must not marry me, Meade. It's not right; it can't be." She suddenly realized what this renunciation would mean and began to shiver.

"It will be over before you know it," she heard him saying in a lame attempt at levity. "Father Barnum is an expert, and the operation won't occupy him ten minutes."

At that moment they heard the voices of the trader and his squaw outside, approaching the house. The girl's breath caught in her throat. She flung herself recklessly upon her lover's breast and threw her arms around his neck in an agony of farewell.

"Meade, Meade, my soldier," she sobbed, "kiss me goodby for the last time!"

"No," he said roughly.

"Now you must go," she said, tearing herself away, "and for my sake don't see me again."

"I will! I will! I will ask your father for you tonight."

"No, no! Don't, please don't! Wait till—till tomorrow—till I say the word! Promise me! On your love, promise!"

Her eyes held such a painful entreaty that he nodded acquiescence as the door opened and her father and Alluna entered.

CHAPTER XIII.

STARK TAKES A HAND IN THE GAME.

The old man greeted the lieutenant affably, but as his glance fell on his daughter he stopped stock still on the threshold.

"I told you never to wear that dress again," he said in a dry, harsh voice.

The girl made no answer, for her heart was breaking, but turned and went into her room. Burrell had an irresistible desire to tell Gale that he wanted his daughter for his wife. It would be an unwonted pleasure to startle this iron gray old man and the shawled and shambling mummy of red, with the unwinking eyes that always reminded him of two oxheart cherries, but he had given Necia his promise. So he descended to the exchange of ordinary topics and inquired for the news of the creek.

"Necia's ground is getting better every hour," the trader said. "Yesterday they found a sixty dollar pan."

"Have you struck pay on yours?"

"No; Poleon and I seem to hold bad hands. Some of his laymen are quitting work. They've cross cut in half a dozen places and can't find a color."

Gale went to Necia's door and called her, but when she appeared he was unprepared for the tragic face with which she greeted him.

"Daughter," he said, "don't feel bad over what I said. I didn't mean to be cross with you, but—I don't like that dress."

"Were you cross with me, daddy?" she said dully. "I didn't hear. What did you say?"

He looked at her in amazement. "Necia, little girl, what is the trouble?"

She was staring past him, and her fingers were fumbling helplessly with the lace of her gown, but she began to show signs of collapse.

"I sent him away—I—gave him up, when he wanted me—wanted me— Oh, daddy, he wants to marry me—and I sent him away!"

"He asked you to marry him in—in—in spite of who you are and what I am?"

"Yes; he is ready to give up his ambition, his army, his future, his family, everything, for me—to sacrifice it all, and so, of course, I couldn't let him." She spoke simply, as if her father would surely understand and approve her action, while in her voice was a note of inevitable resignation. "You see, I never understood what my blood would mean to him until tonight. I've been selfish and thoughtless, I guess. I just wanted him, and wanted him to take me, but now that he is mine I love him more than I thought. He is so dear to me that I can't drag him down—I can't—I can't!" She went to the open door and stood leaning against the casing, facing the cool outer darkness, her face hidden from them, her form sagging wearily, as if the struggle had sapped her whole strength.

Alluna crept to the trader and looked up at him eagerly, whispering:

STORY OF ROBERT BARR.

A Tale of the Days When Novelist Was in Canada.

In the country between Toronto and Detroit there linger several stories of the days when Robert Barr, the novelist, who has been so successful in England, was in Canada some years ago. Along with a friend one night he was on a Grand Trunk train approaching London. The coaches were well filled, and the hungry travelers were beginning to look forward with keen anticipation to the customary fifteen minutes for refreshments. Something like consternation swept through the train, however, a short time later when the brakeman announced that there would only be a stop of five minutes for lunch. When the train pulled in there was a frantic rush for the counter, but Barr showed no signs of perturbation. His friend counselled haste, but the incipient novelist replied:

"Wait, I've been over this road before and I think I have an idea."

In leisurely fashion he crossed the platform and, standing for a moment at the door of the restaurant, he surveyed the crowd. Presently he found what he was seeking, and he laid his course for a place at the counter to reach which he must pass the conductor of the train who was busy eating as much as he could in as short a time as possible. Just as he reached the ticket-taker he was impelled to tie his shoe lace. He knelt, did so, and when he rose he had secreted under his coat the conductor's blue and gold hat. With the hat clipped between his knees he sat up to the counter and ordered his meal which he proceeded to eat with a deliberation that would have gladdened the heart of Horace Fletcher and the thorough-mastication school.

Before he and his companion had half finished there was a commotion in the dining room. The conductor started to look for his hat with a peevishness that gradually rose to a red hot rage. But Barr sat still and munched peaceably at his sandwiches. When at last he was satisfied he rose and discreetly tossed the cap into a corner. Then he resumed his seat in the smoker and three minutes later the train started to pull out.

"You know," said Barr, as he filled his pipe, "that's old Dan McCarthy, and they say he's been pitching his hat on the floor like that for twenty years. I've watched him do it for two."

Two Canadian Nobles.

Seventy years or so ago, so the story goes, two barefooted Scottish lads were fishing in a Highland stream. "Ye'll see no lairds in Canada where you are going, Cousin Donald," said one of the lads, George Stephen, a herd-boy. "Maybe not," answered his companion, Donald Smith, "but," he added, proudly, "there'll be Indians and buffaloes and fur trading. Maybe I'll win enough money to come back, see auld Scotland again, and have a snug little place of my own." And sixty years after the gaunt, red-haired Donald Smith crossed the Atlantic in the steerage of a sailing vessel he returned with his staff of secretaries and his retinue of servants on the Teutonic as the "Right Honorable Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal of Glencoe," laden with honors as with years, and a millionaire several times over.

And what of his cousin? George Stephen simply followed Donald to Canada thirteen years later, entered the dry goods store of another cousin, William Stephen, and within twenty-six years of landing in the colony an almost penniless draper was governor of the Bank of Montreal and recognized as one of the soundest men in all Canada.

Then came Cousin Donald's scheme of the railway to link the two vast oceans and to tap the latent riches of the great Northwest. He saw his opportunity, seized it, and on this scheme Cousin Stephen embarked his money, brains and industry with such enormous advantage to himself that in ten years he was a millionaire.—London Tit-Bits.

THE EDITH MILLER CONCERT COMPANY'S ARTISTIC TRIUMPH

The audience which assembled in the Conservatory Music Hall last night would have been unreasonably exacting not to have been deeply gratified and perfectly satisfied, as they were, with the surpassingly excellent programme presented by the Edith Miller Concert Company. The expectations of the audience were more than realized.

Miss Miller is a great vocalist and has surrounded herself with artists in every way worthy of the high standard she sets. Her voice is wonderfully complex in its amptitude of registert, the rich depth of her lower notes, the roundness of her middle voice and the silver sonority of her higher tones.

Her method is unimpeachably artistic and her interpretative taste and dramatic sense combined with other qualities make her singing a delight. It was heard to superb advantage in the solos duet and ensemble in the opening selection the final thrilling scene from Carmen. She gave the greatest satisfaction in her subsequent numbers especially two old English songs by John Eccles and Carey, giving them a lilting piquancy of treatment in line with their characteristic quality.

Mr. Alfred Heather, the tenor of the company, has a magnificent voice possessing those rarely combined qualities of sweetness and strength. His singing was even throughout, artistically produced and especially charming, in the top line notes. His best work was perhaps done in Marshall's "I hear you calling me."

Mr. Heather is the leading tenor of Westminster Abbey.

Mr. Thrope Bates has a splendid baritone, strong, without stridency and robust without the suggestion of rant. One charm of his singing is the ease of his method. He produces a splendid volume of full melodious and evenly sustained tone. In the Toreador song from Carmen he was particularly appreciated.

The violincello virtuoso, Miss Maud Bell is an artiste of outstanding excellence. Her tone, bowing and expression are always effective and artistically legitimate.

Perhaps her most popular production was Popper's Tarantella. All her other numbers were played in a most satisfying and musicianly manner.

SIX MONTHS IN CENTRAL PRISON

Henry Watters Will Not Work and the City Refuses to Support Him

Henry Walters appeared in the Police Court this morning to answer to the charge of being a vagrant. He admitted the charge.

The prisoner appeared capable of being able to work, but apparently he doesn't like labor of any sort. He was sentenced to serve six months in the Central Prison. Magistrate Dumble remarked to Walters that the city was not going to support people such as he. There was plenty of work to be obtained if those who were idle would only take the trouble to look for it.

A TEST CASE IN DIVISION COURT

Mr. L. LaPlante is Fighting Claim of City for $25 for Privilege of Using Portion of Sewer in South End of City.

A case of much interest to ratepayers of the city is being tried in Division Court this afternoon at which County Magistrate Edmison is presiding in the absence of His Honor Judge Weller. Mr. Louis Laplante is contesting a claim of the city for $25 for the use of the city's sewage system for the disposal of sewage. A portion of the sewer near the outlet was paid for by a general tax being paid. Mr. Laplante got permission from the council to connect his property with this portion of the sewer but since that time the city council has decided that those connected with that part of the sewage system must pay $25 for the privilege. Mr. Laplante objects to paying this sum and is making a test case of the action against him by the city treasurer.

The case is of much interest to many ratepayers in the south end who are using the sewer in the same manner as Mr. Laplante.

City Solicitor Hall is looking after the interests of the city and Mr. Ozias de Laplante is appearing for Mr. Laplante.

ABOUT MR. W. A. BUCHANAN

This week's Canadian Courier contains a cut and short biographical sketch of Mr W. A. Buchanan, MPP, who is well known in Peterborough. The sketch is as follows:

One of the brightest and most progressive newspapers in the West is the Lethbridge Herald. This paper is one of the real readables —as a western paper should be. It is a breezy and optimistic and sane. The man that founded it and that still edits and and publishes it is the son of a Methodist minister, and is by no means a black sheep but a real constructive and brainy man who has a mission in life and has already accomplished a good part of it. Mr. Buchanan is a young man. He was born in Peterborough County in 1876 when his father was preaching down that way. He was educated in Trenton, Norwood and Brighton —which is equivalent to saying that his father went the rounds of those towns while his son was growing up. In 1893 he went on the Peterborough Review which is a Conservative paper. He spent seven good years on that sheet till he got into the editorial department; from which he went to Toronto as news editor of a newspaper called the Toronto Telegram. Not long afterwards he migrated to St. Thomas to manage the Journal of that town for Mr. Brierly of the Montreal Herald. The Journal is a Liberal paper. But when Mr. Brierly disposed of that paper, Mr. Buchanan hit the trail for the West. That was in the fall of 1905, when the trains were busy with folk getting out to the unoccupied places where fortune and fame were to be made. He went to Lethbridge which in that year had about 2500 population, but now—thanks to Mr. Buchanan and the Lethbridge Herald, which he established in the interests of progress—the number of souls is not less than 8000. Lethbridge became so big under his management that it had to have a member and Mr. Buchanan became that member.

LEGAL COMMITTEE TURNS DOWN SEVERAL CLAIMS FOR DAMAGE AGAINST CITY

Claims against the city are getting about as plentiful as beer at a German festival. The Legal Committee has been kept busy trying to straighten out matters and there is still plenty of work ahead of it.

The committee met last night and dealt with a number of claims.

Those present were;—Chairman Ald. Turner, Aldermen McIntyre, Duffus and Metheral.

The first matter taken up was the claim of Mr. Alex. Kennedy, who met with an accident a year ago February at the corner of Hunter and Chambers streets. Mr. Kennedy was present and was heard. He said he was going west on the crossing at Chamber street about three yards from the Review Office. He was in company with his daughter and he also had his cane with him. The crossing was icy and very slippery. He fell and broke his thigh. He was off duty for over six months and during that time he had to pay out in actual cash some $97.

Mr. F. H. Dobbin was present and was asked to give the committee some information as to the condition of the street or sidewalk. Mr Dobbin said it was a bright sunny day and water was running off the building. His man had cleaned off his walk to the crossing and the snow and ice on the crossing caused a graded drop of several inches. A man coming from the west slipped at the same place and bumped against the lady on his right who bumped against Mr. Kennedy giving him a start and caused him to fall. Mr. Dobbin did not, however, consider the place a dangerous one and did not think Mr. Kennedy would have fallen had he been alone.

MR. MATHESON.

Mr. Matheson was called as a witness. He said he was only a few yards away and saw Mr. Kennedy fall. He thought the crossing was in a dangerous condition. Mr. Kennedy's feet and cane seemed to go from under him at the same time.

In sizing up the evidence the chairman stated that he could not see that the city was in anyway liable. The case has excited a good deal of sympathy, but he could not see that the city should pay any damages.

Ald. Metheral stated he thought Mr. Kennedy was entitled to some consideration.

On motion of Ald. Duffus and Metheral, the matter was left over until the full committee could be present.

MR. EVAN'S CLAIM.

Mr. David Evans said he fell on the sidewalk and hurt his head and was otherwise injured, and he wanted damages.

The city engineer and street commissioner had examined the place. There was some ice on the north side of London street, but not enough to make it dangerous for pedestrians.

The city solicitor reported that in his opinion the city was not liable in this case.

DR. JAS. GALLIVAN.

The next claim taken up was that of Dr Jas. Gallivan, whose property was flooded along with his cellar, with surface water. Dr. Gallivan's property is at the corner of Hunter and Aylmer streets.

The street commissioner stated that as soon as he noticed that the catch basin was not taking the water he took immediate steps to have the basin opened, but in the meantime the water had flown into the doctor's cellar. The doctor's property is about a foot lower than the street.

The city solicitor reported that the city's liability rested upon the judge's interpretation of the law.

Ald Metheral thought the doctor was entitled to damages.

Ald McIntyre suggested that the matter be referred back to the solicitor to advise the committee upon what action to take. The solicitor was telephoned and he stated that he would be inclined to contest the claim which was $50.00.

On motion it was decided to take no action on the matter.

ED. CONROY.

Ed Conroy claimed damages for an accident to his automobile. His claim was for $6.00.

The engineer reported that it was the Street Railway Company had caused the trench to be dug, and the company should be held liable.

The solicitor said the city was not liable, and on motion no action was taken.

MARY SULLIVAN.

Mary Sullivan claimed $30 for damages caused to her property at 266 Murray street, owing to an ice jam forming in the creek.

The jam was caused by a sudden thaw. The street commissioner released the ice as soon as possible. The G.T.R. constructed the Bethune street bridge and the city is not liable for the jam there.

MR. ROBERTS' CLAIM.

Mr. W. J. Roberts notified the council that his infant son, Maxwell, was drowned on Monday, February 20, by falling into the creek on Murray street. He also notified the council that an action for damages would be entered.

The city engineer reported on the accident, showing that the drowning was due to the children playing on the ice and on the creek bank, and that it was no value to any want of repair on the part of the city.

The city solicitor reported that on the evidence the city was not liable.

The committee all personally regretted the sad accident, but as the children were playing on the ice the city could not be held liable for any damage.

On motion it was decided to take no action.

W. T. STEAD TELLS OF NEW TREATMENT FOR CONSUMPTION

London Journalist in Cable to New York Paper Declares That William Doig, an Amateur Doctor, Has Invented a Cure Which Will Draw Out Tuberculosis Germs in Six Months at Small Expense.

New York, April 24.—The American publishes the following London cable from W. T. Stead:

I am in a position to give the American public the first information of what promises to be one of the most valuable discoveries in medical science amounting to nothing less than a cheap and speedy cure for tuberculosis. Similar claims have been made so often that I would have hesitated in making the announcement if I had not secured evidence sufficient to justify me in bringing forward the facts of this present cure.

The fortunate discover is William Doig, head of the firm of Wm. Doig & Co., the noted Bond street publishers.

He first discovered he could cure tuberculosis of the bone, and, only in recent years, he found a method of applying his discovery to the cure of consumption. His results have been so astonishing that they have been brought before the highest authorities and have been subjected to tests so crucial as to leave little doubt that the name of William Doig will go down to posterity as that of the man who rid civilization of the great white plague.

The treatment is extremely simple. A poultice containing acite and chloride (the exact prescription has not yet been published, but there is no intention on the part of Doig to keep it secret), is placed on the body of the patient as near as possible to the organ or membrane that has become prey to the tuberculosis bacilli. In about a week an ulcer is formed—connected by what is called a ray of inflammation with the diseased organ. This forms a kind of duct through which the muco pus is drawn out of the system.

The ulcer needs to be carefully dressed twice a day with a salve, which is also the discovery of Doig. If this is neglected, the ulcer spreads, become black, and the patient dies. But, if it is properly attended to, the ulcer steadily works off all diseased matter from the lung, until, in from four to six months, a complete cure is effected.

As a test case Doig was challenged to undertake the cure of a youth, seventeen years old, who was certified to be suffering from advanced tuberculosis in both lungs, and also from tuberculosis in the glands of the throat, which rendered it impossible for him to speak except in hoarse whispers. The youth weighed about 100 pounds, and, in the opinion of the physicians, his death within two years was a foregone conclusion. Nothing daunted, Doig undertook to cure this unpromising case. To the amazement of every one the lad is now quite cured. He has put on flesh, he sings merrily at his work, and all traces of tuberculosis has disappeared.

THE SULTAN A PRISONER

A Night of Awful Slaughter---Constantinople Has Fallen and Abdul Hamid is in the Hands of Young Turks---Two Thousand Soldiers Killed and Many Injured.

Special to J. N. Barber.

Constantinople, April 24. — Constantinople has fallen. After a night of the bloodiest fighting between the 5,000 fanatical soldiers forming the Sultan's guard and the young Turkish forces under the command of Cheftek Pasab, the garrison of the Yieldizkiauk surrendered this morning.

The young Turks have thrown a heavy column of their soldiers around the palaces thereby making the Sultan their prisoner. The Young Turks leaders are now in conference with him at which his fate will be decided.

It is estimated that 2,000 soldiers were killed in the fighting and thousands wounded. The garrison fought with the wildest courage and the survivors did not surrender until their barracks had been demolished by the feirce artillery fire of the Young Turks and garrison itself practically exterminated.

The foreign population is in no immediate danger though two foreigners are reported killed. Frederick Moore, an American correspondent for th eNew York Sun, is among the injured. He was shot while trying to take a picture of the start of the fighting. The soldiers mistook his camera for a deadly machine and fired upon him.

San Stefano, April 24.—The entire constitutional army completed its entry into Constantinople last night and i snow in complete control of the city. Estimates of the killed vary from 1 to 3,000. Fighting still continues though it is isolated and the real danger now lies in an uprising by the people who are threatening to attempt the rescue of the Sultan from the palace where he is the prisoner of the Young Turks.

OLD LADY KNOCKED DOWN BY STREET CAR THIS MORNING

Was Crossing at George and Simcoe Streets When Struck by Car—Received Cuts in Head and Badly Shaken up —Taken to Hospital

About 11 o'clock this morning Mrs. Carroll, of Ashburnham, met with a painful accident on George street, and on account of her advanced years she was very fortunate in not being more seriously injured than she was.

She was going across the crossing at the corner of George and Simcoe streets when she noticed a street car approaching. Thinking she was in danger she turned back instead of continuing, and did not get across the track quickly enough to avoid being hit by the car, which knocked her down. She received a couple of bad cuts in the head, and was severely shaken up.

The injured woman was carried to Payne's drug store, and was attended by Drs. Greer and McPherson, who stitched the wounds. She was later taken in a cab to St. Joseph's hospital.

AMATEURS AT THE GRAND BUT NOBODY GOT HOOKED

The amateurs held away at the Grand Opera House last night at the close of the performance of "The Hawk and the Dove" and gave considerable amusement to the audience, a couple of turns being really of merit.

The first prize went to Harold Hatcher, a boy vocalist, who sang "Drummer Boy" in good voice; the second to George Lillie, who got away with a good acrobatic and rope skipping act; and the thirds to Albert LeGros, the boy dancer, with the musical pet.

Besides these there were five other local performers in the limelight, one doing a step, two others appearing in a living reproduction of the Burns-Johnston fight and the other pair pulling off a demonstration of the catch-as-catch-can wrestling game, the smaller man getting the referee's decision by pinning his opponent with a bar nelson.

There was loud applause for the favourite entertainers, and frequent cries of "the hook" for the less appealing artists. But the calls were not insistent enough, however, to warrant emphasizing on any of the contributors.

DEMOLISHING DRILL SHED

WARRANT ISSUED TO BRING MISS KINRADE TO INQUEST

G. Lynch-Staunton, K.C., Tells Coroner Anderson That Mother and Sister Are Absent From Hearing by His Advice, But Refuses to Say Why—Detective Will Serve Papers to Force Girl to Appear.

Hamilton, April 24.—A bench warrant was issued by Coroner Anderson here last night for Florence Kinrade, as a material witness in the enquiry into the death of her sister, Ethel Kinrade. The warrant was placed in possession of Detective Miller, who left for Toronto this morning.

This followed on an exciting scene that occurred last night when, after three-quarters of an hour waiting, and the inquest resumed, the crown counsel, Geo. Tate Blackstock, K.C., put Detective Miller on the stand to swear that he had personally served a subpoena upon Florence Kinrade, and stated that she was not present. He then requested the issue of a warrant to compel her attendance to give evidence on Monday night. Detective Miller had previously telephoned to Toronto and assured himself that the Kinrades were still at their apartments.

G. Lynch-Staunton, K.C., acting for the family, jumped up with the air of a man who was going to force the fighting. The atmosphere grew intense after his first sentence, which directly controverted the attitude he has hitherto observed.

"I wish to say that Florence Kinrade is acting under advice of counsel," he began. "She was physically unfit to attend," he said. Moreover, he declined to contest the action suggested.

"You have exhausted your authority," he informed Coroner Anderson. "I will take it upon me to advise you not to issue the warrant, and ask you to adjourn for a reasonable length of time, and I say that Monday is not a reasonable time."

Mr. Blackstock rose at once to dispute. He spoke with more vigor than he has done since the proceedings began.

From the opening of the enquiry counsel for the family had placed them, he said, as witnesses at the disposal of the crown, which was a perfectly proper proceeding, and to be expected under the circumstances. He regretted the departure from the procedure.

This was the first intimation the crown had received that the persons subpoenaed were acting on advice in remaining absent. On the contrary, the crown had applied to the representative of the family the previous evening to know if the witnesses would be here, and had been informed that he did not know whether they would be here or not. It now appeared that, on counsel's advice, they had been acting entirely against the expectations of the crown. Much as he wished to meet the views of anyone in the matter, he must dissent from the application for a further postponement.

Mr. Lynch-Staunton followed at once. He spoke in studied, deliberate tones.

"I consider the insinuations made by counsel for the crown unbecoming, but of course he may make insinuations."

By this time the atmosphere was like August in a thunderstorm.

"If you choose to be hectored into issuing a warrant by insinuations—" he proceeded, every word hurtling like a vivid flash through the silence until the thunder rumbled.

"They are not insinuations, they are facts," interrupted Mr. Blackstock.

"They are not facts," was flashed back.

Then the coroner had his word. "I have not heard any insinuations from counsel for the crown and I do not think you have any right to say that I can be hectored into doing anything I do not approve," he declared.

"I did not say you could be hectored. I said if you choose to be hectored," was the way Mr. Lynch-Staunton defined his point.

The coroner did not appreciate the distinction and intimated that he would issue the warrant and adjourn till Monday.

"You have no authority to issue the warrant," Mr. Lynch-Staunton warned him.

"The law says so," was the final bolt of the storm.

Opinion is undivided here about the express intention of Mr. Lynch-Staunton to precipitate a crisis. There is considerable difference of opinion with respect to the tactical wisdom of the attitude adopted.

There is not supposed to be any evidence in the hands of the crown that could lead to any other than an open verdict from a coroner's jury. From this standpoint it is believed that it would be much wiser for the family to facilitate proceedings and endeavor to secure a verdict at the earliest opportunity.

Another section of public opinion, and quite a large section in Hamilton, take the view that the family know much more about the circumstances and occurrences of Feb. 25 than has transpired during the several sessions of the inquest. This section of the public consider the family's counsel, by his present attitude, is unnecessarily prejudicing the jury, and all others concerned.

Mr. Lynch-Staunton when seen after the adjournment, decline to give any reasons for the action he had taken, and refused to discuss any feature of the case.

SHAKESPEARE ANNIVERSARY

Stratford-on-Avon, April 24.—The 345th anniversary of the birth of William Shakespeare was celebrated here yesterday on an unusually elaborate scale. The city was lavishly decorated and it was crowded with visitors. One of the principal features of the ceremonies was the unfurling of forty-one national flags, representing together the countries which especially admire Shakespeare. There was a floral procession to the church to which all the delegates took part, each carrying garlands and wreaths of flowers which were subsequently placed upon the tomb of the poet. This feature of the day made a most striking picture.

EXPECT TROUBLE IN THE MINES

Sydney, N.S., April 24.—The council at its meeting yesterday decided to accede to the request of the Dominion Coal Co. to appoint 625 special constables in case of a strike by the United Mine Workers.

Councillor McDonald declared he would "rather see people killed by red coats than by each other."

Talk of strike is rife in the city to-day, and should the United Mine Workers order the men out, serious trouble is expected. The American organization controls about two-thirds of the men in the company's employ.

The coal company have one hundred thousand tons banked in case of emergency, and no matter what happens will be able to fill contracts for some time to come.

COACH OVER AN EMBANKMENT

Middleton, N.S., April 24.—The Halifax and Southwestern Railway train from Bridgewater was rounding a curve about seven miles south of here when the passenger coach left the rails, breaking from the baggage-car and rolled over on its side down the bank. Had it not been for a heavy cedar telegraph pole the coach would have gone to the bottom of the steep embankment, and the damage would have been much more serious.

A dozen passengers were in the coach and all were shaken up, and several seriously injured.

Conductor Allen had a finger cut off by its being driven through a window pane. Passengers were placed in a baggage-car and brought to Middleton, where doctors rendered surgical aid.

BIG THING FOR THE DOMINION

Toronto, April 24.—Twenty-three countries will be represented at the sessions of the great International Council of Women, which is to be held in this city in June next.

Just how many delegates will be here it is impossible to say. At the last international meeting, held five years ago in Berlin, Germany, there were six thousand delegates; in London, England, in 1899 there were more.

Just what this great meeting will mean for Toronto and for the whole of Canada can hardly be estimated. It will be the biggest thing from an advertising point of view for Canada as a nation, that has yet occurred.

SUICIDES ON HER HUSBAND'S GRAVE

Detroit, Mich., April 24.—Lying on her husband's grave in the German Lutheran cemetery in Detroit, the body of Mrs. Amy Wilkie, 30 years old, was found early yesterday morning. Workmen made the discovery and identified her because of her frequent visits to the grave of her husband, Ernest Wilkes, since his burial last November. Near the corpse lay a bottle containing a small quantity of carbolic acid. There was also a glass from which the poison had been drained. The body was cold.

Mrs. Wilkes was dressed in mourning. In her leather handbag were papers containing her address. The body was taken to the county morgue. Since her husband's death Mrs. Wilkie, who was an unusually handsome woman, had developed an acute melancholia.

TARIFF REFORM BEING LOOKED FOR

Detroit, April 24.—Resolutions embracing the entire discussion and declaring for a permanent tariff board, giving the executive authority to adjust a maximum and a minimum tariff rate for reciprocal purposes, and calling on Congress to take immediate steps looking to the establishment of a trade agreement with Canada, were presented for discussion and adopted in their entirety at the conference on better trade relations with Canada yesterday. Stronger condemnation of the present method of fixing tariff rates could not be uttered than were spoken by leading Republicans and unanimously approved by all the delegates. A proposal to demand free trade on coal, lumber and barley was strongly favored.

Fire did $15,000 damage to the store of the Murray Shoe Co., at London.

Capt. James McLean's house in Parry Sound was destroyed by fire.

A CREST FOR THE PROVINCE

Ontario Gets New Arms Under Warrant of Late Queen Victoria

Ottawa, April 24.—A royal warrant assigning crest and supporters to the Province of Ontario has been issued by the College of Arms, London.

The information comes from Earl Crewe, dated at the Court of St. James, Feb. 27 last.

It is provided that:

"Whereas, her late Majesty Queen Victoria was graciously pleased to warrant under her royal sign manual, bearing date the 26th day of May, in the 31st year of Her Majesty's reign, to assign certain armorial bearings to the Province of Ontario, in our Dominion of Canada, and whereas for the greater honor and distinction of the said province we are desirous that a crest and supporters should be assigned thereto: Know ye, therefore, that we, of our princely grace and special favor, have granted and assigned to do by these presents, grant and assign the following crest, that is to say, 'Upon a wreath of the colors of a bear passant sable, and the supporters on the dexter side a moose, and on the sinister side a Canadian deer, both proper,' together with this motto, 'Ut Incepit Fedelis Sic Permanent,' as the same are in the painting hereunto annexed, more plainly depicted to be borne for the said Province of Ontario on seals, shields, banners, flags or otherwise, according to the laws of arms."

WINNIPEG WOMAN WAS MURDERED

Winnipeg, Man., April 24.—Investigation by police yesterday of the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Louis James, wife of a Winnipeg contractor, in her home on the outskirts of the city Thursday afternoon, reveals the fact that Mrs. James was murdered by some person unknown.

She had been assaulted and then murdered. The murderer also stole her watch and a small sum of money, which was in the house.

The woman's skull had been fractured, apparently by a club, which was found outside of the house, and which is now in possession of the police.

Wages of Montreal Longshoremen.

Montreal, April 24.—The steamship companies gave out yesterday the wages for the longshoremen. They have agreed to extend the time for signing from April 26 to May 31. Those who work to the close of navigation will receive a bonus of 2 1-2c. per hour. The regular rate will be 27 1-2c. per hour for day work and 32 1-2c. by night, with 37 1-2c. and 42 1-2c. for coal shovellers and stagemen. All appear to be well satisfied with the arrangements.

Was a Hamilton Woman.

Hamilton, April 24.—Mrs. Catharine A. Whipple, the 65-year-old woman, who committed suicide at Niagara Falls yesterday, was the widow of Vernon B. Whipple, the well-known printer, whose shop was on North Macnab street. She had made her home in Buffalo for about a year, and it is believed that she was temporarily insane, although it is not known for a certainty whether she slipped or jumped into the river. Her body went over the falls.

NEW BILLS INTRODUCED IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

David Henderson Shows So-Called Liberal Free Trade Really Means Little to Farmer—Glen Campbell Goes After Fielding's Boast That Government Keeps Lands From Railways.

Ottawa, April 24.—Hon. Mr. Brodeur yesterday introduced a bill to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. It prohibits the removal of cargoes before salvage operations and allows the Department in urgent cases to remove wrecks without an order-in-council.

He also introduced a bill to amend the Montreal Harbor Commissioners Act. It provides that so far as the rules of the road and pilotage are concerned the jurisdiction of the commissioners shall cease.

Hon. Mr. Graham introduced a bill to allow the Transcontinental Railway commission to make an arrangement with the City of Winnipeg to construct a joint railway and vehicle bridge over the Red river between Winnipeg and St. Boniface.

Sam Sharpe introduced a bill to amend the Bank Act. It provides after six years unclaimed deposits in the banks shall be transferred to the Government, to be held in trust.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has given notice of a resolution to provide for the salary of a Minister of Labor.

The budget debate was continued by E. W. Nesbitt (North Oxford), who discussed the borrowing operations of the Government. We had been able to borrow on as favorable rates as other countries and our credit had not been impaired, this being demonstrated by our ability to raise such large sums in a short time, he argued, moreover Canadian securities had not fluctuated as much in ten years as British consols.

David Henderson went through the list of household articles to show that the farmer has to pay more for the necessaries of life than when the Conservatives were in power. The Liberal Government had lowered the duties on a few seldom used farm implements as a sop to the farmers, while such articles as sausage skins and mustard seed were placed on the free list. In other respects the tariff was as left by the Conservative Government in 1896.

So many speakers wish to be heard in the budget debate that it was decided by the whips that it would not be finished last night, but go over till next week.

Glen Campbell of Dauphin discussed generally the matter of transportation in the west and particularly referred to Mr. Fielding's declaration that this Government had reserved the lands for the settler instead of doing as the Conservatives had done, given it to the railways, claiming that some of the best lands in the west had been given to Mackenzie and Mann.

Conditions in the west were such that a man had to pay taxes on his farm, and the neighboring farm, which happened to be C.P.R. land. This land was growing in value by reason of the hard toil of the settler, and it was unfair that it should not also contribute to the revenues of the country in taxes.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Norrie May Recover.

Windsor, April 24.—Peter Shea, whose correct name is Chas. Conlon, was arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Leggatt on the charge of attempting to kill Harry Norrie, a Detroit moulder, last night, and was remanded for eight days without bail. The trouble arose, it is said, over Conlon's action in barring the latter from the Wayne Roller Rink, Detroit, Conlon being floor manager there. It is claimed Norrie assaulted Conlon some time ago. Norrie has a fair chance for recovery.

Rival Gas Companies In Windsor.

Windsor, April 24.—Two rival natural gas companies are endeavoring to obtain franchises from Windsor and competing in rates. ONE OF BEST KNOWN RESIDENTS OF COUNTY PASSES AWAY

One of the best-known Orangemen in this part of the province, Christopher Quinn, of Lakefield, passed away at the family residence yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, after an illness of about a month's duration. Death was caused by infirmities due to old age.

The deceased was 84 years of age and was a native of Ireland. When seven years old he came to Peterborough. He went back with his parents to the 10th concession of Smith township and resided there continuously until fifteen years ago, when he retired from farming, and took up his residence in Lakefield.

The late Mr. Quinn was probably the oldest resident of Smith township. His ardor for the Orange cause was well known, and he was held in the highest respect by his brother Orangemen. He never failed to attend an Orange walk since he joined the order when a young man. In religion he was a Baptist, and a faithful member of the Lakefield Baptist church.

He was predeceased two years ago by his wife.

The mourning family consists of four sons and five daughters. The sons are John, of Douro; William, of Ashburnham; George, of Peterborough, and Archie, of Lakefield. The daughters are Agnes and Laura, at home; Mrs. Robert Duff, of Lakefield; Mrs. Hugh Davidson, of Winnipeg, and Mrs. Kerlem, of Calgary. Mr. George Cochrane, of this city, is a brother-in-law.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2.30 to the Lakefield cemetery, Smith township.

THE LOCAL OPTION MOVEMENT IN THE CITY

The Matter Appearing in This Department is Furnished by the Peterboroug Temperance and Moral Reform League Which Has Arranged for its Publication.

Some of the opponents of local option in Peterborough are advancing the argument that men should be taught the danger and disgrace of intemperance instead of having the law invoked to prevent them from drinking by closing the saloons. It is claimed that men who stop drinking of their own free will deserve credit but that if they are prevented by law from drinking they cannot claim any virtue through their enforced abstinence. This argument may sound all right to some. It is misleading.

People who use this claim, in effect that we would not remove temptation from a man, we should simply warn him of his danger. When however they use that as a reason for voting against local option they do far more. They not only refuse to remove the temptation but they deliberately vote to place temptation in his way. People create the temptation when they vote to establish or continue saloons in their midst by licensing them. Is it fair, then, to place temptation in a man's way by voting to continue the saloons that are tempting him to drink and to ruin?

The hundreds of thousands of men and boys who have gone down to destruction through their love of strong drink—including hundreds in the city of Peterborough—have shown conclusively that the appetite for liquor is like the smooth swift current of a mighty river rushing towards a great falls. A few men who fall into the river not far from the shore may realize their danger in time and succeed in wading or swimming to safety especially if their friends see their danger and call out a warning to them. Others, however may be swept so far out in the current that its mighty force is too great for them and powerless in its grasp, they are swept on to destruction. In such a case we would expect their friends on shore, to throw them a rope in order that they might be pulled safely to land. If, however instead of doing this they simply shrugged their shoulders and refused to help them, claiming that the men should swim out themselves we would call them wretches and brutes.

This is exactly the case with men who have acquired the appetite for liquor. Some of them may succeed in overcoming their appetite but many others reach the stage where they are powerless to do so. Shall we not therefore, throw them a rope? We can do so by voting for local option. By refusing to do so, we will be responsible in part for their ruin.

MODERATE DRINKERS AND LOCAL OPTION

Peterborough temperance workers are very much encouraged over the fact that there are scores of moderate drinkers in Peterborough who are stating openly that they intend to vote for local option. Many of these men do not feel that they need local option for their own good. They have, however, seen so many evidences of the blighting effects of the liquor traffic they announce that they are willing to give up drink themselves for the sake of helping other men who are unable to resist the temptation to drink to excess. Then they intend to vote for local option. What better evidence of the need of local option is required?

ANGLICANS AND LOCAL OPTION

It is no wonder local option is sweeping over the continent and throughout Canada when we realise that every Christian organization has placed itself on record as being opposed to the liquor traffic. As we have already shown, the Catholic church has done splendid work for temperance. The Anglican Church is equally pronounced on this matter. The Anglican Church as a body advocated the adoption of local option, wherever it is possible. The General Synod of Canada, of the Anglican Church at its last conference in Ottawa placed itself on record in regard to the liquor traffic in pronounced terms when it adopted the following report presented by a committee.

"In glancing over the several provinces of the Dominion, it is manifest that there is a great consensus of opinion concerning the bar under our present licensing system, namely, that it is a Public Menace, and your committee would urge upon the Synod that it is the duty of every man to endeavor to further the effort to abolish the bar.

Until such time as the bar is abolished it recommends;

1. That windows should be uncurtained, and all obstacles which would prevent persons from seeing into the bar from outside during all hours of sale.

2. That is be made illegal for minors to enter a bar where intoxicants are sold.

3. THAT FULL ADVANTAGE BE TAKEN WHEN PRACTICABLE, OF THE ADOPTION AND PUTTING INTO FORCE OF LOCAL OPTION UNDER THE PRESENT LICENSE LAW.

THE COMMITTEE AFTER WIDE GATHERING OF EVIDENCE FROM THE DIFFERENT PROVINCES OF THE DOMINION, REPORT THAT THE SUCCESSFULLY IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES, AS LOCAL OP-SCOTT ACT HAS WORKED OUT-TION IN ONTARIO."

STRONG BLOWS FOR TEMPERANCE

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, the famous medical missionary of the Labrador coast, who addressed a meeting in the Opera House, recently, gave the local option in Peterborough a splendid boost when he denounced in a vigorous manner the curse of the liquor traffic. Dr. Grenfell is an Anglican and said so. His outspoken statements showed him to be in accord with the stand the Anglican church has taken on this question.

Speaking in Peterborough and at other points on this question, Dr. Grenfell said, "The reason I have no use for alcoholic beverages, on sea or on shore, are so numerous that it would be impossible to detail them all. My standpoint is that liquor is unnecessary and bad. It is a help only to thieves and robbers, and I have seen them use it over and over again as a means to lure the fishermen and sailor to his destruction. Saloons, and haunts of vice swarm around most seaports, and it is as easy for the liquor sellers to prey on the newly-landed sailor, with his pocket full of money, his generous and simple nature, and his lack of friends in a strange place, as it is for any other vultures to prey on carrion.

Moral Suasion

"How many times have I seen out poor fellwos robbed of their money, of their self-respect, and even of their lives by a liquor seller.

Drink's Doings Everywhere

"Alcohol is not allowed to be sold on any part of the coast on which we are working, but so surely as it comes and an illicit sale begins, one sees its evil results as quickly as if, instead of alcohol, it had been the germ of diphtheria or smallpox. Lying at my anchors in Labrador harbors, women have come off the ship after dark, secretly for fear of being seen, to ask me, for God's sake, to try and prevent its being sold near them, as their sons and husbands were being debauched, and even the girls were in danger.

"I have seen it sometimes among the Eskimos. It kills our natives as arsenic kills flies, and it robs them of everything that would differentiate them as human beings from the beasts.

It Robs and Ruins

"I have seen men robbed in many ways, but they have been able by the help of God, to wipe out any lasting results, of such transient losses. But the robberies of alcohol are irremediable. I buried in a lonely grave on a projecting promontory, far down the coast of Labrador, a young girl of 18. She was someone's daughter and someone's sister. I had taken her aboard our little hospital ship for the last week of her life. She should have been alive to-day, but she had no desire to live. All that could possibly make life worth living for her had been robbed from her through the means of alcohol, and she could not face the home-going again.

Against it Forever

"If ever I have the opportunity given to me to say a word at any time or in any place which would help to inhibit the use of alcohol as a beverage so long as I can stand upon my feet I shall be proud to get up and speak it."

A CHANGE OF OPINION

Twenty, even fifteen and ten years ago there were many leading business and public men who were willing to go on the platform and speak against prohibitory legislation in regard to the liquor traffic. No so today. During the interval their eyes have been opened. Today you can hardly find a prominent man anywhere who is willing to be associated with the liquor traffic.

For several months past public meetings in the cause of temperance have been held every Sunday afternoon in the Crystal. These meetings have been addressed by a number of Peterborough's well known business men as well as by clergymen. Why don't the opponents of local option hold similar meetings? We would like to see their speakers and hear their arguments.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The writer of this column spent a couple of evenings recently in the hotel in the village of Claremont, which is under local option. A considerable number of young men were noticed in and around the hotel. Not a sign of the presence of liquor could be detected. In reply to questions the local barber stated that liquor could not be secured for love or money. The livery man told the same tale. When asked if local option had injured the village the latter replied that the only way in which it had affected him was that he did not have as many agents of liquor and tobacco firms to drive as formerly. And yet they say that local option does not prohibit.

The last of the gospel temperance meetings to be held this spring will take place tomorrow, Sunday, afternoon at 4.15 o'clock in the Crystal. It promises to be the best one of the series. The meeting will be in charge of the officers from the Young Peoples Societies of the various churches in the city. Representatives from the different societies will speak. The orchestra of the George street church will furnish music and there will be singing by the Orpheus quartette. The ushers will be provided by the George street church. Mr. Hassard of the YMCA. will preside. It will be a lively meeting and everybody is invited to attend. These meetings will be resumed early next autumn.

Have You Tried?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Gardiner, Maine.—"I was a great sufferer from a female disease and weakness. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation but I could not bear to think of it. "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me in three months."—Mrs. S. A. Williams, R.F.D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner, Me.

So. West Harbor, Me.—"I suffered for years with painful periods, backache, headaches, nervousness, irregularities and inflammation. I consulted two physicians and one advised me to have an operation.

"I was completely discouraged when I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has made me a well woman. I advise all suffering women to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Lillian Robbins, South West Harbor, Me.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

HARRY BURRIDGE PRESENTED WITH HANDSOME GOLD LOCKET

Harry Burridge, who left this afternoon for Toronto, en route for Edmonton, was banqueted by about about twenty-five of his friends at the Windsor hotel last night and presented with a handsome gold locket suitably engraved. Although there were many expressions of regret at Mr. Burridge's departure, the gathering was a happy affair. The guest of the evening was wished all kinds of good luck in the west and there was a consensus of opinion that he would shine in the Western Canada League.

Mr. F. D. Craig, owner of the Peterborough baseball team for the past two seasons made an excellent toastmaster.

"The King" was first honored in the usual way and the next toast "The Guest of the Evening" was proposed by Mr Craig who spoke highly of Mr Burridge's ability on the baseball field and his gentlemanly conduct both on and off the diamond. The toastmaster presented Mr Burridge with the locket and wished him every succes at Edmonton.

Mr. Burridge replied suitably, expressing hearty thanks for the handsome gift and for the kind sentiments expressed.

"Steve,t he trainer," proposed the toast to "The Ladies," and Mr S Hayes and D Jenkins were the respondera.

Among those who spoke and wished Harry success were Messrs. S Jamieson, A Bell, T Duncan, B Douge, R Long, R Hughes, and Gus Brousseau.

Mr and Mrs A D Johnston responded to the toast to "The Host and Hostess" Mr and Mrs Johnston were heartily thanked for the excellent "spread."

During the evening Mr. Maxwell favored the company with several flute solos and Mr. Joe Maynard sang several songs.

BALL TOSSER'S CORNER

A base-runner is out—if, in running from first base to second base, from second to third base, or from third to home base, he runs more than three feet from a direct line between a base and the next one in regular or reversed order to avoid being touched by a ball in the hands of a fielder. But in case a fielder be occupying a base runner's proper path in attempting to field a batted ball then the base runner shall run behind said fielder and shall not be declared out for so doing.

If he fail to avoid a fielder attempting to field a batted ball, in the manner described in Sections 6 and 7 of this rule, or in any way obstruct a fielder in attempting to field a ball or intentionally interfere with a thrown ball; provided that if two or more fielders attempt to field a batted ball and the base runner come in contact with one or more of them, the umpire shall determine which fielder is entitled to the benefit of this rule and shall not decide the base runner out for coming in contact with a fielder other than the one the umpire determines to be entitled to field such batted ball.

RAIN prevented games being played in the Eastern League yesterday. Toronto plays the last of the series today.

BASEBALL teams who wish to enter the intermediate series are reminded that they must be represented at the meeting Tuesday night.

A TROPHY for the senior baseball league can easily be secured by using the Spaulding ball.

SEVERAL teams are working out this afternoon in different parts of the city. The Oval will not be ready for use until some time in May.

WHY not try and get Lindsay to put a team in the senior league.

THE "LILLIES" who will be represented in the intermediate league this season will have a nine that will make the other teams go some.

WHO will twirl for the West Ends is a question that is being discussed by the intermediate teams. Watch and see.

TWO DOLLARS is needed by all teams before they may have a vote at the Intermediate league meeting on Tuesday night.

RUDOLPH threw ninety balls to the Newark batters while McGinnity served up one hundred and six in the opening game at Newark on Thursday.

Bill Landry, who claims Lindsay as his native heath, has accepted the "call of the wild" and has gone out to play ball for the untamed horsehide chasers of Winnipeg. Bill expects to gambol around third base for a team this summer in that western city.—Lindsay Warder.

BASEBALL

The Separate school boys under the direction of their able headmaster, Mr. "Bill" O'Brien are playing fast, sure and snappy ball. Their pick-ups are worthy of a league team and the "wee" man behind the bat is a veritable receiver-general.

The Obliging Reformer.

By STELLA CADMUS.

Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.

There was no use denying that Sydney Gerald was a dawdler. He had wealth, good looks, youth, and was a society favorite. Now and then he went hunting or yachting, but most of the time he simply dawdled. That meant his club, the races and society.

He was accounted a catch, but no one caught him. He didn't really try to dawdle, but pursued his lymphatic way simply because there seemed nothing else to do.

"See here, you good-for-nothing," said the widow of the late Hon. Charles Spofford one evening at a reception as she drew him down to a seat beside her. "I have a duty to perform."

"I wish I had," he replied.

"People are saying you have no energy, no ambition, no aim in life. You have too much money—too much time on your hands. You are throwing your years away."

"Tell me what to do," replied Sydney, yawning.

"Get married."

"Too much trouble—too many emotions."

"Take a trip around the world."

"Too much change of scenery."

"Ah, I have it!" exclaimed Mrs. Spofford after a moment's thought. "You are rich. Why not turn philanthropist? Not in the way of hospitals or asylums, but go among the poor and give a few of your dollars to alleviate distress and misfortune. You don't know the real people as I do. There is no day that I am not feeding the hungry and giving out alms. Only this afternoon I gave a one legged man half a dollar, and you ought to have heard his words of gratitude."

"Just so," replied Sydney Gerald, with a bit of a smile as he thought of the many one legged men he had tossed quarters to.

"Try it for a few weeks—for three months. It may lead to your becoming a reformer. At any rate, it will rouse you up and give you something new to think of. It is positively sinful for you to be dawdling along this way."

"Yes, I think so."

"If you should turn out to be a reformer I shall take most of the credit to myself. Three months, Mr. Gerald—try it for three months, and at the end of that time I will arrange for a little gathering to hear your report. It cannot fail to be interesting. You will have a hundred different incidents to relate. Don't you feel a new and strange ambition already?"

"Yes, I think I do. Yes, I think I will turn reformer. I may not make a success of it, but I'll make a try."

The relict of the Hon. Charles spread the news. As Sydney Gerald did not entirely drop society while fitting himself for a reformer, he was lauded and quizzed on numerous occasions by numerous people.

Only a scanty few credited him with the necessary energy to pursue the object, and the most that was predicted of his efforts was the depletion of his purse without corresponding gain. There was a great deal said about the unthankfulness and ingratitude of the world in general, but it didn't seem to affect him much.

"You know you must not look for too much gratitude," cautioned Mrs. Spofford.

"No, I shan't."

"You will feel that you have done your duty, and your conscience will reward you."

"Just so."

"Many and many a time I have given pennies and got never a word of thanks. In fact, I have got black looks as the wheels of my carriage happened to throw a little mud, but I drove on feeling that I had made the world a trifle better. That feeling must be your reward."

"Yes, I shall look for it."

When the three months had expired Sydney Gerald announced his readiness to report. A score of ladies gathered in the drawing room of the Hon. Charles' widow. There were no men among them. Charity and reform did not touch that sex.

When he was ushered in it was remarked that he seemed to have acquired energy and gained ambition, and there was great curiosity as to what he would report.

"Ladies, I beg to say," began Sydney, "that in my ignorance of how to go to work I began my investigations in the house of a wealthy lady. It came about almost by accident. I found that she was in arrears to all her servants and that tradesmen were clamoring for their bills. I relieved the distress. I gave each servant two months' back pay and paid each tradesman something on account. I have a memorandum of her name."

Here Sydney Gerald paused. Mrs. Spofford turned pale, but her nerve was with her, and she managed to force a smile.

"By accident again," resumed Sydney, "I turned a corner one evening and bumped against a young woman in tears. I was a stranger, but when she understood that I had taken up the business of reformer she told me the cause of her distress. She was a seamstress.

"She had worked a week on a gown for a well known lady and on carrying it to the house had been told that she must wait a couple of weeks for her pay. She was going home penniless, hungry and the rent unpaid. The lady in the case bought a diamond tiara next day that was mentioned in all the papers. She could have paid the bill a thousand times over, but she needed the diamonds first. I paid the seamstress."

There was an uneasy movement up and down the room, and for some reason all eyes were directed on Mrs. Somerville. She was conscious of the fact, but with a sang froid that did her credit she put up her lorgnette and stared at a picture on the wall.

"I happened in at a milliner's," said Sydney, with a smile. "Queer place for a man to be, but I happened. Can't say that I was looking for a hat, but in searching out subjects for reform you have to drop into various places. Milliner a nice little widow. All her capital in the business. Just received a letter from a wholesale house threatening suit on bills overdue. Her customers all rich, but they didn't pay cash down. Don't pay in three or six months. In fact, they didn't pay for a year or so and only when forced to. I have seen many of the hats that were bought there that way. Relieved the distress and passed on."

Every lady in the room except the Hon. Mrs. Spofford had on an expensive hat. Each lady started to look at the other, but gave it up and cast down her eyes with proper modesty. They might not all have known the milliner referred to, but they had thoughts. After a painful silence Mr. Gerald continued:

"Happened to meet the butler of a house where I frequently call. Just happened, you know. Down in the mouth; looked bilious. As a would be reformer I spoke to him and got his story. Lady of the mansion hadn't paid his wages for five months and had borrowed his savings besides. He dared to speak to her about it, and she had sent him packing. Saw the same lady buying a $800 ruby ring the other day."

Every lady in the room helplessly glanced at the hands of every other lady. A poodle dog belonging to one of them seemed to be the only thing in the room at ease.

"Happened to call on a florist," said the obliging reformer when the silence had endured to the painful point; "just happened so. One of his statements of accounts sent out to a lady had been returned with a very sharp note. The account was two years old, and because he sought to collect it the debtor informed him that she should take her patronage elsewhere. It was only one case out of a score. Sympathized with the florist and passed on. Happened across a discharged coachman, discharged for hinting that he wanted his wages. Helped him out with a five dollar bill. Happened to run across a governess in the same fix. That's all. Good evening, ladies."

For two minutes after the reformer disappeared no one spoke. Then one lady after another rose up to go and, turning to the honorable widow, worked up a smile and said:

"Isn't Sydney Gerald just too charming for anything! And how awful of people not to pay their bills!"

Balzac's Refuge.

Admirers of Balzac who visit Paris will be interested in a museum specially devoted to souvenirs of the writer. It consists of the quaint old house and garden in the Rue Raynouard, at 47, which he inhabited many years and where he wrote a number of his best works. Curiously enough, the house recalls one of the most difficult periods of his life, when, it is said, he was hunted and persecuted by debtors to an alarming extent. He selected the house, it is stated, purposely as a sort of harbor of refuge from duns. It has no direct refuge from the Rue Raynouard, and one has first to pass through the hall of another house and go down two flights of stairs to a courtyard below. The house, which is a small building and which the French would only call a "pavilion," is entered from this courtyard and has a little garden at the back. At one side of the garden there is a steep wall down the side of the hill, giving the place the appearance of a little fortress.

Rush to the West.

The west is coming to its own again with the advent of spring. Hundreds of settlers are daily leaving Eastern Canada. From every Dominion lands office come stories of enquiries, many of them with carloads of effects.

At North Portal recently there were sixty cars of settlers' effects undergoing customs and veterinary inspection, the latter being very strict owing to the fear of glanders, many horses being detained in quarantine. From Emerson there is a similar story. A noteworthy fact is the many settlers coming from the south not seeking homesteads, but who are willing to pay for improved lands.

Dog Poisoning

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—I have been in many, but this is the worst poisoning place I have met from the number of valuable dogs that are poisoned. The devil must have a number of agents living here, as no one else would poison a good dog. As a rule the worthless dogs are let live. Those agents are a class that are too miserable to buy a dog and too stingy to feed one. That is too bad about Mr. Grubb's dog, but the meanest case I ever heard of was a few weeks ago when a lady in the north end of the city had a valuable young collie which she kept in her yard so he would not annoy anyone. She took him out one day for exercise. The archfiend threw poison outside her gate so the dog would get it when he came home. Alas! he did, and got such a large dose he was dead in ten minutes. My firm belief is those fiends will have to answer to God for the life they take as a dog is not endowed with intelligence for nothing. It is to be hoped his satanic majesty will soon call home his flock as the air in the city would be purer when they are gone.

JUDGMENT WAS RESERVED IN LIQUOR CASES AT THE POLICE COURT THIS MORNING

Blacklisted Man, After Having Been Served With Notice, Got Liquor and Told Where He Received it—Two Hotelkeepers Charged With Supplying Him

At the Police Court this morning James Kennedy, of Smith, was charged with procuring liquor in a hotel after he had been notified not to do so by Inspector Stewart. Kennedy had told the inspector where he had secured the liquor and this lead to a charge being laid against the proprietors of two local hotels, and they were also in court.

Mr Kerr asked that the cases be enlarged for one week, as Mr. Haverson, K.C., of Toronto, had been secured for the hotel keepers to act in their interests, but was unable to be present this morning.

The magistrate allowed the evidence to be heard, but intimated that he would reserve judgment.

Mr. Kerr then acted in the interests of the hotel keepers, and Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., conducted the prosecution.

James Kennedy was first called to the witness box. His evidence was to the effect that he had secured liquor in both of the hotels, but could not swear who it was who gave it to him.

He was accompanied by George Wheeler. He had secured liquor twice at one hotel but the other one had refused when he presented himself the second time.

To Mr. Kerr witness said he had not been to the hotel enough to become acquainted with the bartender or proprietor. He would not swear to the number of times he had been in the hotel. This was the first time he had been in town since being served with the black list papers and the reason he went to this hotel was because Wheeler had put his horse in the stables of this hotel. When he had called the second time the proprietor had said, "I will get a good look at you, so we will know you again.

Inspector Stewart gave evidence to the effect that he had served the necessary papers on both Kennedy and the hotel keepers.

George Wheeler when next called said he lived in Smith and knew James Kennedy and was with him on Saturday. He put his horse in at a hotel and went into the bar, where both received liquor. Kennedy paid for it. Did not know the bar tender or proprietor, nor could he say which one served the liquor. Would not say that there was more than one bar tender.

A bar tender of the hotel was called and said that he knew the inspector and remembered receiving the notices, which had been hung up on the wall. Did not remember whether he had told the proprietor about receiving the notices. He was the only bar tender employed, although the proprietor also served liquor. Kennedy or Wheeler had not received any liquor while he was in the bar. He started to work in the morning at 9.30, and when near the hotel his attention had been called towards Kennedy and was told that he was on the black list.

George Wheeler was recalled and stated that it was nine o'clock when he and Kennedy had been given the liquor.

Evidence was heard in regard to the other hotel keeper and the magistrate reserved judgment in all three cases until Saturday, May 1st.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

The Christian Guardian, in connection with a cut of the Inthon Bible Class of the George Street Church, has the following reading matter:

The Adult Bible Class movement is one of the most significant religious movements of our times. Indeed, it is only one aspect of a much larger movement which has as its motive and purpose the enlisting of the ability and gifts of the men and women of the church, and especially the former in active Christian service. Many of the adult classes as organized include in their membership both sexes, and there are a number of classes made up of women alone, but the movement in general seems to be gripping the men especially, and bringing them into active sympathetic touch with the true work of the church. Probably it is reaching them in a more noticeable way because they have hitherto stood more aloof than have their sisters from the active work of the church, so that their winning over to that work is the more striking.

Of course, as our readers know, the organized adult Bible class of to-day does much more than study the Word of God, though that is in a real sense the important and basic thing that its members do. The organization is for study, but it is also for aggressive and systematic Christian effort to win men and women for Christ and to assist in all forms of Christian and philanthropic service. And the experience of many a church and of many a pastor has been that such organization and such aims have given a new impulse and vitality to the membership of the church.

The class whose picture we give herewith is a good illustration of how the movement is moving, and of what can be done through this means to interest men in the real work that the church is trying to do. The Inthon Bible Class of George St. church Peterborough has a membership of about 175 men. It is organized not only for Bible study but for real, practical Christian service. What it has done for the life of the church its pastor and teacher the Rev. E. A. Pearson, told an audience of Sunday school workers in this city a short time ago. It is one of the vital and vitalizing forces in the church that must tell mightily upon its life as time goes on.

Probably it is true that we have not yet grasped the full significance of this movement or come to understand just all that it will do for the church as time goes on. It is true, as the Rev. Dr. Crews says in the second number of the new "Adult Class" a publication devoted to this movement; "The Adult Bible Class Movement is certainly the stir of a new force in the church, which has already accomplished much, but undoubtedly it has possibilities that have never yet been dreamed of. Teachers of Sunday school classes should take every opportunity of impressing the idea that genuine religion includes active service for our Lord and Master."

TALK "WHEN I WAS BOY."

The city fifty years ago, by Mr. F. H. Dobbin. St. Luke's Sunday school, Tuesday evening, April 27th. Refreshments. Admission 15 cts.

THE W.C.T.U.

Mrs. Hyslop, who lectured in St. Andrew's school room Thursday evening gave a most helpful and inspiring address to the WCTU. in the YMCA. parlor Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Hyslop began by saying that she was proud to be associated with a union that put God first. The work that has been accomplished by this band of women has been successful because it has been undertaken at His command, and carried on by His power. Some ask what has the WCTU done, and what is it doing. The simple wearing of the white ribbon exerts an influence for good—a lady who went through New York State lecturing in the interests of temperance, relates an instance that illustrates this. A number of young men students, going to play a ball game boarded the car upon which she was travelling. One among the number looked so steadily at her that she began to wonder if her hat was crooked. Then he walked down the aisle and looked in her face as he passed. She thought he was rude but just as he was turning a little bow of ribbon on his watch chain caught her eye. At once she touched her badge and went over to speak to the young man. He said "Mother is a white ribbon women and she tied that little bow on my chain when I left home for college. It is not very white now, but it has helped to keep my life clean." The WCTU. stands for a white life too. It stands against all the evil influences that are at work to corrupt the young manhood of our nation. This is why it stands for womanhood suffrage.

Those engaged in the liquor traffic and in the white slave traffic say that if women get the vote their business is gone.

It is through the influence of the WCTU. that we have a world's temperance Sunday and a quarterly temperance lesson in our Sabbath schools. It was through the WCTU that the Cradle Roll department came into the schools. A mother who had a husband who was addicted to drink dedicated her child to God and to temperance and asked that it be made a member of the WCTU. Her wish was granted and from this the result was the Cradle Roll. It was through the influence of the WCTU. that temperance and hygiene was introduced into our public schools and made compulsory in every state in the union. The WCTU. has begun work. It will not stop while there is a wrong to be righted, an evil to be destroyed, in our land, or some good to be won.

The last of the series of travel talks under the auspices of the Educational Committee of the Y.W.C.A., of which Miss Weir is the convenor, was held last night and proved to be a most successful one. The subject was "The Reminiscences of a Trip Through Italy," by Mr. Adams, of the Collegiate Institute staff. The lecture was given in the green-room, and a large number were present. Mr. Adams handled his subject remarkably well. He gave much valuable information, and his word pictures were so vivid that all present were greatly interested. The paper was both educative and entertaining. The chair was occupied by Mr. G. M. Roger. Miss Morse gave a piano solo and Miss Brian a vocal solo. A very pleasant and profitable evening was spent.

SUDDEN DISAPPEARANCE OF A LAKEFIELD YOUNG MAN

Left to Get Book at Public Library and Did Not Return—Villagers Searched All Night—A Mysterious Affair

Special to The Review.

Lakefield, April 24—Frank Grylls, aged 18, a deaf son of Chas. Grylls, of Regent street disappeared in a sudden and alarming manner last night at Lakefield. He took his book down to the Lakefield public library on the main street of the village about 8.30 intending to get it changed and then return. As he did not put in an appearance after nine o'clock when the library closed it was supposed that he had delayed on the way home to pay a visit to some of his friends. But by 10 o'clock no report of him having reached his family an effort was made to find him but without success. It soon became noised about that no trace could be found of the now missing young man and a search party of anxious villagers was formed. At first the idea prevailed that he might have fallen into the river but the last seen of him was when going in the opposite direction. The search was continued throughout the night without avail and Mr and Mrs Grylls are naturally in a state of great anxiety over the strange disappearance of their wholly exemplary and kindly disposed eldest son. Frank is very much liked in the village, although of a retiring and studious inclination. He read a great deal, perhaps too much. The disappearance is the general topic of conversation and has created a feeling of profound sympathy for the family in Lakefield, where they are very highly thought of.

The missing youth wore a grey suit and dark cap and had no overcoat with him.

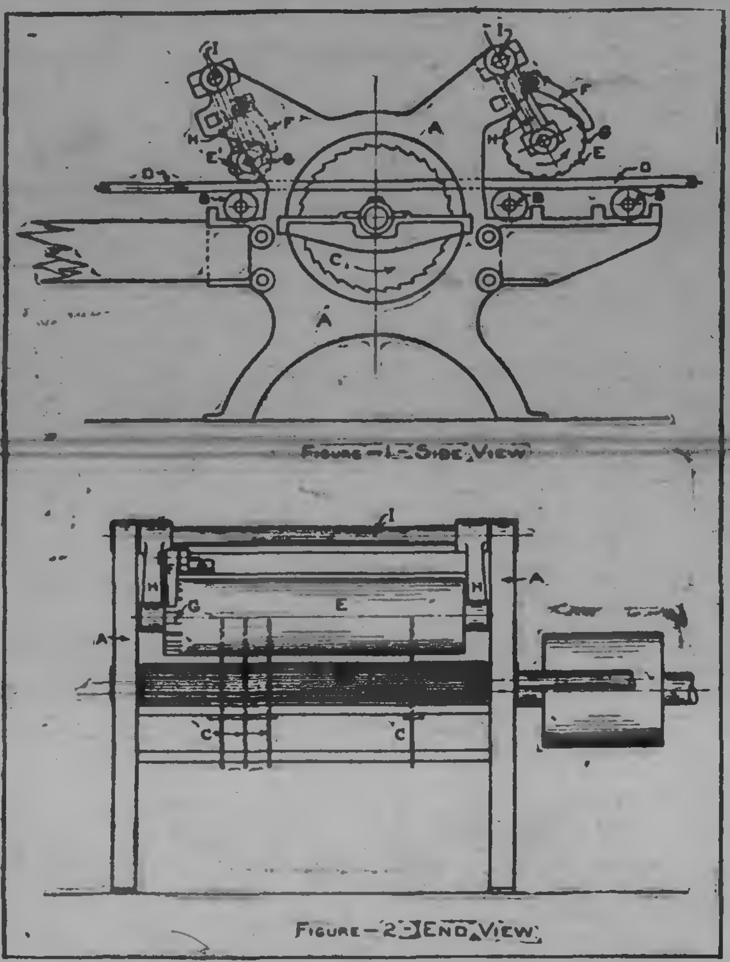
PETERBORO MAN AN INVENTOR



Cuts showing use of safety device for edging machines, invented by Mr. D.McMartin, of this city.

Mr. Dennis McMartin of this city is the inventor of a device for use on edging machines in saw mills and planing mills. Mr. McMartin's invention makes it impossible for the board or timber to fly back from the saws and because of this it should be in use in every mill. Men have sometimes been killed and frequently injured by the material which was being "edged" flying back from the saws and it is often a difficult matter to get men to work behind an edging machine because of the danger. By the use of "dogs" which operate on the rollers which hold the material when it is being sawn, Mr. McMartin has done away with this danger. The rollers are "cogged" at one end and the "dog" prevents them from reversing and letting the timber be thrown back when the saws are not just working as they should. Mr. McMartin is at present employed in the mill of the estate of A. McDonald in this city and his invention has been in use there for the past year. It is giving splendid satisfaction reducing the danger to the man working behind the edging machine to a minimum. The invention has been patented in Canada and Mr McMartin is making arrangements to bring it to the notice of the mill men of the Dominion. The cut given above gives a good idea of how the device works.

Mr. McMartin has been thirty years in the saw mill business and during that time has seen many men injured while working behind edging machines. At Deseronto he saw a man killed as a result of the material which was being cut being thrown back from the saw.

Mr. McMartin's invention can be fitted on any edging machine.

ANNUAL BANQUET OF BOYS' DEPARTMENT OF Y. M. C. A. WAS HELD LAST EVENING

Large Gathering of Boys Who Are Doing an Important Work in the Y.M.C.A.—An Address by Rev. Mr. Riddiford

The annual banquet held by the young boys of the Y. M. C. A., in the lecture room, last evening, was a very interesting and enjoyable affair. The boys have taken a big interest in all branches of their work during the past season, and the results have been most encouraging, both to themselves and the officers of the Y. M. C. A. To Mr. Evans, the boys' secretary, much of the success is due, as he has worked hard and faithfully in the discharge of his duties, and has thus gained the confidence and respect of those in whose interest he has been working.

The tables were well spread with many good things dear to the hearts of young boys, who showed the same ability in doing away with them that they have displayed in their athletic pursuits. Those seated at the head table were Messrs. J. G. Howden, Jas. Connal, A. B. Cunningham, H. A. Hassard, General Secretary; George Evans, Boys' Secretary; Chas. Sisson, Rev. Riddiford and Dr. Middleton, who acted as toastmaster. After all present had done justice to the repast that had been prepared for them by the ladies, the following toast list was carried out.

THE KING.

The toast to the King was proposed by Dr. Middleton, and honored by all singing the National Anthem.

THE BOYS' DEPARTMENT.

Mr. Ray Scott, in proposing the toast, referred to the object of this department of the Y. M. C. A., which was to endeavour to make manly and Christian citizens. Much of the success attained was due to the untiring efforts of Mr. Evans, and he hoped greater things would be accomplished in the future.

Mr. George Evans, in responding, said it was a pleasure for him to represent the Boys' Department, which was doing an important part in the work of the Y. M. C. A. The boys were the nation's greatest asset, and it was they who would control the nation's affairs in the years to come. It would be their duty to abolish the liquor traffic, which was ruining the lives of many at the present time, and it was the boys who would make the business and professional men in the future. We should be proud to be called Canadians, and also to be members of the Boys' Department of the Y. M. C. A. and should do our utmost to boost it. The object of the Boys' Department was not to have a good time, but to do but best to extend the Kingdom of Jesus Christ, as there were many opportunities they should be taken advantage of.

Mr. Carl Halpany was next called on to give a recitation. He recited "The Death of Little Pussy," and delighted his audience so well that he was compelled to respond to an encore, at which "Casey At the Bat" was given, in a pleasing manner.

REV. MR. RIDDIFORD.

An address by the Rev. Mr. Riddiford, entitled "The Missing Link," was the main feature of the programme, and as the boys have a warm spot in their hearts for that gentleman, he was given an attentive hearing. He said that he was a sympathizer with the Boys' Department of the Y. M. C. A., and it gave him great pleasure to be present. The missing link which he referred to was irreverence. Drinking, gambling, cigarette smoking and profanity were all irreverent, both to our bodies and to God. These were indulged in by men and boys, and the lack of reverence was noticeable everywhere. Drinking was the greatest evil in this country and the boys should do their best to bring about the downfall of liquor. Gambling was irreverent, and he gave as an example a boy who sold papers. Meeting a companion on the street both got into an argument, with the result that the newspaper boy bet the other one a nickle. He lost the money and the result was he could not pay for his papers when the time came for him to do so. Also the boy who smokes cigarettes, which are detrimental to his health, is irreverent to God.

Profanity was another act of irreverence and he considered the man who swore the biggest fool on earth. Swearing was a sort of insanity, as a person who used profane language was generally in an excited condition and hardly knew what he was doing. We should reverence our parents, who were our best friends on earth, and also our companions with whom we came in contact. Care should also be taken as to what kind of literature that was read. We might have every attainment, but if we lacked reverence our lives would not be the success that God intended them to be. The darkest blot in our lives was irreverence, and as this was the missing link we should endeavour to lead pure lives and show an example for others to follow.

Recitations by Mr. D. O. Waring were well received by the audience and he was repeatedly encored.

Mr. Murray Carlyle rendered a vocal solo and was heartily applauded.

THE LADIES.

The toast to the Ladies was proposed by M. Pearson in a neat and capable manner, and was responded to by George Hogan.

Votes of thanks were tendered the ladies, Mr. Waring and the Rev. Mr. Riddiford for the assistance given the boys, whereby the banquet resulted in being such a success.

The gathering dispersed after the singing of the National Anthem.

A GRATEFUL WOMAN

Tells of the Remarkable Cure Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Wrought in Her Case—Had Undergone Four Operations Without Help

When women approach that critical period in their lives known as the turn of life they do so with a feeling of apprehension and uncertainty for in the manner in which they pass that crisis determines the health of their after life. During this most important time in the life of a woman the whole aim should be to build up and strengthen her system to meet the unusual demands upon it. Devotion to family should not lead to neglect of self. The hard work and worries of household cares should be avoided as far as possible. But whether she is able to do this or not, no woman should fail to take the tonic treatment offered by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which will build up her blood and fortify her whole system, enabling her to pass this critical period with safety. We give the following strong proof of what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are constantly doing for suffering women.

Mrs. Margaret Wood, Southfield, N. B. says;—"Some years ago I became a victim to the troubles that afflict so many of my sex, in the very worst form. The doctor in charge, neither through medicine nor local treatment, gave me any help, and he decided that I must undergo an operation if I was to have any relief. During the next two years I underwent four successive operations. During this time I had the attention of some of the best physicians. From such operation I received some benefit, but only of short duration, and then I drifted back into the same wretched condition as before. During all this time I was taking medicine to build up my system, but with no avail. I was reduced to a mere skeleton; my nerves were utterly broken down. My blood was of a light yellowish color, and I was so broken down that I took spells in which my lips, fingers and tongue would seem paralyzed. I cannot begin to express what I suffered and went through in those two years. I was completely discouraged and thought I could not live long. Then on the urgent advice of friends I began to take Dr. Williams' Pills, and after some weeks perceived a change for the better. I continued to take the Pills for several months, gradually growing stronger and suffering less, and in the end found myself once more a well woman and enjoying the blessing of such good health as I had not known for years. I now always keep these Pills in the house, and after a hard day's work take them for a few days, and they always seem to put new life and energy in my body. I sincerely hope my experience may be of benefit to some other suffering women."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicines, or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing The Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MANUAL TRAINING IN SCHOOLS OF PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

A Branch of Education That Has Made Rapid Progress—Good Work Being Done in Peterborough.

Castle in clay modelled by a Fourth Book History Class.

Macrame Work, Council School, London, England.

Manual training has become an important feature of the educational system of the Province of Ontario. Peterborough is one of the places being benefitted in this respect. The manual training teacher here is Mr. A. N. Scarrow, and instruction is given to the male students at the Normal School, the Collegiate Institute and the Entrance classes of the public schools. Excellent work is being done, many of the boys showing much skill in the use of tools.

The following interesting information is from the annual report for 1908 of the inspector of technical education for the Province of Ontario, from whom the cuts have also been secured;

Manual Training centres are now equipped or being equipped as follows; Bolton Street, Creighton St., George St., Glashan School, Cambridge St., Slater St., Cartier St., Elgin St., Rideau St., First Ave., Osgoode St., Wellington St., Percy St., all 13 in Ottawa; Kingston, Brockville, Cobourg, Galt, Berlin, Woodstock, Essex, Rittenhouse School, Normal Schools at London, Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, Peterborough, Stratford; Hamilton Collegiate Institute, Wentworth St., Caroline St., Art School, all four in Hamilton; Broadview Boys' Institute, Wellesley School Givens St., Queen Alexandra, Lansdowne School, George St., Dewson St, all seven in Toronto; Brantford Collegiate Institute Brantford Public Schools, Stratford, St. Thomas, Cornwall, Ingersoll, Guelph Public Schools Guelph Consolidated School, Macdonald Institute, Owen Sound and Peterborough Public Schools.

The new centres opened during the year are Normal Schools at Hamilton, and Stratford; Public Schools, Brantford; and on the opening of schools in January 1909, the Normal School at Peterborough, Public Schools, in Peterborough, and the new building at Sault Ste. Marie will open with well equipped centres.

Four additional teachers have been appointed and centres at Alvinston, and Renfrew have had to be closed, owing to inability to secure properly qualified teachers. This difficulty, which is growing acute will be dealt with later.

Household Science centres are now established in the following schools; Wellesley, Parkdale, Queen Alexandra, Winchester, King Edward, Dewson, Broadview Boys' Institute, Young Women's Christian Guild, Technical School, all nine in Toronto; Normal Schools in London, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Peterborough, Stratford; Collegiate Institute Wentworth, King Edward, Caroline, St., all four in Hamilton; Kingston, Brockville, Berlin, Woodstock, Galt, Renfrew, Ingersoll, Brantford, Stratford, Guelph Public Schools, Guelph Consolidated School, Macdonald Institute, Lillian Massey School, Toronto, Albert College, Belleville, Alma College, St. Thomas, Peterborough Public schools and a number of private institutions and colleges not under the jurisdiction of the Department.

The magnificent gift of Mrs. Massey Treble to the University of an ideal building for carrying on Household Science work marks an era in its development and offers an example worthy of the consideration of our wealthy men.

There is not the same difficulty in securing properly qualified teachers in this subject as exists in the case of Manual Training, largely owing to the fact that before an individual can take the necessary course in order to qualify as a Manual Training teacher he must have at least a second class Normal certificate while the corresponding qualification for Household Science is Junior Leaving or Junior Matriculation.

The outlook for both these subjects is extremely bright. As pointed out in the report for last year there were thirteen towns of a population of 5,000 or over without Manual Training or Household Science. That number has now been reduced to ten and several towns of less than that population are seriously considering the desirability and advisability of doing so. One small community discontinued Manual Training very largely owing to local conditions and personal friction.

Of course opposition has not entirely ceased and it would probably not be a good thing if it had. In every body of twelve men there are sure to be two or three who for various reasons and from various motives, which need not be here specified, oppose these subjects, but the fact remains and cannot be denied, that in almost every place where they are properly taught the vast majority of parents and ratepayers are enthusiastically in favor of an education which while being intellectual is yet practical. This is well shown by the opening of additional centres in places where the work has been going on for some time, such as Ottawa, Hamilton, Toronto and Brantford, and the opening of evening and extra classes in places like Guelph, Brockville, Owen Sound, Galt, etc.

ELEMENTARY HAND WORK

It has been pointed out in previous years that if any effective training of an industrial or vocational character is to be given through the medium of our Public and High Schools the foundation will have to be laid very low down in the school course,—in fact in the Kindergarten. This is not the place to discuss various questions that have been raised with reference to the Kindergarten, such as, 1, has it accomplished all that is claimed for it? 2, have its methods become stereotyped and formal? or 3, has it participated in the development and progress that has taken place in other fields of educational effort? Much could be said on both sides of these questions but it will suffice to say here that these very questions can be raised concerning almost every subject on the school curriculum.

It is to be regretted that Kindergarten methods are not carried further in the school course. The usual procedure in the first and second books seems to be based on the assumption that directly a child leaves the Kindergarten its whole nature changes, and in accordance with this assumption an entirely different treatment is prescribed for it. The free expression of individuality, the spontaneous exhibition of childish delight the educational play, the song and dance are all now discouraged and the Kindergarten motto "Learning by doing" receives a new rendering and becomes "Learning by being talked to."

Considering this change which is forced into the life of the child at about the age of seven years we are compelled to adopt one of two conclusions; either that Kindergarten methods are wrong or that our sudden reversal of these methods, directly the child enters the ordinary school, is without warrant.

Notwithstanding all the questions that have been raised with reference to Kindergarten methods it cannot be disputed that such training has distinct value and that the training required at that period of a child's life can be given in no other way. The period of from four to seven years of age is the period of most rapid brain growth, which modern psychologists tell us bears a close relation to mental growth. Hence it is the period on which the child is most plastic; hence most impressionable it is a period important in habit forming. In the Kindergarten, the child should gain control of body, acquire skill, have his senses trained and become in consequence more alert. He is also placed in a democratic society in which each works for all, and all for each. He learns self-reliance and self-confidence, in short he is trained in social living.

In the "Philistine" Walter Crane writes as follows;—"The Kindergarten is the most perfect all-round training school in the world. It trains, by wisely guided practices, the five senses in the receiving of correct impressions, and the ideas and forms thus taken in are at once expressed by both tongue and hand. Go into a good kindergarten see the things of beauty created by infants there; creations of paper as expressions of impressions of form and colour and beauty entirely impossible to our manly and womanly 'all thumb and fingers.' The ideal kindergarten is an ideal school of complete impression and complete expression—an ideal school of civilization besides which our grade schools and our high schools are Hottentot Universities. Hand in hand should go the development of understanding and expression from birth onward, and this double training should not stop, as it does stop, at the first grade at the age of six. Why do we then stop the development of expression by the hand except in writing and a little drawing? That is, stop almost all expression and go to 'walling up' a so-called trained mind away from its environment by allowing the hand to grow up all thumbs when the child with the 'trained mind' must by this very hand work out, or not work out, the divine conceptions of his mind? I must confess this is inconceivable to me.

"Between the kindergarten and the end of his grade school life, there should be no change of front, but the double correlative work of impression and expression should go on, hand in hand, a just proportion of thought and its expression both orally and manually. That amount of thought only should be given that can be properly expressed by its proper mode of expression; for when the child is grown up, his worth to himself and to the world will be proportioned to his expression, while the excess of unexpressed proper thought will be dead matter to clog his brain and class him as a dyspeptic."

The theory of the kindergarten which recognizes the little child as a doer rather than a listener, includes the belief that his interest in doing should be made educative, and this principle should be carried from the kindergarten right through the grades. It is to be regretted that this is not more generally the case, but during the past year many more schools have taken up handwork in the primary grades, and now that students in our Normal schools are being largely restricted to those elementary branches which can be taken up in any ordinary class room and do not require specially and elaborately equipped rooms the hope and outlook for the future is still brighter.

In carrying on this work the mistakes generally made are as follows;

1. In planing the work, the desires of the teacher rather than the interests of the child are considered.

2. An unreasonable amount of accuracy is required, and thus the child is discouraged.

3. A series of objects are chosen which have neither relation to each other nor to the life interests of the child.

1. On examining various courses of study we find a great variety of objects projected for grades one to three. Some are based entirely on geometrical forms and type solids others on articles of use and ornament about the house; others upon toys and play interests, and others where it is very difficult if not impossible to find on what they are based.

Is it not possible to lay down a broad and general principle, so that we may have a standard of choice on which it will be fairly safe to rely.

The subject is generally presented in such a way that the child is obliged to work from a teacher devised plan to the object itself, that is, the teacher originates the plan and presents it to the class, and each individual is expected to rigidly adhere to the plan presented.

Most of the thinking required is done in the working out of the plan, so that the teacher is really the one who receives the training from the making of the object. When this method is adopted we often find plans that are unintelligible to a trained eye, much less to the eye of a child. We can only see the object after a certain amount of curring and folding has been done. The opposite of this would be the case if we took the object first and evolved the plan directly from it. The only work a child should be given in this connection is some project which he is capable of visualising, or which he has in some way entered into his life. We have no lack of choice. Many of the activities of real life have entered very closely into the life of the child. The objects mentioned should be so familiar that the very names of them call up their mental images which thus form an intelligent basis for the work.

Teachers should not reject a project because they have passed the period when it meant much to them, but should make a stronger effort to look at it from the child's view point, and realize how much it means to him. The most successful teachers of this work are those who have the happy faculty of becoming children again in spirit and in thought. We must consider the child then as the first element in our scheme, not for the purpose of making the work interesting or amusing, but because it gives us a satisfactory foundation for all future work. John Dewey puts this point, as only he can, as follows;

"From the standpoint of the child, great waste in the school room comes from his inability to utilize the experiences he gets outside the school in any complete and free way within the school itself; while, on the other hand, he is unable to apply in daily life what he is learning in school. This is the isolation of the school, the isolation from life. When the child gets into the school room he has to put out of his mind a large part of the ideas, interests and activities that predominate in his home and neighbourhood. So the school, being unable to utilize this every day experience, sets painfully on another track, and by a variety of means to arouse in the child an interest in our school studies."

2. In our conscious or unconscious recognition of the fact that many European nations excel our own in care and accuracy, we have insisted on exactness in season and out of season. Even if we do succeed in getting a piece of work accurately constructed, that is not going to be a cure for all the problems of inaccuracy which are inherent in childhood. Accuracy is not the keynote of manual training and particularly is this true of the elementary handwork. On this rock of absolute accuracy many systems of early childhood is impossible and for manual training have split. Accuracy in early childhood is impossible and for this there are many reasons. Looked at from a physical standpoint we know that the large muscles develop first and the smaller ones later in life. Where this is not the case development is not natural. When we lay too much stress on small things we are tearing down rather than build up. The young eye cannot deal with fine measurements and the undeveloped hand can use neither the pencil nor the tool with the necessary skill.

Accuracy is also a mental attitude and requires a working combination of mind, hand, and eye. This three-fold development cannot be forced. It must be guided and cultivated carefully, persistently and tactfully, and only in adult life, if then, will the development be complete.

Great value results from the teacher's efforts in training the child to be accurate in his handiwork. He learns that more haste means less speed; that "near enough" is not sufficient and that careful thought and planning is necessary if good work is to be accomplished. Thus the elements of painstaking and forethought are cultivated, and the habit of these, once achieved, is bound to exert an influence upon all his work.

Let us plead for that rational degree of accuracy which may be reasonably expected from the young child. Those who have had to deal with children will understand what is meant. It is for teachers to educate the outside world so that when they look at the work of our children they may see it through the eyes of the child. Inaccuracy in hand work is very evident. It is much more noticeable there than anywhere else in school and it must be pointed out. Children will see what is meant for they are dealing with tangible material. Let us be sparing in our criticisms remembering that accuracy is not a characteristic of childhood, and that too much emphasis will have an effect the direct opposite to that intended.

3. The objects made should have some definite connection not only with the life of the child but they should also have some connection with each other, that is, they should be grouped about some common centre and naturally arise out of that centre and not be dragged in merely for the sake of making something. To make a box one week, a pin tray the next, and so on, is not to get the best out of this work.

THE BLACKLIST

The law governing and regulating the sale of liquor as amended and enforced by the Ontario Government is a good one and it is to be hoped that so long as it remains upon the statute book no consideration will be allowed to stand in the way of a fair and frank enforcement of it. Officers of the law are sometimes brought face to face with conditions that have been brought about by the very people subsequently seeking to palliate or ignore them and to enable others to do the same. Weakness at the wrong time does more damage than all the liquor and all the crime charged against it. Those who in the past have allowed themselves to put private interests before the public good are subject to the visitations of the black list and dishonest in the discharge of their duties to the public. For a time this sort of thing may work or may have worked but the end of it has come in Peterborough. There is no desire to trifle with those who would sidetrack or render nugatory a good law and they will not be trifled with. It is a pity that all sorts of considerations are sometimes put forward to secure an evasion of a good and just law.

THE WATERWAYS TREATY

No more monumental exhibition of ill-advised treaty-making was ever submitted to the gaze of mankind, than that comprised in what is now known as the Waterways Treaty. This last and worst example of international dealing shows how fatuous was the boasted policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in "securing" for Canada the making of her own treaties. The international boundary line shows that at Niagara we are entitled to 50 per cent of the flow of the river. At St. Mary's (Sault Ste Marie) Canada is entitled according to the same fixed line to 50 per cent of the flow. It was so found indeed in the first draft of the treaty submitted to the Senate of the United States but when the Senator for Michigan "got going" it was changed. Now we are found entitled to a fixed number of feet at the Falls which leaves all over that in the way of water for the Chicago drainage canal. At Sault Ste. Marie we are to have only 25 per cent of the flow of the river, the United States taking 75 per cent. Such is clearly the victory of might over right. Every war case has been in the hands of poor advocates. Mr. Aylesworth and Mr. Gibbons went to Washington with a flourish of trumpets but are returning amid a volley of groans. To blame Lord Alverstone or any other British representative for what has been "given away" in the past is to provoke ridicule and increased anger by comparison. Lord Alverstone did magnificently by comparison. We have been done a serious injury. Our great natural resources are in these two places no longer great. They have been shorn down to something quite commonplace so much so that the great enterprises dependent upon them must be curtailed and our dreams of industrial expansion given up. The policy of the United States was never so plain. We are being pulled across the line by force in a tug of war and it is evidently hoped that to save ourselves we will find it necessary to loosen our membership in the British Empire. Had this been foreseen and provided for or at any rate provided for as a possible contingency and had statesmanlike precautions been taken to prevent it Canada would have suffered no such loss and would have been able to rejoice in something like an equitable statement. The Chicago Canal was a danger at the beginning. It is now a source of disaster to Canada and in view of what has been lost by the latest so-called treaty we may well ask where we are? To the Laurier government belongs this as other of the stupendous mistakes we have lately fallen into.

WITH MARS

There is a grand chance for the boodlers at Ottawa now to get in a loan to the company seeking to establish communication with Mars. Ten millions, the well-known number, will do it—so they say. Professor Pickering believes a mirror a quarter of a mile in diameter (what an ornament for a millinery shop!) would do the trick. Such a mirror would have to be like a fly's eye made up of a thousand others, or else the work could not even be put in a way of going on. A quarter of a mile of mirror is no mere hand-glass. It would probably be impossible to cast it, so that we shall have to be content with the make up. However, none of these considerations need interfere with that marvellously "progressive" government at Ottawa, which delights in loans and other means of—rake-off. The more ridiculous the scheme the more they delight in it.

A WORD TO THE "WISE"

Victoria Evening Post:—The wiseacres in the east who pooh-poohed the attitude of British Columbia on the Oriental immigration question, and especially those who refused to recognize any peril to civilization from the commingling of the white and yellow races, would do well to note that the number of marriages between white women and yellow men is increasing. But the saddest and the most serious aspect of the matter is that the increase is taking place not among the lower classes of both races, who might possibly be excused on the ground of natural impulse, but among educated persons. Three conspicuous instances were chronicled in the west last week. . . . . It is greatly to be feared that in the not distant future the Western States and Provinces will be over-run with a hybrid, degenerate, mongrel race if Oriental immigration be not effectively checked.

The Evening Post, of Victoria, B.C., challenges the wiseacres of the Liberal party to a change in their policy of opening Canada to Orientals. It is a short, sharp and decisive charge, and bears evidence of the danger which has been so selfishly ignored by the Liberal party, and those who aid and abet it in its work of degrading Canada.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

"It is expected that in New Zealand the new scale of old-age pensions will in 1909 cost £351,000 for 13,500 persons if 32 per cent. of the eligible people get the full allowance of £26; in 1911 it will cost £365,000, and in 1913 £375,000."

No old-age pension scheme has yet been matured or indeed suggested for Canada, at least by the Sir Wilfrid Laurier Government. The annuity scheme is an entirely different affair, and is in no sense as beneficial and desirable as the pension plan. The latter has worked well in Germany, New Zealand and Great Britain. The United States and Canada have yet to adopt it, but there is no just reason for Canada's lagging in this particular, as she has done heretofore. The people, as a whole, should get more benefit from a country whose natural riches appear as the rewards only of those who, having no settled means of support or industry and are ready to "pick up and go" whenever the alarm sounds. This is not fair to the steady workers who are the real foundation upon which the country rests. Compensation must be found in other ways or injustice will ripen into discontent.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Has anything been heard lately about the Bald Lake bridge? What is the Laurier Government doing in the matter?

It is perhaps not altogether a nice thing to do, but we cannot help asking what the Liberal stump-orators propose to say now in view of what they said re school books last June.

Rev. Dr. Orr has laid it down that "Christ cannot be explained from a human standpoint." The same with regard to the Bible history of God's ways to men is alleged by other opponents of the higher critics. It is alleged that to establish what seems right or reasonable to men is not the object of the Bible. That book would change his whole range of view.

There was a very striking passage-at-arms between Rev. Dr. Barclay, of Montreal, and Hon. W. A. Weir, on April 21. The new bill governing Protestant education greatly displeased Rev. Dr. Barclay. Mr. Weir retorted that Rev. Dr. Hill and Rev. Dr. Johnston approved of it. To this Dr. Barclay replied: "Well I I consider it a great piece of presumption for two clergymen, who do not belong to a Canadian church to take it upon themselves to support such a bill as this." Church people generally opposed the bill, Sir Louier Gouin said.

THE ATTIC INSTINCT.

Why Some Persons Cling to Things That Are Rubbish.

The attic instinct hangs on surprisingly, and an observing eye can tell how many years a person has lived in the city by merely glancing under her bed. If there are three hat boxes one will contain letters, one scraps of ribbons and laces—if it's a man it's newspaper clippings — and one anything from a broken lock to old road maps. If, besides these, there are bundles of magazines and piles of newspapers, not to mention a bicycle seat and a green umbrella that one might use in private theatricals—if all these things have been placed under the bed against the protests of the family, if they are patiently moved every cleaning day and clung to through a moving, then their owners have the attic instinct to such an extent that there is not the slightest hope of their ever being cured. They will think from an attic point of view for the rest of their lives, and their family might as well become resigned.

When people are willing to make themselves disagreeable over a bit of string and absolutely objectionable on the subject of stray pieces of brown paper they should not be accused of having bad dispositions, nor should they be suspected of doing it to annoy one. They are merely suffering from the attic instinct and cannot help themselves.

Their characters were formed and have now hardened for a scheme of life where certain things were always kept in the cellar, others in the wood shed, others in the pantry and the cupboard on the first floor, still others in the closets on the next floor, and everything and anything that overflowed from any of these places was just taken up to the attic. And now these poor dear souls live with a cellar, three stories and an attic still lodged in their minds, and, though they will in time disappear, like all unnecessary members—seventh toe, tails, an appendix—in the meantime they are having trouble with them, they are suffering and fighting for them, and it takes a serious operation to remove so much as one scrap book if the owner thinks he may like to read it over in his old age.

Piscatorial Architecture.

Our four-year-old Elizabeth has recently been superintending (at a safe distance) some extensive repairs on our barn. These repairs included, among other things, the violent tearing off of the roof, an exciting operation accompanied by much beautiful and soul-inspiring noise.

A rainy day caused a suspension of outdoor work, and Elizabeth transferred her attention to the kitchen. When she came upstairs after an hour's absence her mother said to her:

"Where have you been so long, dear?"

"Oh, I've just been in the kitchen," she answered, "watchin Nora take the shingles off a fish!"

Astounding Vitality of the Turtle.

The vitality of this strange sea creature, the turtle, after decapitation is almost beyond belief. A large turtle was once sent to a hotel in Newcastle. The chef cut the turtle's head off and hung the body upside down to bleed. Twenty-four hours after that turtle knocked down a man cook with one blow of its fin. The green turtle is not a vicious creature to handle, like its snapping Japanese brother, but its fins are very strong, and one blow from them is quite sufficient to break a man's arm.—Wide World Magazine.

CHASE AWAY THE TIRED FEELING

Dodd's Kidney Pills Will do it Quickly and Naturally.

It is Caused by Sluggish Circulation Brought on by Deranged Kidneys Failing to Strain Impurities Out of the Blood.

Stayner, Ont, April 23—Special —In the spring the Kidneys always need attention. They have addition work in straining the winter's accumulation of impurities out of the blood and if they are at all out of order it is sure to tell on them. It is only a question of the best method of treating them and Ernest Cotwell of this place adds his testimony to the great mass of proof that the one sure cure for sick Kidneys is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Some time ago," says Mr. Cotwell, "I had severe Pains and Soreness in the small of my back and sometimes noticed a brick dust sediment in my urine so of course I knew my Kidneys were effected. I procured some of Dodd's Kidney Pills, which readily cured the pains and soreness and restored the urine to its natural color. I always recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Everybody needs medicine in the Spring and the medicine they need is Dodd's Kidney Pills. They clear the blood of impurities and by giving the blood free circulation speedily and naturally chase away that tired feeling. It is caused by sluggish circulation and Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure it.

The N.T.R. commissioners to date have paid in salaries $3,614,268.

BROTHER TOLD BROTHER

One Suffered for Fifteen Years, the Other for Thirteen.

The convincing powers of a testimonial were never more clearly shown than in the case of Mr. Hugh Brown. A brother, Lemuel Brown, of Avondale, N.B., read in the paper about Hon. John Costigan being cured by "Fruit-a-tives." Knowing the Senator would only endorse a medicine which had cured him, Mr. Lemuel Brown tried "Fruit-a-tives." They cured him of Chronic Indigestion and Constipation, so he urged his brother to try them.

Hartland, N.B., Oct. 28th, 1907.

"Three doctors told me that I had Liver Disease and serious Stomach Trouble. My stomach was very weak. I took their medicines for thirteen years and grew worse. My brother (who was cured of terrible Indigestion by "Fruit-a-tives" after suffering for 15 years), recommended me to try these wonderful tablets. I bought half a dozen boxes and have just finished the sixth. I eat all kinds of hearty foods without distress and am greatly improved in every way. "Fruit-a-tives" also cured the Chronic Constipation which was so distressing in my case."

THEATRICAL OFFERINGS OF LOCAL SEASON

count of so much being said of her in advance the versatile comedienne of Dolly Varden fame, fell just a little short of expectations. The big and bright extravaganza, "The Land of Nod," was the last attraction of importance at the local playhouse and Knox Wilson and his supporting merrymakers provided unlimited amusement to a highly pleased audience.

The amateur shows gave the Marathon craze a close run and the following were produced "The Mikado," for two nights, "All the Comforts of Home," for three performances, "The Private Secretary" and "True Irish Hearts," the latter being given two presentations.

The Opera House orchestra deserves great commendation for the splendid manner in which it played its overtures and various numbers and the ready and intelligent way it picked up the music of the comic opera scores was a surprise to the musical directors who did not look for so experienced an orchestra in a city the size of Peterborough. To the stage staff credit must be given for the way they handled the scenery and stage properties and also for their courteous and helpful attention to the requirements of the local amateur companies.

Fort Churchill as a Harbor.

The picturesque days of the Indian chase and the buffalo hunt have recently been recalled by the arrival in Winnipeg of William Beech, the pioneer settler of Fort Churchill. Mr. Beech arrived from the far north with two dog trains, which carried his supplies and the furs he had taken during the early part of the winter. He is most optimistic over the feasibility of Hudson Bay as a short wheat route to Europe, and says it will be the greatest thing possible for Western Canada when the first train steams into Fort Churchill. Mr. Beech laughs at the suggestion that the Hudson Bay route is only navigable for a short period each year, and says that with the assistance of ice-breakers the route can be kept open as long as the St. Lawrence route, but the heavy freight rates via rail to Montreal will be eliminated.

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

"This will end in a little while, John. She is young. She can go back to the mission tomorrow. She will soon forget."

"Forget! Do you think she can forget?"

"Any woman can forget. Only men remember."

"It is the red blood in you—lying. You know you lie."

"It is to save your life," she said.

"I know, but it's no use." To Necia he said, "You needn't worry, little daughter." But her ears were deaf. "You needn't give him up, I say. This will end all right."

Seeing that she gave no sign of heeding, he stepped closer and swung her about till she faced him.

"Can't you trust me this one time? You always have before, Necia. I say he'll marry you, and it will come out right."

She raised her hopeless eyes and strove gamely to meet him, then, failing, broke away and turned back to the door. "I knew you couldn't understand. I—I—O God, I love him so!" With a cry like that of a wounded animal she fled out into the night, where she could give vent to her anguish unseen, for she had never wept before her father, but always crept away and hid herself until her grief was spent. Gale would have started after her, but Alluna dragged him back fiercely.

"No, no! It means your life, John. Let the secret die, and she will forget. She is so young. Time will cure her. Time cures everything. Don't tell her, don't tell any one, and, above all, don't tell that soldier. He would not believe, nor would she. Even I have doubted."

"You?"

"Yes, John. And, if I don't believe, what is a stranger to say? No man knowing you would believe the tale without proof. Suppose she doubted. Have you ever thought of that? Would you not rather have her die still loving you than live and disbelieve?"

"Yes, yes! Of course I—I've thought of that, but— Woman, you're worse than a rattlesnake!"

"Even if he knew, he might not marry her. You at least are clean, and that other man was a devil. A brave man's life is too great a price to pay for a grief that will die in a year." Alluna was speaking swiftly in her own language, her body tense, her face ablaze, and no man seeing her could ever again have called her people stolid.

"You think time will cure a love like that?" he said.

"Yes, yes!"

"That's all you know about it. Time may act that way perhaps in cities and such places, but out in the hills it is different. When you've got the breath of the forest in you, I say it is different. Time! Why, I've lived fifteen years in the open with a living memory. Every night I've dreamed it over; every day I've lived it through. In every campfire I see a face, and every wind from the south brings a voice to me. Every stormy night a girl with eyes like Necia's calls to me, and I have to follow. Every patch of moonlight shows her smiling at me, just beyond, just in the shadow's edge. Love! Time! Why, Alluna, love is the only thing in the world that never dies, and time only makes it the more enduring."

He took up the white slouch hat he had thrown down when he came in and stepped to the door.

"Where are you going?" inquired the squaw fearfully.

"To the barracks to give myself up!"

She flung herself at him, with a great cry, and seized him about the waist.

"You never loved me, John, but I have been a good woman to you, although I knew you were always thinking of her—and had no thought of me. I have loved this girl because you loved her. I have hated your enemies because you hated them, and now I remember, while you forget."

"Forget! What do you mean?"

"Stark!"

The man paused. "I did almost forget him—and after fifteen years!"

"Let us kill him tonight; then we will go to the soldier together, side by side. I am your woman. Necia will look after the little ones.

Gale stared at her, and as he gazed the red pigment underneath her skin, the straight hanging, manelike hair, the gaudy shawl she never went without, the shapeless, skin shod feet, the slovenly, ill fitting garb of a miscast woman vanished, and he saw her as she was on a day long past, a slim, shy, silent creature, with great, watchful, trusting eyes and a soul unspoiled. No woman had ever been so loyal, so uncomplaining. He had robbed her of her people and her gods. He had shifted hither and yon at the call of his uncertain fortune or at a sign of that lurking fear that always dogged him, and she had never left his side, never questioned, never doubted, but always served him like a slave, without asking for a part in that other love, without sharing in the caresses he had consecrated to a woman she had never seen.

"By heaven, you're game, Alluna, but there's a limit even to what I can take from you," he said at last. "I don't ever seem to have noticed it before, but there is. No. I've got to do this thing alone tonight, all of it, for you have no place in it, and I can't let the little girl go on like this. The sooner that soldier knows the better." He leaned down and touched her brown mouth with his grizzled lips. "Thank you, Alluna, for making a man of me when I'd nearly forgotten. Now, you stay here." He knew he could count on her obedience, and so he left her. When he had gone she drew the shawl up over her face and crouched in the doorway, straining her eyes after him through the dark. In time she began to rock and sway and then to chant until the night moaned with the death song of her people.

Necia had no idea whither she went. Her only thought was to flee from her kin, who could not understand; to hide under cover in some solitary place; to let the darkness swallow her up, so that she might give way to her grief and be just a poor weak woman. On she stumbled blindly through the murk like some fair creature of light cast out and banished.

She had not succeeded in thoroughly isolating herself, however, for a man who was steering his course by the sense of feel and the wind's direction heard her and paused. His steps were muffled in the soft footing, so that she had no warning of his presence until he was near enough to distinguish her dimly where she leaned against the log wall of a half completed cabin.

To his question, "What's the trouble here?" she made no answer, but moved away, whereupon he detained her. "There's something wrong. Who are you anyhow?"

"It's only Necia, Mr. Stark," said the girl, at which he advanced and took her by the arm.

"What ails you, child? What in the world are you doing here? Come! It's only a step to my cabin. You must come in and rest awhile, and you'll soon be all right. Why, you'll break your neck in this darkness."

She hung back, but he compelled her to go with him in spite of her unwillingness.

"Now, now," he admonished, with unusual kindliness for him; "you know you're my little friend, and I can't let you go on this way. It's scandalous. I won't stand for it. I like you too much."

He led her inside his cabin and closed the door in the face of the night wind before he struck a light.

"I can't stand to see you cry," he repeated as he adjusted the wick. "Now, as soon as"— He stopped in astonishment, for he had turned to behold instead of the little half breed girl this slender, sorrowful stranger in her amazingly wonderful raiment.

"By"— He checked himself insensibly and stood motionless for a long time.

"I—I—hope you'll excuse me for acting this way," she smiled at him piteously; then, observing his strange features: "Why, what is the matter, Mr. Stark? Are you angry?"

His hawklike face was strained and colorless, his black eyes fierce and eager, his body bent as if to pounce upon a victim. In truth, he was now the predatory animal.

"No," he replied as if her question carried no meaning; then, coming to himself. "No, no; of course not. But you gave me a start. You reminded me of some one. How do you come to be dressed like that? I never knew you had such clothes."

"Poleon brought them from Dawson. They are the first I ever had."

He shook his head in a slow, puzzled fashion.

"You look just like a white girl—I mean—I don't know what I mean." This time he roused himself fully, the effort being more like a shudder.

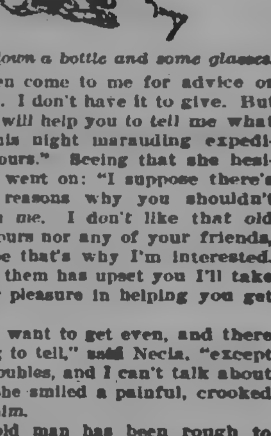
"So I have always thought," she said, and her eyes filled again.

He shoved forward a big chair with a wolfskin flung over it, into which she sank dejectedly, while he stepped to the shelves beside the Yukon stove and took down a bottle and some glasses.

"I'm not fixed up very well yet," he apologized. "I've been too busy at the saloon to waste time on living quarters. But it's comfortable enough for an old roadster like me."

He was talking to give her leeway and when he had concocted a weak toddy insisted that she must drink it, which she did listlessly, while he rambled on:

"I've noticed a few things in my life, Miss Necia, and one of them is that it often does a heap of good to let out and talk things over—not that a fellow gains any real advantage from disseminating his troubles, but it serves to sort of ease his mind. Folks don't often come to me for advice or sympathy. I don't have it to give. But maybe it will help you to tell me what caused this night marauding expedition of yours." Seeing that she hesitated, he went on: "I suppose there's a lot of reasons why you shouldn't confide in me. I don't like that old man of yours nor any of your friends, but maybe that's why I'm interested. If any of them has upset you I'll take particular pleasure in helping you get even."



He took down a bottle and some glasses.

"I don't want to get even, and there is nothing to tell," said Necia, "except a girl's troubles, and I can't talk about them." She smiled a painful, crooked smile at him.

"Your old man has been rough to you?"

"No, no! Nothing of that sort."

"Then it's that soldier?" he quizzed shrewdly. "I knew you cared a heap for him. Don't he love you?"

"Yes. That's the trouble, and he wants to marry me. He swears he will in spite of everything."

"See here. I don't quite follow. I thought you liked him. He's the kind most women go daffy over."

"Like him!" The girl trembled with emotion. "Like him! Why—why, I would do anything to make him happy."

"I guess I must be kind of dull," Stark said perplexedly.

"Don't you see? I've got to give him up. I'm a squaw."

"Squaw h—l! With those shoulders!"

Stark checked himself, for he found he was rejoicing in his enemy's defeat and was in danger of betraying himself to the girl. In every encounter the young man had bested him, and these petty defeats had crystallized his antipathy to Burrell into a hatred so strong that he had begun to lie awake nights planning a systematic quarrel.

He had brooded over his quarrel with Gale and the lieutenant ever since their first clash, for in this place they furnished the only objects upon which his mania could work, and it was a mania, the derangement of a diseased, distorted mind.

"So you like him too much to stand in his way," he said meditatively. "How does your father look at it?"

"He wants the lieutenant to marry me. He says he will fix it up all right. But he doesn't understand. How could he?"

"You are doing just right," concurred the man hypocritically, "and you'll live to be glad you stood out." Now that both his enemies desired this thing he was set on preventing it regardless of the girl. "How did the lieutenant take it when you refused him?"

"He wouldn't take it at all. He only laughed and declared he would marry me anyhow." The very thought thrilled her.

"Does he know you love him?"

The tender, sobbing laugh she gave was ample answer.

"Well, what's your plan?"

"I—I—I don't know. I am so torn and twisted with it all that I can't plan, but I have thought I—ought—to go—away."

"Good!" he said quickly, but his acquiescence, instead of soothing her, had the contrary effect, and she burst out impulsively:

"Oh—I can't—I can't! I can't go away and never see him! I can't do it! I want to stay where he is!" She had been holding herself in stubbornly, but at last gave way with reckless abandon. "Why wasn't I born white like other girls? I've never felt like an Indian. I've always dreamed and fancied I was different, and I am in my soul. I know I am! The white is so strong in me that it has killed the red, and I'm one of father's people. I'm not like the other two. They are brown and silent and as cold as little toads. But I'm white and full of life all over. They never see the men and women that I see in my dreams. They never have my visions of the beautiful snow white mother with the tender mouth and the sad eyes that always smile at me."

"You have visions of such things, eh?"

"Yes, but I came a generation late, that's all, and I've got that other woman's soul. I'm not a half breed. I'm not me at all. I'm Merridy—Merridy! That's who I am."

Her face was turned away from him, so that she did not notice the frightful effect her words had upon Stark.

"Where did you get—that name?" His voice was pitched in a different key now. Then after a moment he added, "From the story I told you at the mine that night, I suppose?"

"Oh, no," she answered. "I've always had it, though they call me Necia. Merridy was my father's mother. I guess I'm like her in many ways, for I often imagine she is a part of me, that her spirit is mine. It's the only way I can account for the sights I see."

"Your father's mother?" he said mechanically. "That's queer." He seemed to be trying to shake himself free from something. "It's heredity, I suppose. You have visions of a white woman, a woman named Merridy, eh?" Suddenly his manner changed, and he spoke so roughly that she looked at him in vague alarm.

"How do you know? How do you know she was his mother?"

"He told me so."

Stark snarled. "He lied!"

"I can show you her wedding ring. I've always worn it." She fumbled for the chain about her neck, but it eluded her trembling fingers. "It has her name in it—'From Dan to Merridy.'"

Stark's hand darted forward and tore the thing from her shoulders. Then he thrust it under the lamp and glared at the inscription, while his fingers shook so that he could barely distinguish the words. His eyes were blazing and his face livid.

Necia cried out, but he dropped the ornament and seized her fiercely, lifting her from the chair to her feet. Then with one swift, downward clutch he laid hold of her dress at the left shoulder and ripped it half to her waist. A hoarse sound came from his throat, a cry half of amazement, half of triumph.

"Let me go! Let me go!" She struggled to free herself, but he held her in a viselike grip, while he peered closely at a blemish well down upon her back. Then he let her slip from his grasp, and, seized with terror, she staggered away from him. He was leaning heavily with both hands upon the table, his thin lips grinning, his whole manner so terrifying that she shrank back. She turned and made for the door, whereupon he straightened up and said in a queer, commanding voice:

"Wait. Don't go. I—I—you"— He licked his lips as if they were dust dry, passed an uncertain hand across his beaded brow and, raising the water pail beside the door to his mouth, drank heavily in great, noisy gulps.

"Let me out of here!" the girl demanded imperiously.

"Don't be scared," he said, more quietly now. "You must excuse me. You—you gave me an awful fright. Yes, that was it. Don't worry. I didn't mean any harm."

"You hurt my shoulder," she said, almost ready to cry. "And you tore my dress," she added angrily—"my fine dress. Are you crazy?"

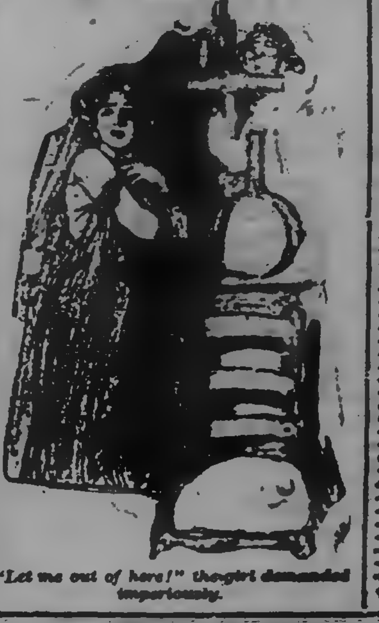
"You see, it's like this—that name of Merridy and that ring—well, the whole thing was so startling I—I went off my head. It came sudden, and I thought—it don't matter what I thought, but I'm sorry. I'll apologize, and I'll get you a whole lot of dresses if you like."

His first impulse had been to tell her everything, but his amazement had rendered him speechless, and now he was thankful for it. Care must be exercised. She must not learn too much, for if she suspected the truth she would go to her soldier lover at once, and no power on earth could hold her back. That would block the vengeance that he saw shaping in the dank recesses of his distorted brain.

First, and above all, he must get the girl away from Flambeau.

These last few moments had driven Necia's own worries from her mind, but he was bent on recalling them and so continued cautiously:

"You were saying that you thought you'd go away. I think that's a good plan, and you'd be wise to do it for more reasons than one. It will give you time to think it all over and know your own mind. I want to help you—I'm going to help you—because I've got an interest in you like you were mine." Again he betrayed that strange, mirthless amusement.



"Let me out of here!" the girl demanded imperiously.

"There is no place for me to go," said Necia blankly, "except the mission, and I have no way of getting there."

"Don't you worry. I'll furnish the means, and you'd better go tonight"—she flinched—"yes, tonight. There's no use prolonging your agony. I'll get a boat ready and send a trusty man with you. The current is swift, and if he rows well you can make it by tomorrow evening. That's only one night out, and I'll put some blankets aboard so you can wrap up and have a sleep."

"I must go back and get some clothes," she said, at which he would have demurred had he not seen that she could not travel in her present condition.

"Very well, but don't let anybody see you."

"Of course not."

"It's getting late, and your folks will be abed." He looked at his watch. "Midnight! Be here in an hour."

The light of sacrifice was in Necia's eyes, and her cheeks were blanched with the pallor of a great resolution.

"I'll be here in an hour," she said simply.

BEFORE TREATMENT AFTER TREATMENT

He was surprised at how the sores healed. "I took your NEW METHOD TREATMENT for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, pains of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the NEW METHOD TREATMENT for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish." W. MANUAL TRAINING IN SCHOOLS IN PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

l should be realted and help towards rking out some definite plan.

MANUAL TRAINING

When the boy or girl enters the rth grade the character of the rk changes somewhat, and rooms ecially equipped with tools, benches, king tables, stoves, etc., are used stead of the ordinary class rooms. these cases where, for various reans special rooms cannot be provided r the higher grades, other forms handwork can easily be provided in ntinuation of that done in the lower ades.

The elementary work is known unr various names—"hand work," nstructive work," "hand and eye aining," "various occupations," and at done in special rooms, generally ferred to as "manual training, ough there is really no warrant for e distinguishing the work in the fferent grades. It is all manual aining and the one term includes all anches of handwork in both public d high schools.

In the centres referred to the work proceeding generally in a very tisfactory manner. Full grants ve been earned in every case except , and the work is improving both character and variety. More attenn is being paid to the appearance the rooms, and some of them cant be excelled anywhere in the rld. Particularly is this the case the city of Ottawa, where, with e hearty co-operation of the Superendent of Buildings, the Public hool Inspector, and the Supervisor Manual Training, rooms have been ranged which are not only a credit the city itself, but serve as model r other authorities anxious to ind work of this character.

As has been said, the work is growg in popularity, and we have only o instances in the Province of the bject ever being dropped after once ing installed. In the one case this s due to the inability to secure a operly qualified teacher, and in the her to peculiar conditions of local ation.

All over the world the movement is aking gratifying progress. All thers, educationists and public men e everywhere agitating for its inoduction and extension. Long ago, uskin wrote "Why don't the bishops mmish their clergy to see to it at side by side with the parish urch and parish mission room there all be a parish workshop, where e blacksmith and the village carnter shall of a winter evening teach l the children who will be diligent d learn, the nature of iron and od, and the use of their eyes and nds."

The following extracts are taken om an article entitled "A Plea for e Education of the Hand," appearg in the "Philistine":

"It is a melancholy but admitted ct that the world is full of useless ople. Most of these are Micawbers aiting for something to turn up. It can easily be shown that the large number of persons who are seeking not for a certain something to do, but for anything to do, are out of employment, because of their inability (due to want of training) to express themselves, not orally, but manually; that all persons are capable of being trained to express themselves orally and manually; that they may, among the vast undeveloped resources of this big world, find plenty to do—plenty that will be not only useful, but that is actually waiting to be done.

"The human mind is capable of two things or acts—understanding and expressing—receiving ideas and of giving ideas. An idea simply received into the mind or simply created there, and not expressed, is of no value to any one except the person receiving or thinking it. Those ideas only have been of value to the human race that have found lingual or manual expression. It is evident that, without expression, we should have no great literary works, no great works of architecture, sculpture, music, or painting. Thus art had never been born, and we should live with men all around us as much alone as was Robinson Crusoe on his island.

"The mind has six ways of understanding or of receiving impressions: through the five senses of seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling and feeling, and the sense of temperature. All we know, or think, or feel, must necessarily come through these channels. They are Creations ways of placing us in contact with the material world around us. Without them, we should be worse than blind, deaf and dumb. We should have no knowledge whatever, not only of the world around us, but of the fact that there is one.

"Thus we are wisely placed, by means of these so-called senses, in connection with the material world around us. They are the adjustments between mind and matter; the railways of supply, leading from the world into the union depot of the mind. Through them, we understand—we receive impressions.

"But Nature has not thus gifted us in the matter of expression. She has given us but two channels of expression—the tongue and the hand. Except some emotions, such as of anger and of sorrow, that may be expressed by means of the countenance, we can put out or express what the senses bring by the tongue and the hand only. Unfortunately, civilization has undertrained the latter and overtrained the former as every day bears witness.

"The forms of expression by these two channels are six in number, ranging in order from highest to lowest as follows:

1. Mechanic Arts.
2. Sculpture.
3. Painting.
4. Architecture.
5. Music.
6. Language.

"In these different forms of expression the blacksmith expresses himself with his hammer and anvil, the carpenter with his saw, plane and chisel, the sculptor with his mallet and chisel, the painter with his brush and paints, the architect with his draughting tools, the musician with his voice or instrument, and the speaker, writer or singer with voice or pen.

"Now, it will be noticed that, of the six forms of expression mentioned only the fifth and sixth, music and language, can be expressed by means of the tongue, while all the others and these two also in part, can be expressed with the hand; so that it seems manual training, or the training of expression by the hand, is of vastly more importance than that of the tongue. It will be seen that a deaf and dumb man, who has been trained to the highest manual expression, would, despite his want of one of the two channels of expression be, to the world, a much more valuable man than another man, gifted with both channels of expression but trained in lingual expression only. For the deaf and dumb man could express himself to the world in the forms that are most useful, while the lingually trained man could usefully express himself in two only of the six forms, and partially only in these; for, he would be excluded from instrumental music and from writing or printing language. The deaf and dumb would be a creature of the highest possible civilization—living in a palace decorated with sculpture and painting—while the other would be only a vaporing creature living in caves, and subsisting on what Nature furnished him. Thus, it seems, we have somewhat overrated lingual training, and underrated manual training, doubtless because we have been accustomed to circumscribe the meaning of the word 'manual training.' And so it seems that we should reconstruct our idea of manual training and give it a proper place in our school curricula; for it must be evident that the great majority of our ideas find expression manually and not lingually the tongue being able to give expression to those ideas that are immaterial only, while the hand may give expression to these, and must give expression to all other forms of thought for of course the hand and not the tongue must express our thoughts in matter, and in those things that exist after we are gone.

"So there seems to be a necessity of manual training in all the word implies, for thoughts or ideas are worthless to the world unless they are expressed in some way or other. Mute inglorious Miltons may be a matter of poetic pity but they are not pleasant to have around; we generally class them as dyspeptics. I would define manual training as;—The cultivation of the hand, so that it may be able to express the ideas of the mind; to serve as an adjustment between mind and matter; to be the complement of the mind in man's struggle for the control of his environment."

The new Manual Training building in connection with Woodstock Collegiate Institute is now completed and the equipment being placed in position. The departments it will contain are working, wood turning, forge shop and machine shop. It is interesting to note that the educational authority of this city has seen the wisdom of following the example set by Stratford and Berlin in making an advance on the woodwork which is more generally taken. It is highly desirable that metal working be introduced into more of our High Schools. When a boy has spent two years in the Public School and one year in the High School at woodwork the next year can be most profitably spent in some form of metal working and the form of work adopted can be very largely suited to the money available for equipment. It may take the attractive form of sheet copper work, which is being continued from last year, in the Ottawa Public Schools. This is a branch which needs very little equipment and can be carried on in the ordinary manual training room.

The introduction of metal work has probably been retarded owing to the general idea that a large expenditure is necessary on equipment and judging by the practice of typical Manual Training High Schools in the United States the idea is quite warranted but we cannot resist the impression that much of this equipment is unnecessary and more suited to the engineering department of a modern university than to a Manual Training High School.

WHY ECZEMA PATIENTS SUFFER

No Wonder They Despair---But Cure Has Now Been Found

It is a strange thing about eczema. After wasting money on nostrums dosing the stomach or smearing on greasy salves for years many a skin sufferer gives up in despair. He says: "What is the use, some may be cured, but my case is hopeless."

But a trial of the simplest remedy—just a little oil of wintergreen properly compounded—as in D.D.D. Prescription—will wash away that itch. In fact it will take away the itch immediately the instant D.D.D. is applied.

Read this letter from Mrs. G. U. Hutton, of Renfrew, Ont.:—

Jan 15, 1909

"Since I was a child nine years old—and I am today thirty years old—I have suffered with Eczema in my hands. I have spent money on all kinds of medicines and ointments but I find nothing equal to DDD. I have used five bottles and today my hands are perfectly healed. I shall never be without it in my house and will always recommend it to my many friends and neighbors who suffer from this awful torture, Eczema."

Now if there is anyone in your town suffering with eczema, ringworm, tetter, psoriasis or poison ivy tell this sufferer not to sit back and say "I have tried everything, there is no cure for me." Tell him to write for free sample bottle of DDD Prescription to the DDD. Laboratory, Department P.R., 23 Jordan street, Toronto.

New Coal Deposit.

Rev. M. A. McPherson of Little Bras d'Or, who for some time past has had a gang of men prospecting for coal at Leitche's Creek, near Sydney, N.S., has been rewarded by a find of about an 8-foot seam of anthracite coal of very finest quality. There is every indication of unlimited quantity.

The prospecting was done on the farm of James Benton, two miles from Leitche's Creek and the cost of running a line of railroad to deep water for shipping purposes will be slight.

GOLDEN NEEDLES.

They Were Used When Gallants In France Did Fancy Work.

During the old regime in France, about which so much glamour remains to us, the very men who were living and making the history of the empire of Louis passed their leisure time in a way that seems to us of to-day utterly ridiculous. In all the fancy work on which ladies employed themselves the men seem to have taken part.

Poinsinet in one of his comedies represents a young marquis entering a room where two fair damsels are embroidering. One is working a piece of dress trimming, the other a Marly flounce. The beau examines the embroidery with the eye of a connoisseur, points out here and there the specially good touches and is too polite to notice any defects. He takes a little gold tube out of the pocket of his richly decorated waistcoat and selects a dainty gold needle. He goes to the frame at which Cidalise is working and finishes the flower which she had begun. From her he moves to the sofa and, seizing one end of the flounce, assists Ismene, to whom he pays special attention, to complete her task.

At this time it was the custom of the ladies invariably to carry their workbags with them to the evening receptions, in which they had not only their embroidery materials, but the last novel, the popular songs, their patch boxes and rouge pots. Gentlemen also carried deftly embroidered little bags into company, which held "a whole arsenal of cutlery and fancy articles, such as boxes of different shapes filled with lozenges, bonbons, snuff and scent."

At another period the fashion of the day was to cut out drawings from books and pamphlets and to paste them on screens, lamp shades, boxes and vases. The skill in this was to so arrange the drawings or parts of different drawings as to produce a curious or amusing effect. Then there came a season when all the rage was for charades and riddles, which gave a peculiarly good opportunity to exercise the light and rapid wit so conspicuous in the French. Every evening the drawing rooms were converted into impromptu charades. Some lady would suggest a word or phrase, and forthwith it would be converted into the subject of a sprightly little play. Many of the word games now current with us had their origin in the necessity the French salons were under in the last century to divert themselves. In some of the salons the fashion of keeping a daily chronicle of news, which was too often a mere chronicle of scandal, was adopted. Mme. Doublet de Persan issued bulletins which she called "nouvelles a la main." In her apartments two registers were kept, one of the authentic news received here and there by her guests, the other of floating rumors and on dits, and from these the budget of her chronicle was made up and circulated throughout France.

It Couldn't Be Done.

An individual with considerably more lung power than was agreeable to his hearers was hawking fish one morning in a northern town.

"Fine fresh herrin'! Fower a penny!" he roared in a fashion that made the windows rattle.

A woman approached the barrow and eyed the fish with a certain amount of suspicion, which, considering the circumstances, was not unnautal.

"Are they fresh?" she demanded, with a suspicious sniff.

"They're fower a penny, mum," was the guarded reply.

"Yes," responded the other, with a touch of sarcasm. "I think I 'eard yer say so. But are they fresh?"

"For aught I know, mum, they is."

"When wor they cotched?"

This was too much, and, adopting the sarcastic style of his questioner, the hawker replied:

"Can't say for sartain, mum. I applied for the birth an' death stificate of every fish on the barrer, but at fower a penny it simply couldn't be done!"

"'Ere y' are! Fower a penny, herrin'."—London Answers.

He Was Very Dull.

He was a very shy young gentleman, and, although Ermyntrude had presented him with innumerable opportunities for declaring his love in practical fashion, he could never summon up sufficient courage to take advantage of them.

They were sitting as usual one evening—she on the sofa, he on a chair—with the usual half hour intervals in between remarks, when the climax was reached.

"Isn't it funny," she said, "that the length of a man's arm is the same as the circumference of a lady's waist?"

"Is that so?" said he, mildly interested. "What do you say if we get a piece of string and see if it's right?"

Unemployables Not Wanted.

Lord Northcote, in dealing with immigration, at a political meeting recently in England, said: "As to immigration, there is no desire to keep any man out of the colonies who is able and prepared to maintain himself, but Canada does not desire to have an army of unemployables."

This is the right view of the situation. It must be apparent to the most simple-minded that Canada is not at present a favorable field for the artisan. Canada is a farming country and is destined to be more so year by year. To develop the country it is the agriculturist that should be selected and urged to come to Canada.—Telegram, Winnipeg.

An Apprentice.

"Father, what does 'apprenticing' mean?" asked a boy in quest of information.

Father—"It means the binding of one to another by agreement, and that one person so bound has to teach the other all he can of his trade or profession, while the other has to watch and learn how things are done and to make himself useful in every way."

Freddie—"Then I suppose you're apprenticed to mother, aren't you, dad?" And the old man rushed off to catch a train without saying a word.—London Scraps.

Her Own Work.

"Your husband," said Gaddie, "appears to be a man of great self control."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Peckham, "he is."

"I suppose," Gaddie went on, "he inherited that quality from his father, the judge?"

"No," she replied significantly, "it's a virtue he has acquired since his marriage."

THEATRICAL OFFERINGS OF LOCAL SEASON REVIEWED

Several New Plays With Players of Destinction—Musical Comedy Appealed to Popular Taste—The Stage Favorites With Peterborough Theatregoers.

The past theatrical season, or it might be called the present one, for it is not over yet, has been a noteworthy one locally in many respects. It has marked the introduction of many first-class companies, and has presented some talented and popular stage favorites to Peterborough playgoers. These were principally in the realm of comedy or light opera, although in "Divorce" particularly some artists of more serious aims were seen by an interested audience. Included in the caste of this notable organization were Marion Terry, Ida Conquest, Edward Glendinning and Edward Serrano. There were probably more prominent dramatic lights of note in this company than in any that visited the Grand since its opening.

But musical comedies and lighter plays have had a season of great popularity in all the Canadian and American cities this year, and Peterborough has afforded no exception to the general rule in this respect. Some of the most successful musical productions have been seen at the local theatre this season, and have been greeted with audiences that ought to even please the mercenarily ambitious advance man.

The following list will probably include the most appreciated stars of the musical comedy world that have favored Peterborough this season:—Frances Gordon, Agnes Cain Brown, Lulu Glaser, Charley Grapewin, Scott Welsh, Knox, Wilson and Sam Collins. There have also been an exceptionally large number of amateur shows which have appealed for public patronage. Some of them have been really creditable, when it is considered that local players of, in many instances, no experience, have taken part.

The season opened with Charley Grapewin in "The Awakening of Mr Pipp" and a capacity house told the droll Charley, that he was appreciated in Peterborough as well as in other places he plays. The next engagement other than those of the cheaper grade shows was "Three Little Maids" with Douglas Patterson, and Birdie Luttrell taking a large share of the honors. The company played a return engagement a little later on in October. The other principal attractions for October, were "Babes in Toyland" with Eddie Redway, of the original, "Gingerbread Man" in the chief comedy part John Griffiths in Othello, and Our New Minister, an offering that was only greeted with a slim house but which was one of the best of the entire season. In November "The Wolf" and "Divorce" met with great approval, and the famous Sheffield Choir honored this city with a visit to the delight of the musically inclined and the average patron as well.

In Christmas week one of the best liked attractions of the season "Wildfire," held the boards. The pretty Lillian Russell was seen here for the first in this bright racing comedy. "The Cowboy Girl" was a presentation of merit for a popular priced show. The most fascinating opera of the season was "San Toy," Sidney Jones" tuneful creation, and Agnes Cain Brown played the name part in a most pleasing way.

Eugene Walters' drama of gripping interest. "Pair In Full," thoroughly satisfied a large audience that it was one of the most appealing dramas of contemporary American life. Hilda Spong after "Pair In Full" in "A Man and His Mate" and opinion was somewhat divided as to the worth of the play.

In February Katherine Osterman visited Petererborough in her latest vehicle "The Night of the Play," Daniel Ryan and a capable company made an excellent impression in a repertoire of successful plays including the much discussed and widely denounced Salome.

The Imperial Opera Company also played a return booking in "Florodora" but this did not make the popular hit that "San Toy" did which was sung by the same organisation.

The Toronto Symphony Orchestra, a most excellent organization of able musicians, gave a concert to the usual "small but appreciative" audience of unmusical Peterborough.

Probably the most talked of musical show of the year was "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," in which Frances Gordon scored an individual triumph as Mary and Scott Welsh, captivated the audience as Kid Burns. The Royal Italian Opera Company was warmly welcomed by lovers of grand opera and sang "Il Trovatore" and "Carmen" at a return engagement. On both occasions they scored a decided success and their local appearance will be remembered as among the finest superior class attractions of the year.

The much talked of Lulu Glaser made her initial appearance in Peterborough in "Mlle Mischief" and on ac-

GOWGANDA THE FIELD THAT IS ALLURING THE PROSPECTOR

The Newest and Most Promising Mining Grounds of Northern Ontario—An Interesting Picture by Peterborough Boy of the Camp and Mining Conditions.

Peterborough, April 24.—As requested by the Review, I am giving you an account of my experience in Gowganda District during the past winter. With many others I went up there in December last, and came out about the middle of this month, and had my share of the excitement and the hardships of this new country. This district, as a whole, is very rocky, with high ridges or ranges of rounded hills, many lakes, rivers, and streams, and is covered with a thick growth of small timber, mostly jack pine, spruce and tamarack.

The Montreal River, with its numerous expansions and tributaries—most of which are navigable—is the great highway for the summer months, while during the winter a sleigh road from Charlton, 65 miles west, and another from Sellwood, 75 miles south, are the only roadways into the country. Fire has swept over portions of this country, leaving blackened and charred desolation behind it, but just about Gowganda the district has fortunately thus far escaped its ravages.

Gowganda or (Big Fish) Lake, is about seven miles long and in its widest parts perhaps three miles in width. On its northwestern shore the Provincial Government has staked out the town site of the future city of Gowganda. Just fancy a town springing up in the wilderness—65 miles from the nearest railroad and farther still from a decent summer road—and picture it if you can being staked out and built on in the winter months with the thermometer below zero from 40 to 55 degrees—moving up and down, mostly down—and yet having 6,000 or 7,000 people crowding into the district to be fed and sheltered, many of them living in single walled tents with a little collapsible stove, 12 by 18 inches, and you will have a slight idea of some of the hardships of the past winter. What did we eat? Our staples were beans, bacon, Quaker Oats and rice; not much variety but still substantial and enough of it. The quiet onlooker naturally would ask: "Why all this haste to get into this new country?" One word answers it, "Silver."

Silver is apparently everywhere on the surface. West of Gowganda Lake there is a huge Diabase ridge, perhaps three times the height of Armour's Hill and about one mile in width and perhaps nine in length. This ridge is very rich in native silver showings, and while there has been no attempt on any of the claims at complete prospecting, yet wonderful finds have been made in this ridge and there are in this district already over fifty claims that show rich ore and native silver. Veins have been stripped for three hundred feet which have shown silver sticking out all along the surface. The silver here seems to be oozing out of the veins and the wall rock on either side is heavily loaded with silver.

The Bartlett mine, which I visited shortly before I came out, is thus far the best equipped and largest, and to all appearances the richest so far discovered in this district. Just across the arm of Hanging Stone Lake, and almost south of the Bartlett mines, some Peterborough gentlemen have secured four or five excellent claims that will doubtless make them big money.

The wonder to me is that more of our Peterborough people are not getting in here, as it is apparently bound to be a safe field for the investment of capital and one that has already turned out several wealthy capitalists. The men who have made the big finds in Gowganda are not trained and tried prospectors or engineers, but as this district shows its silver on the surface the big things have so far been found in most instances by men who knew very little of mining or prospecting. Only in a few places has the surface soil from four to six inches deep been removed. I am firmly of the opinion that when the claims come to be cleared and stripped, a wonderful showing will be developed. Ten clerks and office boys down at Haileybury put in $10 each and sent up a man last fall into the Gowganda. Their prospector found a long, narrow strip known as the Armstrong fraction, which brought them $10,000 cash. This claim is on this famous ridge west of Gowganda Lake and is now owned, I believe, by Montreal people. I understand that the Provincial Government will spend $50,000 on a summer road from Charlton to Gowganda, and the T. and N. O. Railway have scattered their ties along the winter road preparatory to building, in this year. While a canoe route will soon be established into this country it is expected that gasoline and steam launches will be in evidence on the Montreal River early this summer.

The country is well worth seeing, and I hope many of our Peterborough people will come in and get a portion of it before our neighbourly American cousins get everything in sight.

FRANK O'CONNOR.

A MARVELLOUS NEW MACHINE

Will Set Type Faster Than Any Other Made — Works on New Principle

The Technical World Magazine of Chicago for May contains a descriptive article relating to the capabilities of a wonderful new machine for putting together type.

To build a type-setting machine that would use ready-made type and thus do away with the use of melted metal and power, has been the ambition of quite a number of inventors for some time past. Many difficulties, however, have beset their path to success, but A G Baker, the inventor of a new type-setting machine, seems to have overcome the many difficulties and now has on exhibition a machine which not only operates without power or fire, but will set foundry made type faster than any other machine of its kind thus far produced. The machine is a very compact one measuring only sixteen inches long, sixteen inches wide and twenty-eight inches high, yet it has a capacity of ten lines to a minute of ordinary one column length to six lines a minute of the fastest machines now in use. Technically speaking, it will set 10,000 ems an hour, as against older machines 6,000 to 7,000. Its weight is only 125 pounds.

The upright portion of the machine called the magazine, consists of ninety channels, containing the different letters of the alphabet, punctuation marks and other characters used in printing. Each channel is just wide enough to contain the character allotted to it without allowing it any more room than is necessary to slide up and down easily. The channels are entirely independent of each other so that any one of them can be removed from the machine instantly without disturbing the others.

THE THIRD MURDER IN THREE WEEKS

Scottish Carpenter Named Wm. Gordon is Found Propped Up Against a Fence on Jarvis St. Unconscious From Fractured Skull.

Toronto, April 26.—Toronto has had three murders in three weeks, the third occurring Saturday afternoon within 200 feet of where James Dillon was found lying in Jarvis street, beaten to death.

Wm. Gordon, a Scottish carpenter, 50 years of age, was found sitting propped up against a fence at the corner of Duchess and George streets, at 5.15 Saturday afternoon, by P. C. Grant. Taking him for a "drunk," the policeman called the patrol wagon; but when it arrived it was plain the man was in a serious state of unconsciousness, so he was driven to St. Michael's Hospital, where it was found necessary to operate on his skull. At 9.15 he died.

Gordon had been seen by several persons in the vicinity where he was found, and a police enquiry revealed that he had been punched in the mouth, his head forcibly striking the pavement. He had been dragged by two companions across the street, and propped against the fence.

From a description of the man who delivered the blow, Acting Detective Harry Armstrong of No. 1 division arrested Gilbert Oliver, 29 years old, at 11.30 p.m., on West Queen street, opposite Chestnut, where he had surmised the man might be found hanging around.

At first Oliver denied any knowledge of the crime; but later, when identified by eye-witnesses, admitted having had an altercation with Gordon, claiming that the victim had "butted in" and followed himself and companion into the Black Horse Hotel and on to the street, leading up to a row.

The dead man had been boarding at the Workingman's Home, 59 Frederick street, for the past two weeks and was employed by a local contracting firm. His employers and acquaintances all speak well of him. He was not known as a drinking man.

Oliver was not noticeably intoxicated when arrested, but he has a criminal record, having gotten out of the Central Prison July 9 last year after serving a term for assault. He has been living at 229 Elm street, corner of University avenue, over a Chinaman's shop.

The operation disclosed a fracture of Gordon's skull and severe injuries to the brain in the right vault of the head.

A charge of murder confronts Oliver, though this will likely be shaded to manslaughter by the magistrate.

CONSTITUTIONAL FORCES VICTORS IN GREAT BATTLE

After a Terrific Battle in the Capital in Which a Thousand Are Killed and Many More Wounded Abdul Hamid's Troops Are Routed and He is Forced to Surrender --Several Foreigners are Hurt.

Constantinople, April 26.—Sultan Abdul Hamid is practically a prisoner in the hands of the constitutionalists, who took the capital city after hours of fierce fighting in the streets and at the various barracks Saturday.

Fully 1,000 men were killed in the battle and of the 5,000 loyal soldiers not one remains—all are either dead, wounded, prisoners or in flight.

It was a desperate combat for hours, but the superior discipline of the young Turks forces prevailed and by 1 o'clock in the afternoon the battle which began at daybreak was over and the constitutionalists were supreme.

Abdul Hamid yielded himself to the constitutionalists at 4 o'clock, but whether his surrender was with or without conditions was not announced.

Several foreigners were wounded. Among them is Frederick Moore of The New York Sun, who was shot in the neck. Another American correspondent, named Booth, was slightly wounded in the head.

Field guns, heavy artillery and machine guns were used by both sides and at some of the local barracks, notably Tasch Kischia, the Constantinople troops put up a resolute defence. No mercy was shown to the troops who led in the uprising of April 14.

The men in the Tasch Kischia barracks surrendered at 1 o'clock, and with this event the entire capital passed into possession of the constitutionalists.

The artillerists in the Taxim barracks were guilty of gross treachery. They hoisted the white flag and thereby enticed the Saloniki infantrymen to close range. As the Saloniki men were approaching the barracks across an open piece of ground to receive the surrender the force within opened on them with a heavy shell fire and compelled them to retreat. The Saloniki artillery was then brought up and shelled the barracks, inflicting heavy damage. The barracks twenty minutes later were rushed by the invading troops, and there was hand-to-hand fighting in the barracks and the cemetery behind the structure.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the attack upon the city was the great number of people of all nationalities, including many European women, who thronged the streets immediately outside of the zone of fire.

Everybody showed that confidence had been inspired by the discipline, valor and friendly courtesy of the invading troops, particularly the gendarmes of Saloniki.

At noon the battle ceased, and precautionary measures were immediately taken by those upon whom victory had rested to insure the safety of the residents. General satisfaction seemed to be felt at the swift change from uncertainty to constitutional order.

The number of casualties probably never will be known, but it is estimated far into the thousands. Around the Taxim Barracks alone it is believed thousands fell. The private houses within the line of fire suffered greatly.

In the pockets of some of the dead were found large sums of money in gold, which, it is assumed, was part of the price of their loyalty.

Should the Sultan remain in office, it will merely be in a nominal way. His allowance will be greatly restricted, and he will have no means for further agitation should his mind turn again in this direction.

Mehemmed Reschad Installed.

London, April 26.—The Daily Telegraph's Vienna correspondent sends the report that the Sultan was taken out of the palace by force at a late hour last night, and that Mehemmed Reschad Effendi was installed in his place.

A VERY FINE PROGRAMME FOR BENEFIT CONCERT

A splendid array of local talent will contribute at to-night's benefit concert in aid of the Children's Aid Society. The worth of the programme may be judged by the fact that the following leading local artists will take: Misses Davies, Reesor, Choate, McGraw, Hallaham; Mr. D. Moore, reader; W. McIlbrey, baritone; Mr. Lee, tenor, and Mr. Crane's quartette. The Conservatory orchestra will also assist.

On account of the excellence of the programme and the good cause in which the entertainment is being given, it is expected that a very large audience will be in attendance.

Tickets are on sale at Conservatory, Dominion Bank, Bank of Commerce, Royal Bank, Bank of Toronto, Nugent's drug store, C.P.R. ticket office, R. Fair & Co.

FELL ON A JOIST

Mr. Mark Spencely Was Painfully Injured on Wednesday.

Mr. Mark Spencely, who was seriously injured on Wednesday last, was able to be out Saturday for the first time. He was working on an old building which was being torn down when he fell twelve feet to the floor below. The boards had been removed and he alighted on the small of his back on one of the joists, and was painfully wrenched.

Dr. Amys attended to his injuries.

New Corps to Be Grey's Horse.

Galt, April 26.—The organization of the new cavalry regiment was advanced a stage Saturday when Col. Davis addressed a meeting of interested persons. The regiment covers the Counties of Oxford and Waterloo, with squadrons at Woodstock, Ingersoll and Preston. Only the last named remains to be filled.

The regiment goes to camp in June. By special permission of the Governor-General the regiment is to be called "Grey's Horse."

Railway Accident at Barnsdale.

Parry Sound, April 26.—The C.P.R. local from Sudbury to Toronto, which passes through here at 1.15 p.m. met with an accident Saturday at Barnsdale. The train, which consisted of half a dozen freight cars, with two locomotives, left the track, and some of the cars rolled down an embankment. No persons were injured beyond a shaking up.

LORD BERESFORD ROASTS NAVY

Committee Will Investigate Condition of the Fleets

London, April 26.—Prime Minister Asquith's announcement of his intention to make a private investigation of the present conditions in the navy is of far greater significance than appears upon the surface. Admiral Lord Charles Beresford on leaving command of the fleet laid before the Premier a great mass of evidence upon existing conditions and the present policy of the naval forces which no patriotic Government could ignore.

It is just as well for the peace of mind of England that these facts should not be made public. It can scarcely be doubted that when the pending enquiry is completed there will be radical changes made in the policy of the Admiralty. The questions involved do not deal in any way with the proposed new construction. They concern only the condition of the navy to-day as a fighting force.

Beresford maintains silence so far as the public is concerned in regard to naval questions, but as was surmised here a fortnight ago he has submitted his views in writing to Premier Asquith, who after holding the matter under consideration for twelve days, appointed a sub-committee to enquire into the facts. This committee consists of Mr. Asquith as president, Foreign Secretary Sir Edward Grey, Secretary for War Haldane and Lord Crewe. No naval officer is a member, as it is desired to have an absolutely unbiased tribunal. The terms of reference are clearly defined and very wide and sweeping.

WAS LEFT ON ROAD TO DIE

Orangeville, April 26.—A row occurred here on Saturday night which might have been attended with fatal results.

George McDonald, a thresher, son of John McDonald of Mono Township, got into a fight with William MacNamara, also of Mono Township on Broadway, in which McDonald got the worst of it. About midnight McDonald started for home, a distance of nine miles, on foot, and shortly afterwards MacNamara started after him with a buggy.

He overtook him near the Dufferin agricultural grounds and brutally assaulted him, breaking his left leg below the knee, and then made off into the night, leaving his victim in an unconscious state on the roadside.

Shortly afterwards Geo. Nicholson, who was also walking home, discovered McDonald, and hunting up a wagon, took him up town to the Grand Central Hotel and summoned Dr. Carson.

A warrant was issued for MacNamara; but he has not been arrested yet.

British Budget Thursday.

London, April 26.—Considerable as was the excitement a year ago prior to the introduction of the budget in the House of Commons, it is nothing to the existing tension in the city now that it has been announced that the budget proposals will be unfolded next Thursday.

That it will contain some surprises, and those of no very pleasant character, is considered a foregone conclusion. The speculation at Lloyd's becomes keener every day and the rates covering the various risks that are held to be involved daily grow higher and higher.

Crushed Under Building.

Orangeville, April 26.—Wm. Forsyth, a prosperous farmer residing near Camilla, about seven miles north of here, was killed on Saturday while working around the public school of Glencoe school section. He left home for the school, of which he was a trustee, about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, to repair some damage done by the wind two weeks ago. He had been trying to raise a small outbuilding with some fence rails, and in some manner the building fell, knocking him to the ground and killing him instantly.

Grant For Gymnasium.

Kingston, April 26.—The finance committee will grant the board of education $4,000 for a gymnasium for the collegiate. Early in the year the board asked for a grant, but the matter was held in abeyance. Then the Ontario Government Educational Department stepped in and withheld the annual grant until steps were taken to erect a gymnasium.

Held Boy on Hideous Charge.

Birmingham, Ala., April 26.—Ed. Snyder, 19 years old, was arrested here on the charge of inflicting what will probably prove fatal injuries upon his mother. Two weeks ago, it is said, the young man in anger threw a vessel of boiling water on his mother's back. Doctors say her injuries will probably prove fatal.

French Sailors Mutiny.

Ville, France, April 26.—Two hundred sailors of the French battleship Patrie mutinied on Saturday on account of the quality of the food served them. The food was improved, and yesterday the men went back to duty.

Will Reorganize Fire Department.

Kingston, April 26.—For the reorganization of the fire department, the fire committee will ask that the council advertise for a new chief, at a salary of $1,200 a year, and that a new engine will be secured.

Three Men Badly Burnt.

Haliburton, April 26.—Wm. Hancock, Geo. Hancock and Geo. West were blown up with blasting compound Saturday evening.

Wm. Hancock and West are in a very critical condition.

PRAISE FOR THE LEMIEUX ACT

Berlin, April 26.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Canada as a pioneer in the cause of peace, is the subject of a leading article in Soziale Praxis, a well-conducted "central organ of social politics." The article fully describes the Lemieux Act as an addition to sensible, carefully considered, well drawn up social reform laws by which the British colonies are distinguished, and concludes: "The Canadian Legislature has evidently achieved something great in passing the Lemieux court arbitration law, whose advantages are infinitely greater than its disadvantages, whose successes greatly preponderate over its failures. The happy solution Canada has found to the difficulties which are so often arising in regard to railways, coal mines, etc., might well serve as a model for legislators in many European countries."

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Three Chinese restaurants and a bakery were burned at Cobalt.

Four persons lost their lives in a fire in a hotel at Topeka, Kan.

A number of French school children have gone on strike because their teacher was too old.

The Ontario Government has purchased the yacht Navarch from Mr. Barge of Windsor, to do fishery patrol in the Bay of Quinte.

Hon. Ronald Ramsay, a brother of the Earl of Dalhousie, who spent some time in Canada, committed suicide by jumping from an Atlantic liner.

The Elmhurst Hotel at Liverpool, N.S., and the Canard Street Baptist Church, near Halifax, were burned. Fire also destroyed the Court House at Edmundston, N.B., with a lot of important public records and other documents.

GIRL MAY HAVE BEEN STOLEN

New York, April 26.—Adele Boas, the 15-year-old daughter of Arthur Boas, a millionaire thread manufacturer, is missing and detectives yesterday declare their belief that she has been kidnapped.

While out shopping with her mother Friday after school, the girl grew tired and was sent home. Though only eight blocks from her father's residence, she never reached there. She had only 10 cents in her purse.

Boas has a theory that she was run down and injured by an automobile and that persons in the car picked her up and took her to their home or to a private sanitarium.

COMMISSION FOR THE I.C.R.

Montreal, April 26.—The position of general manager of Government railways has been abolished by the new system which goes into effect on the first of May. An advance sheet of the circular, which is being sent out and signed by L. Jones, states that the board of management, is composed of M. J. Butler, chairman; David Pottinger, E. Tiffin and M. J. Brady, the latter leaving the city for Moncton Saturday afternoon. As commissioners they all appear to possess equal power and authority. Mr. Butler and Mr. Tiffin retain their positions of Deputy Minister and chief engineer of Government railways and general traffic manager respectively.

ICE JAM OVER AT NIAGARA

Huge Dynamite Charge and Heavy Gale Clear the Channel

Youngstown, N.Y., April 26.—A bustling northwest squall followed by an even more energetic southwest gale, cleared the Canadian channel at the mouth of the Niagara river yesterday afternoon, broadened the passage torn out by dynamite along the American shore of the stream and so viciously ripped away the longer end of the ice pack that it is now possible to cross the river in a boat by a straight course from the fort to Niagara-on-the-Lake.

The engineers did no work yesterday, and, judging by the rate at which the outbound currents are dragging monster mounds of ice from the main mass of the jam, there will be little need or opportunity for them to explode the ton of dynamite stored in the fort's magazine.

Miss Ruth Tuttle of Rochester, daughter of Charles Tuttle, the expert who has had direct charge of the blasts, pulled the lever which exploded the largest and last charge on Saturday, a ponderous pile of 2,150 pounds of dynamite. The explosion shook the shore for a mile, stones and shattered timber 700 feet skyward and let fall lumps of ice which dug furrows in the lawn in front of the life-saving station. The charge cracked off the ice by the quarter acre and sent deep splits flashing up and across the main mass of ice.

The relief work thus far has cost about $3,000. The six tons of dynamite, five exploded and one in the magazine of the fort, have cost $2,160.

IMPROVEMENTS AT PENITENTIARY

Kingston, April 26.—Extensive improvements and additional buildings are in contemplation at the penitentiary for the next couple of years, and the convicts will be busily employed. It is proposed to devote the entire building in the centre of the grounds to housing and caring for prisoners, and as a result the main building, now occupied by offices, deputy warden's residence, officers mess rooms, and women's ward, will be abandoned, and the buildings converted into a tier of cells, giving greater room to the inmates.

LIBEL SUITS ARE ENTERED

St. John's, Nfld., April 26.—Sir Edward Morris, the Premier, has brought suit for $50,000 against The St. John's Evening Telegram, the leading newspaper organ of Sir Robert Bond's party. The Premier alleges that The Telegram libelled Friday in commenting upon the case of Walter Baine Grieve, a prominent merchant, who was arrested a few days ago at the instance of Sir Edward, who charged Grieve wrote a letter accusing Morris of being in the pay of the Canadian Government for the purpose of furthering a plan to have Newfoundland annexed to Canada.

The campaign grows more bitter daily as election (May 8) approaches.

DEAD NUMBERED BY THOUSANDS

Beirut, April 26.—The situation in Asiatic Turkey is one of extreme gravity.

How many thousands have been massacred cannot even be estimated, because the disturbances have been so widespread that it is impossible to secure details of the happenings during the past ten days. The latest estimates of the number killed in the Villayet of Adana reaches approximately 25,000, and thousands have been done to death in the towns of other districts.

The state of siege which several of the places are undergoing has brought the inhabitants to the verge of starvation, and each day brings its tales of further atrocities.

Confirmation has been received of the burning of the Armenian Village of Kessab. All the men and many women and children have been slain. The American property at Kessab was destroyed. Miss Chambers, an American missionary, is safe.

A British warship has been ordered from Alexandretta to Suediah, where conditions have become worse. All the property of the Christians at Djebel Bereket has been destroyed. The total loss is unknown, but it will be enormous.

Convent Boiler Blows Up.

Montreal, April 26.—Starting a fire in a boiler in which there was but little water led to an explosion yesterday morning in the convent of the congregation of Notre Dame at Cote St. Paul, as a result of which the superioress, Sister Nom de Jesus, was probably fatally injured, and Sister Dubreuil and a little girl was hurt. All three were in the boiler room at the time.

Toll Collector Shot.

Montreal, April 26.—Michael Rigo, the Italian toll collector on the city side of the Victoria Bridge, was held up Saturday evening and shot in the head by a gang of Italian desperadoes. The wounded man will recover. No arrests have been made.

Detroit, April 26.—The committee appointed by the recent Canadian reciprocity conference here to carry the recommendations at the conference before Congress, will meet in Washington April 28.

Brockville liquor licenses have all been renewed.

KINRADES WILL NOT ATTEND INQUEST SAYS STAUNTON

Family Legal Adviser Declares That Mother and Sister Will Not Appear at To-night's Hearing and He is Believed to Have a Coup in Store.

Hamilton, April 26.—Though it cannot be learned from George S. Lynch-Staunton how he hopes to prevent Miss Florence Kinrade from being subpoenaed to attend the inquest into the death of her sister, he makes the statement in all confidence that she will not appear at the inquest again.

He is keeping the secret of how he expects to prevent this to himself, and intimates that he will spring a big surprise at Toronto on Monday, when the argument on the certiorari proceedings is gone on with.

Legal Battle Begins.

Toronto, April 26.—T. C. Robinette, K.C., on behalf of counsel for the Kinrade family, on Saturday appealed to Justice Teetzel at Osgoode Hall for a writ of certiorari, to set aside the bench warrant issued for the appearance of Florence Kinrade, at the inquest to-night. Should the writ be denied, application will at once be made for a writ of habeas corpus, to the same effect.

Mr. Robinette will argue that under the Ontario "Act Respecting Coroners" a coroner has no power other than to fine, and that he can only commit for contempt a witness who is actually in court before him. The English law and authorities, declares Mr. Robinette, are the same.

On the conclusion of Mr. Robinette's hearing, the scene shifted to the Attorney-General's Department, where it was early whispered that a motion had been made. The Deputy Attorney-General and Detective Miller held a long conference behind closed doors. Mr. Blackstock joined the conference over the telephone.

When interviewed later the Deputy Attorney-General declined to discuss the matter beyond stating that the case was unusual and without precedent. Detective Miller was equally taciturn.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Public Opinion Opposed.

Sydney, N.S., April 26.—There is a general feeling in the colliery districts to-day that there is no immediate danger of a strike.

The business men of Glace Bay are dead against the miners going out, and are doing everything possible to offset the rumors of trouble heard so frequently on the street. Members of the U.M.W. are indignant at the Dominion Coal Co. having the County Council appoint special constables in fear of future trouble.

Charged With Incendiarism.

Winnipeg, April 26.—Henry Watson, a young farmer of Winnipeg Beach, was arrested on Saturday on a charge of stealing a team of horses from a neighbor named Chambers, and to afterwards setting fire to his stable, causing the death of 17 head of cattle.

He confessed to stealing the horses but claimed the burning of the barn was due to accident, as he dropped the match while taking the horses out.

Ban on Whistling In Street.

Worcester, Mass., April 26.—The Worcester police, who recently have barred rolette wheels at church fairs, brandy drops and many other things generally deemed harmless and diverting, have issued an edict that no one shall whistle in the streets who has not a license from the license board. Several applications were made to the board for whistling licenses, but all were refused.

Theatre Proprietors Fined.

Ottawa, April 26.—The proprietors of the Russell Theatre were fined $30 and $2 on Saturday for showing a series of moving pictures of the Burns-Johnson fight without taking the proper precautions in regard to protection in the case of fire. The performances were continued at the theatre after the inspector had issued a warning.

Murderer's Victim Living.

Des Moines, Ia., April 26.—Claiming to represent the British consul at St. Louis in behalf of "Lord" Barrington, in the penitentiary for life for the murder of John McCann of St. Louis, Miss Lillian Gates of St. Louis created a sensation by appearing in the U. S. marshal's office on Saturday and identifying J. C. Maybray, alleged fake horse race promoter, as being McCann, the victim of Barrington.

It developed later that Miss Gates was a friend of Barrington, and that she had made the same claim of other men.

Ice Blockade at Whitefish Bay.

Detroit, April 26.—A News-Tribune special from Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., says:

With the ice blockade in Whitefish Bay completely blocked between here and Lake Superior, 59 vessels are lying at the Soo waiting for the ice blockade to be broken. Of these 13 boats arrived from the south since Saturday. It is estimated that it will take two days of a hot sun of a very high southerly wind to loosen the icefield in Whitefish Bay.

Judge Finkle Injured.

Niagara Falls, April 26.—Boarding a G.T.R. train when in motion, Judge Finkle of Woodstock slipped and was dragged under the wheels of the train, sustaining such injuries to his right foot that amputation of four toes and first joint of big toe was necessary. The judge was going away via the Grand Trunk after a visit here.

Earthquake Was Fatal.

Lisbon, April 26.—The effect of the earthquake shock experienced Friday night in Portugal was particularly severe along the Tague between Santarem and Lisbon. Many houses in this district were thrown down and the church at Salvador was almost completely demolished. At Alhambra a dozen people were killed.

GAVE ADDRESS ON ZULULAND AT SALVATION ARMY BARRACKS

Major Cameron of Toronto conducted the Saturday night and Sunday services at the Salvation Army hall. On Saturday night she gave an address on Zululand where she has been engaged in missionary work.

Major Cameron is a most entertaining and instructive speaker and her address proved of great value and interest. It was particularly of interest on account of her having actually visited the home of this celebrated savage race and of her knowing from actual experience of the various matters she discussed.

WEST PETERBORO' ELECTION PROTEST

Justice McMahon and Justice Magee have been appointed to try the West Peterborough protest. In order to prevent the running of the statute an application will be made by the counsel for the petitioner as required by statute, to extend the time from May 21, when the six months during which a protest must otherwise be tried, is up. The dates for examination and trial will not be set as yet, the respondent, Mr. Stratton, having fyled an affidavit, declining to waive his right to be free from interference while in attendance upon his Parliamentary duties. The applications for dates, however, will be made immediately upon the close of the session, and it is to permit of this that the extension of time that may possibly be required, is being applied for. In other respects the proceedings go on meanwhile as in an ordinary action.

REPORTED THAT COCK FIGHT WAS PULLED OFF

It is reported that a cock fight was pulled off yesterday just outside the confines of the city. Only two birds were engaged in the bettle, which was for a small wager, it is said. The spectators were limited in number.

INQUEST BLOCKED

Kinrade's Solicitor Will Find Out Whether Coroner's Warrant is Valid.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, April 26—Mr George Lynch Staunton, KC, counsel for the Kinrades, has blocked the inquest for two days at the least. This morning at Osgoode Hall he moved for writ of certiorari to have the warrant issued by Coroner Anderson for Florence Kinrade's arrest brought before the Court to have a decision handed down as to its validity. Mr Justice Teetzell did not think he had jurisdiction to deal with the motion and so referred it to the divisional court where it will come up on Wednesday. The result of the application means that the warrant cannot be served, but must be fyled to the court, where it will remain until the matter is finally disposed of Wednesday. The Court will not go on with the inquest until it is decided whether or not Florence Kinrade can be again called as a witness.

Palmerston is to have an old home week in August.

THE FARMER AND THE TARIFF

When the Liberals were out of office they nailed their banner to the mast emblazoned with this strange device: "Free Trade"—except in biscuits. Who will ever forget the uncontrollable laughter of the House when a "free trade" tariff was brought before it with the highest possible duty in it in favor of the Minister of Customs' own constituency, where the making of biscuits is a staple industry. The rate of tariff taxation, it will be remembered, under this congress of incongruities known as a free trade tariff, increased from $5.46 per head in 1896 to $11.60 per head in 1898, two years afterwards. But one of the most striking incongruities of the present tariff is that dealing with products of the farm. Take horses. Our tariff puts a duty of 25 per cent. on horses worth $150 and $12.50 on horses below $50—that is costs. The U. S. tariff, under such a condition, would exact a duty of $120.00 on a batch consisting of four animals worth $100, $75, $50 and $30 that amount would be collected from the exporter. The price of horses in the U. S. is just so much and they will fetch no more, and if to get into that market requires a sacrifice of $120 then that sacrifice will have to be made.

But what about the American? He would, under similar circumstances, pay $60.75 coming into Canada. So that farmers on either side of the border who wish to sell across the border, are under entirely different conditions, and since both have to pay the duty and since, if there was no duty, the market duty must necessarily be the same, the sole benefit of our tariff consists in the raising of a revenue in such a way, however, as to discriminate against the Canadian farmer and in favour of the American. On no plea can this be considered sensible, let alone wise. If to lower tariffs is good why is not a tariff that produces surpluses lowered to the vanishing point of that surplus or near it? Because the money is wanted to pay interest with on loans to the G. T. P., etc., but never to the Ontario farmer, who pays the piper and listens to platform platitudes in return.

SCHOOL TEACHERS' SALARIES

In the course of time, and when the opportunity offers it is confidently hoped that boards of school trustees will raise the salaries of their teachers. Salaries are at present fully 50 per cent. lower than they ought to be. Just consider the responsibility resting upon teachers. If they are useless their pupils are almost sure to be the same, and all through life. Yet learning and an aptitude for teaching are treated as if they were nuisances instead of blessings. Of course all things even up in the course of time, according to the inexorable law, but that is after the damage is done. A really good teacher is worth his weight (if it be heavy enough) in gold. At the same time the disposition to be educated off the farm altogether should be corrected, for with all modern conveniences on the farm and every possible means of comfort at hand, there ought to be no doubt of the desirability of staying on the farm, notwithstanding any assumed loneliness or a craving for a commercial or professional career. As Prof. Kyle says, all this is largely a matter of education, for no educated person would leave the freshness and beauty of the country for the glamour of the city's streets.

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN

America figures somewhat as a will o' the wisp to one of our imported teachers. "One must always bear in mind while in America" says Miss Amy R. Bernardy "that whatever has been done, is dead, that which is being done is dying, and that only that which is yet to do is alive, and that in a moment, the future is a thing of the past." Miss Bernardy teaches Italian at Smith College, and is also an indefatigable contributor to foreign reviews. Like her colleague of Harvard, Professor Munsterburg she stands as interpreter of things American to the country that sent her forth. In the Nuova Antologia, Rome, she takes a hand at explaining to her Italian fellow countrymen the American college curriculum, and naturally finds startling contrasts. Whereas in Italy people philosophise and theorise, in America, she says:

"All learning is useless if it remain in the domain of abstract theory. The American is also convinced that a man who acquires all his knowledge either entirely through books or entirely through books or entirely runs the risk of becoming one sided. The individual who unites theory with practice is the one who wins the bitter competition of American life.

"Therefore must students go to college not only to acquire a general culture, but also to obtain the social polish and independence which they would not receive at home. This tendency toward social connections is particularly strong in women's colleges."

Miss Bernardy also describes the various phases of college life in America; football and other games, hazing, newspapers, teas, slang, yells, etc., details, no doubt, of interest to the foreigner but well known to Americans. Such revelations as the following show us what a favor it is that foreigners are willing to come to this country and instruct us:

"College is scarcely comparable to our university; it is rather a sort of academy. As a matter of fact, the work is equivalent to that done in our licei —high schools— and very much inferior to that of our university. Diplomas are not conferred in the same way as ours; law and medicine do not belong, as in Italy, to the university proper. Owing to the lack of archives and manuscripts, historical studies are scarcely attempted, while to speak of palegraphy is worse than to speak of ballistics. And then Americans are not made for history; they lack the faculty of individual and critical research. The American seeks a practical combination of well ascertained facts — he does not get into extensive research. Because— and in this consists the essential difference between the Anglo-Saxon college and the Latin university —the American student is not only in search of knowledge; he is in search of social advantages and of the right atmosphere; of the right to affix to his name the college when and the year in which he was graduated." —Translation made for The Literary Digest.

The difference between American and European ideas of life and study are well exemplified in this excerpt from the Roman Magazine. It is not often that one gets a comparison free from the objectionable features of race-prejudice, ignorance of conditions, differences in tastes, etc., as in the above. The difference in standards of Italian and American universities however is startling. It is hard to believe that American higher education is so much below that of Italy although that it is below cannot be denied. Americans are inclined to be superficial in research. That a social class is being evolved out of colleges and seminaries will surprise no one. It is the same here. We are ridiculously anxious to tack on little degrees to the end of our names and the rise of this predilection and of college fraternities is due to snobbishness and nothing else.

FREE TRADE IN ENGLAND

The statement of the revenue and expenditure of the United Kingdom for the fiscal year ending with March 31st, has been awaited with rather more than usual interest. As it has turned out, it was in some ways better than was looked for. The figures, with those for 1908, have been given as follows:

It will be observed that duties abandoned long ago in Canada still exist in Great Britain, and hold the place of our protective tariff, viz., stamps, land tax, house duty, property and income tax. These amount to forty-three millions of pounds sterling out of the total of one hundred and fifty-one millions, or about one-third. The transference of these direct taxes to tariff duties, with slight reservation respecting income-taxes might prove of much greater service, tariff reformers maintain, than the present method of collecting revenue. The present mode serves but one purpose, viz., to provide a revenue. The other serves two. It provides a revenue and protection as well.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

The Ontario Educational system is undergoing many important changes, in fact it is being revolutionized. Until the advent of the present Deputy Minister of Education the Department had been under the control of men, originally teachers, whose one idea was the production of a teacher. The one aim was to get every child through a series of examinations, leading to the procuring of a third class temporary certificate as a teacher. The present practical head of the Department was a newspaper man, a man who received a training on broad universal lines, whose mind has never been narrowed to one groove, but who is in touch with the daily thought of the world. It was predicted by this great journal that when the Deputy Minister got the Department in hand, there would be something doing. And there is. It is evident that the Department is now aiming at preparing the children for their life work, as their talents may be best adapted, and grounding them in all that makes for good citizenship. Hitherto there has not been a thought of morals, manners, or correct behavior. The regulations are now to cover these important matters, and teachers must take every opportunity to impress a due observance upon the children. In the past the one test of a teacher was how many youngsters he could jam through the examinations mould. In the near future the test will be in the character and behavior of the whole school. The tendency of the rural school, will be towards Agriculture and the children instead of being unfitted for their life work will be educated for the best occupation a man can engage in. Technical education is to be encouraged, and the system instead of being an inflexible mould, will be more of the nature of a stream, having many mouths and the child entering the stream at the Alphabet landing will be led into that part of the stream which will carry him to the mouth best calculated for his own prosperity and comfort, and the upbuilding of the province. The ultimate end of an Educational system should be a moral, well mannered, useful citizen, and it is to that end the Department appears to be commendably bending its energies. —Bobcaygeon Independent.

A building that would cost, on account of the higher pay of labour, $136,000.00 in Canada, would cost $84,000.00 in England. Yet the woollen industry needs no protection!

May Number of "Rod and Gun"

Variety is the dominating feature of the May number of Rod and Gun in Canada, published by W. J. Taylor, Woodstock, Ont. In accord with the season there are some good fishing stories, while hunting receives such a full share of attention that moose, deer, bear, wolves and wild geese all have particular stories given up to them. Two fine exploration papers—an illustrated review of Mr. Tyrrell's book, "Through the Sub-Arctics of Canada," and one by Mr. Dickson describing a personal trip through Northern Ontario—give us some little idea of how much remains to be done in exploration work in Canada. Mr. Clapham has another fine dog article, "The Beagle for Sport," which all dog-lovers will peruse with interest. The decision of the Ontario Government to have licensed guides is noted and the Order-in-Council dealing with the matter printed in full. Mr. Cy. Warman's paper on "Wild Life" appeals to every lover of the outdoors and cannot fail to have some effect in the direction the author wishes. This number completes the tenth volume and attention is drawn to the work of the magazine in Forest, Fish and Game Protection and the manner in which the movement in its favor has spread throughout Canada. The position achieved by the magazine is dwelt upon with pride and credit given to all those who have assisted Canada's sporting magazine to reach its present high position. If future numbers are as good as this birthday issue—and we are assured that not only will the high standing be kept up but efforts made to improve upon it—there can be no doubt at all as to the future of Rod and Gun. The magazine has now secured for itself a position not easily to be shaken.

ABOUT PRINCE EDWARD.

Canada's Island Province Has All Nature Could Give.

The British Empire is rich in beautiful islands, but it is very doubtful whether among them all there are any which have greater charm or more of homely interest and attraction than the islands which face Canada's eastern and western ports of Halifax and Vancouver. Both are part and parcel of the great Dominion, yet one—Vancouver Island—is actually farther from the other—Prince Edward Island—than the latter is from London. This fact indicates at once the vast extent of Canada and the comparative proximity to the Mother Country of the tight little island province of Prince Edward—the Garden Province, as it is often called, by reason both of its fertility and its beauty. And Prince Edward Island assuredly is a garden—the very sort of garden that most of us would like well to live in. But it is also a good deal more than that. It is a very thriving and prosperous province of the Dominion of Canada. It is no more than 134 miles long, by 34 miles at the widest in breadth, and there is hardly a corner of it which is not richly productive, and, in the best sense, habitable. The hay, oats, vegetables, and dairy produce raised in this favored island are regarded as the best in North America, while in abundance of crop return per acre Prince Edward Island stands quite alone. Most of the farmers own their farms, and a happier, more contented community it would be hard to find in the whole world. As a summer resort the island ought, by all good rights, to be as popular with English people as it is with Canadians and the people of the United States.

The following Island Hymn is by Miss L. H. Montgomery, and Lawrence W. Watson. The author is the daughter of a Prince Edward Island farmer:

Fair Island of the sea
We raise our song to thee,
The bright and blest:
Loyally now we stand
As brothers, hand in hand,
And sing God save the land
We love the best.

Upon our princely isle
May kindest fortune smile
In coming years:
Peace and prosperity
In all her borders be,
From every evil free,
And weakling fears.

Prince Edward Isle, to thee
Our hearts shall faithful be
Where'er we dwell;
Forever may we stand
As brothers, hand in hand,
And sing God save the land
We love so well.

The island which has produced this patriotic poem is one which is being more and more frequently visited by travelers on the other side of the Atlantic, and especially by those who contemplate making new homes for themselves oversea, and those looking for sound oversea investments.—Standard of Empire.

THE OBJECTION TO JOHN.

It Was Easily Removed When the Situation Was Explained.

The Gaylords and Nelsons have always been neighbors and intimate friends. So when John Gaylord at twenty-four, as fine a fellow as ever was, began to see what an altogether charming girl Molly Nelson was there was naturally no opposition. Indeed, as the "affair" became serious it was evident to all, including John and Molly themselves, that the parents concerned were delighted. As yet there was no formal announcement, but every one knew that it was "understood," and evening after evening John talked to Molly on the front porch, often lingering after the other Nelsons had retired.

The surprise of the two was consequently great when one evening a shuffling step was heard in the hall, and presently Mr. Nelson appeared in slippers and dressing-gown, candle in hand. Quite evidently he had gone to bed and then got up—for some purpose.

"Why, father, what is the matter?"

Molly's cheeks were burning, as her father stood there hesitating and eying John closely. John, leaning against the doorpost, where he had stood for the last fifteen minutes saying good-night to Molly, felt decidedly uncomfortable under Mr. Nelson's gaze.

In fact, it was embarrassing all around. But John is a young man who goes straight to the point.

"Is anything wrong, Mr. Nelson?" he began. "Am I to infer that you object to my being here?"

"Well, no, not exactly, John." Mr. Nelson coughed slightly, hesitatingly. "It's only that mother and I would like to get a little sleep."

"Father," cried Molly, quite indignant, "we couldn't have been disturbing any one! John has been talking very low"—

"I don't doubt that, my dear." Mr. Nelson was beginning to enjoy the situation. "It's not that, nor have I any objection to John's talking to you. In fact, I haven't an objection in the world to John nor to his conduct, except"—

Mr. Nelson is open to suspicion of having prolonged the matter unnecessarily at this point.

—"except in one thing. Mrs. Nelson and I do object seriously, my dear John, to the habit you seem to have formed this evening of leaning against the bell push. Our bedroom is next to the kitchen, and this continuous bell ringing is not conducive to repose."

Woman Scared to Death.

London, April 24.—Mrs. Jermain, the young wife of a farmer living just outside of the city limits, died yesterday as the direct result of fright. Several days ago Mrs. Jermain, who was in delicate health, was in her home alone when a tramp approached and asked roughly for food. Upon his departing Mrs. Jermain was completely prostrated, and from which she failed to rally.

AN URGENT CALL TO HUMANE SOCIETIES TO RESIST NEW ACT

The Review has received the following urgent call to humanity on behalf of "dumb driven cattle." from the secretary of the Humane Society in Toronto and gladly opens its columns to it. Any further communications reflecting public opinion will be published with pleasure. The proposed act is an extraordinary disregard of a more general desire for humane treatment of animals.

Toronto, Ont.
April 23, 1909

"The Secretary
Peterborough Humane Society,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Friend:—Today's despatches bring word that the Honorable the Minister of Justice has introduced into parliament a "Bill" containing certain proposed amendments to the Criminal Code, one of which calls for the extension of time limit for cattle in transportation from 24 to 36 hours. You will at once see that added horrors are in store for these animals, if this amendment is allowed to become law, and it is important that every Humane Society in Canada take immediate action to prevent, if possible, this injustice. We therefore ask that you call your Society together and pass the enclosed "Resolution" or one similar, and forward it at once to the Honorable the Minister of Justice, Ottawa, and also a copy to your member, asking that he oppose that particular amendment.

For "Pity sake" make haste.

Believe me,

NEW AND WONDERFUL PICTURE OF CANADA IN THE FAR NORTH

In her lecture to the Woman's Canadian Club Thursday afternoon in Toronto, Miss Agnes Deans Cameron not only mentally carried her audience on her 10,000 mile journey to the Arctic circle, but made every native born listener rejoice with her in their Canadian heritage. She ridiculed the geography idea of a "barren country" country" north of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

"There is no barren ground. It is all good and all liveable," insisted the lecturer, emphasizing her assertion with picture after picture taken on her trip from Winnipeg by way of the Athabasca, Great Slave Lake and the Mackenzie River, to the country of Esquimalt on the "lip of the Arctic circle."

TAR AND SALT FOR TAKING

"The northern shore of the Peace river is wonderfully rich and bound to support a mighty people," continued the lecturer. "Great Slave Lake is, with the exception of Lake Superior, the largest body of fresh water in the world.

"At Pelican Portage, on the Athabasca, a natural gas well has been burning steadily for over fifteen years and gas is so plentiful in that vicinity it actually comes through the water and we lit it above the surface with a match.

"Natural tar oozes from the soil and is used in its raw state.

"There are outcroppings of copper in innumerable places and great strata of salt."

SAFER THAN CHICAGO.

One of the pictures taken near Fort Smith, showed a deposit of salt like snow drifts. It is anybody's salt, and and needs no refining. To its edge come from 300 to 500 wood bison, the last band of buffalo, saved now from extinction by the protection of the Northwest Mounted Police. To this splendid band of men—a little less than 1,000 in number—who keep order in a territory approximately as large as Europe, to the Hudson Bay Company, who consistently and persistently kept its word with the Indians, and to Episcopal and Roman Catholic missionaries, Miss Cameron gives credit when she asserts that "life and property is safer today on the shores of Athabasca and the Lesser Slave than on South Cox street, Chicago, or in the shadow of the White House."

MAKING THEM CANADIANS.

"The true melting pot of the nations, the blending of all peoples and the unification of languages is taking place in the wheatlands of Canada," declared Miss Cameron when she showed a picture of one class in an Edmonton school composed of 3 children from British Columbia, 4 from New Brunswick, 5 from Ontario, 4 from Oregon, 2 from Idaho, 3 from Russia, 2 from Austria, 4 from Germany, 1 from Australia, 2 from New Zealand, 3 from Liverpool and 4 from Manchester.

North of Athabasca Landing, the country is peopled mostly by halfbreeds, and it is easier to get along without English than without French. From here to the Arctic circle dogs of all breeds and mixtures are in evidence everywhere, and domestic animals, such as poultry, pigs, etc., are not to be found. The dogs and the latter disagree, and the people must have dogs. They are the beasts of burden. One picture, taken at Fort Chipewyan, where the prize wheat of the world was grown, showed them harnessed to the plough.

THERE YOU GO "DOWN NORTH."

From Fort Smith, which is on the northern boundary of Alberta and on a parallel with St. Petersburgh, Miss Cameron and her niece travelled by the fine large Hudson Bay steamer built at that place "down north," 1,200 miles further to the Arctic circle.

It took me all summer to learn to say 'down north'" explained the lecturer with one of her illuminating smiles, "but you can't say 'up' when you're following the current.

"We lost the stars from there, too," she continued, "and could take photographs with equal facility at noon or at night."

NEITHER SHORT NOR DIRTY.

One picture showed the lecturer holding high half a dozen "borrowed" silver fox skins, for which the Indians get $200 apiece, and the London dealers from $1,500 to $2,500.

Other pictures showed Indian boys of Fondu Lac looking at the first white woman they had ever seen; a game of football played with a walrus bladder; the ramparts of the Mackenzie; herds of reindeer; golden rod, roses and flax growing wild within the Arctic Circle, and Esquimalt "neither short, nor squat, nor dirty, despite our old yellow backed geographies."

"Most of the Esquimalt men I saw," continued the lecturer (and they are Canadians, too, remember), were 6 feet tall. None were less than 5 feet 10, and all walked with the swagger of cavalrymen."

TOO GOOD FOR APPLAUSE.

Deeply regretting the fact that the profitable whaling industry of the Arctic was monopolized by enterprising Americans, who took out not only blubber and whalebone, but also the choicest furs of that region. Miss Cameron closed a two hour lecture which seemed much less than half than half that length. She is undoubtedly one of the cleverest speakers in Canada. Her command of language, her deep implied sympathy and her quiet wit hold the interste of her audience, while, in her simple statement of facts, she impresses you so with the feeling that she could tell you so much more if she only had the time, that you begrudge even the moments given to applause.—Toronto Telegram.

THE LOCAL OPTION MOVEMENT IN THE CITY

The Matter Appearing in This Department is Furnished by the Peterborough Temperance and Moral Reform League Which Has Arranged for its Publication.

Representatives from the Young People's Societies of a number of Peterborough's leading churches were the speakers yesterday, Sunday afternoon, at the Gospel Temperance meeting held in the Crystal. The meeting was one of the best attended that has been held this year.

Walter Garbutt, of the Murray Street Baptist Church, considered it a privilege to have a chance to speak in favor of local option. No matter how little people may swerve from the straight path of duty, on the question of temperance, their action is sure to influence some person for good or evil.

In the absence of Miss Everson, Rev. Mr. Radiford spoke for the Park Street Baptist Church. He claimed that the present local option campaign is the greatest fight the citizens of Peterborough have ever been called upon to face. If the Christian people of Peterborough will take hold with the young people, they will be able to drive the bar rooms from the city, and thus do away with the curse that each year destroys in Canada over 6,000 people.

Mr Ferguson, from St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, claimed that until people recognized that intemperance is sin, they will not have the influence in their efforts to abolish it that is required. We must realize that Christ died that we might live. If we do we will be willing to make sacrifices for the sake of others. We will be willing to put forth efforts to abolish the bar. Some people have said that they will not favor local option because when they come to the city, they may have to pay 50 cents for a meal instead of 25 cents. Such people do not realize that it is better to pay 50 cents and save the boys than to pay only 25 cents and loose them.

It was claimed by Norman Allison, of George Street Church, that the history of strong drink has been the history of sin and misery for centuries. An extended reference to Mr. Allison's remarks will be published later.

The citizens of Peterborough were warned by Mr. R. J. Cox, from the Charlotte Street Methodist Church, that unless they drive the bar room from Peterborough, the liquor traffic in time may become the same curse in this city that it has in the old land, where he had seen more drunkenness in one week than he had observed in Peterborough in two years. The members of the Young People's Society of the Charlotte Church, some eighty in number, are all in favor of local option. Those who have votes will vote for it and those who have not, will endeavor to get others to vote.

It will be easier to drive the liquor traffic from Peterborough next January than it will be later on when it becomes more firmly entrenched in the city. Mr. Cox told of a man of his acquaintance in the old land, who, through strong drink, lost a splendid business and was reduced to such extremities that at times his wife had only 25 cents with which to feed herself and five children. People who are afraid to vote for local option because it may increase their taxes, should see the taxes that the people in the old land are forced to pay to support poor houses, prisons and paupers, caused by strong drink.

When a saloon keeper tells the business men of Peterborough that he will not deal with them if they work for local option, they should remember that if the saloon is driven from Peterborough, the families of men who drink, which now have to buy goods on credit, will then be able to pay cash, which should offset the loss of the saloon keeper's trade. Unless we secure local option in Peterborough, the city is bound in time to have slum districts of starving children, and all the other woes that follow the liquor traffic.

The Orpheus Quartette, Messrs. Rush, Thornton, Miller and Cole sang. The chairman was Mr. F. G. Hassard, of the Y. M. C. A. The meeting was the last that will be held this spring. The meetings will be resumed next September. The success of the series of meetings just concluded is due largely to the efforts of Mr. W. G. Shimer, Mrs. Gurney, Mrs. G. K. Martin, Mr. A. Brown and Mr. R. B. Cunningham.

HUNDRED DOLLARS FOR REGIMENT IS DECISION OF FINANCE COMMITTEE

Will Recommend This Sum From City to Assist in Entertainment of Regiments for May 24th—Debentures Will be Sold at a Premium.

A meeting of the Finance committee was held on Saturday afternoon, when several important matters were dealt with. The committee will recommend that the city grant $100 to the 57th regiment to assist them in entertaining the visiting regiments on May 24th.

Tenders for sewer and sidewalk debentures amounting to $25,105.18, were received from fourteen firms. The tender of Brouse, Mitchell and Company at $25,408.25 was accepted on motion of Ald Phelan and Ald. Bradburn. The city treasurer will be instructed to have the debentures printed and delivered.

Instructions were given to have a bylaw drawn to increase the grant to the Central Charity Board to $2000 a year. At present it is $1700.

A letter was read from the city solicitor regarding the report of J A Hall, auditor, that the amount raised by bylaws for sewer contract No 25, exceeded the expenditure by $2,241.51, and for concrete walks No 21, by $1,152.45, making a total of $3,393.96.

Cheques will be issued to the Peterborough City Trust for these sums.

No action was taken regarding the request of A P Pousette, on behalf of James Caracostas, that the license fee for peddling pop corn and peanuts be increased to $75.

On motion of Ald Bradburn and Ald Phelan it was decided to make a grant of $100 to the 57th regiment to assist in the entertainment of the two visiting regiments.

A letter from the Salvation Army for a grant of $200 to their band, was laid over.

CAMERA CLUB EXHIBITION WILL OPEN THIS EVENING

Many Beautiful Pictures Are on Exhibition—Committee Have Done Good Work—Should be Largely Patronized.

There is a beautiful display of pictures at the exhibition of the the Peterborough Camera Club, which opens this evening in the former rectory of All Saints' church at the corner of Reid and King streets. The committee in charge have done excellent work, and those who attend the exhibition are assurred of a rare treat. The informal opening takes place to-night, but the formal opening will not take place till to-morrow evening, when Mayor Rush will be in attendance. The admission is five cents or as much more as one cares to give. The proceeds go towards the building fund of All Saints' church.

Many of the pictures on exhibition are works of art and are well worth going to see.

Much credit is due Mr. N. Howard Moore and Mr. Rose, who have worked hard to make the exhibition a success. They have spared no pains to secure a creditable collection of photographs and their work has not been without result.

Some of the pictures from Montreal and Toronto are indeed beautiful, and the local photographers who have made exhibits are to be congratulated on their work. In this connection mention might be made of the photographs of Dr. Morgan, of Peterborough.

SPLENDID TURNOUT OF T.A.S. MEMBERS AT COMMUNION

Attended in a Body Yesterday Morning—Appreciative Address to Rev. Dr. O'Brien, the Society's Spiritual Adviser.

There was a splendid turnout of the men of St. Peter's Total Abstainence Society yesterday morning at communion at the Cathedral. About four hundred and fifty were in attendance.

In the afternoon several new members joined the society and the feature of the meeting was the presence of Rev. Dr. O'Brien, the spiritual adviser of the T.A.S., who was able to attend after an absence of about thirteen weeks, occasioned by his confinement to St. Joseph's hospital.

Dr. O'Brien was most cordially welcomed by the members and was presented with the following appreciative address:

Rev. Dr. O'Brien;

Dear Sir,—We your loving and admiring friends desire to take this formal—but not less cordial—manner of congratulating you most heartily upon your recovery from a protracted confinement, due to accident; at the same time congratulating ourselves, the church and society, upon your return to the sphere of duty, whose faithful discharge in the past, has made you so important a factor in the promotion of the spiritual and moral well-being of the city.

While you were separated from us we sympathized with you in your hours of pain—nor merely physical suffering—but the pain a noble nature must feel in being deprived of the privilege of ministering in the domain of priestly functions to the faithful of the flock and of guiding and helping the more secular, but hardly less important, moral interests, to which in your case, so much prayer, work and devotion have been given. There is something of the selfish in our rejoicing at your recovery, for we shall again enjoy the pleasure of associating with you in the personal, social and moral relations from which we have in the past, enjoyed so much pleasure and profit.

Trusting, dear Father that the good God above will long spare you to us, and the work you have so nobly done and have yet to do, we beg leave to subscribe ourselves in name, as we are proud to be in fact.

Signed on behalf of the officers and members of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society.

Hints for the Household

Squeeze a few drops of lemon in the water in which potatoes are boiled just before they are done and they will not turn black.

If soda is mixed with flour in making ginger cookies with sour milk instead of being dissolved in milk, as is the usual way, they will be lighter.

Paint that sticks to glass can be removed with hot vinegar.

Cleaning pots and pans is the bugbear of the cook. It is hard work at best, and if left until after the dishes are washed it hangs over one as a burden. One easy way is to keep a supply of newspapers in the kitchen and as soon as a skillet is emptied, pour in a little boiling water, then throw the water out and rub skillet with a large piece of paper. If the frying pan is not clean add a little more water, and finally polish until dry with a fresh piece of paper and hang away before other work is attempted.

To keep milk toast from being soggy, as it too frequently is, try serving the boiling, buttered milk in a covered pitcher, passing it with crisp, hot toast. In this way each person can have toast as soft or as crisp as desired.

The housekeeper who wants the best does her own marketing, and does it early, before the foodstuffs are picked over or wilted from the hot sun.

More Americans should understand cooking with curry powder. It makes a delicious change for the cooking of meats, rice, eggs and fish. An Anglo-Indian will tell you we know nothing of the use of curries, but that is no reason why we should not learn.

There are fewer reckoning days if housekeepers pay cash. If they persist in running accounts for groceries and other staples they should have a book and see to it that the right price is put down the minute anything is bought.

PROGRESSIVE CONSTRUCTION

On Railways in the Great Canadian West—Mr. Chamberlain's Statement

Winnipeg, Man., April 24.—No time will be lost in constructing the branch line projected by the Grand Trunk Pacific R.R., according to a statement made here by Edson J. Chamberlain, general manager of the company.

Between Winnipeg and the Pacific Coast there remains but 260 miles of the main line to be put under contract and a portion of this will be let before the end of the year. Mr. Chamberlain is confident that trains will be running between Edmonton and the Great Lakes in time to assist in handling the crop of 1909, despite all press reports to the contrary, and work will be rushed westward from Edmonton.

Active construction will be started within a few weeks on the branch line to run northward from Melville, Sask., and the other from that town south to Regina, and the international boundary, and Mr. Chamberlain states a portion of the steel on these branches will be laid this year. He also said the company had decided to build a branch line northwesterly from Melville to Prince Albert, and surveys for this line are now being made. This line, it is expected, will eventually be extended from Prince Albert in a northwesterly direction, tapping the vast mineral resources of the far north and Peace River country. This will give five lines radiating out of Melville before the beginning of 1910.

Mr Chamberlain stated that fully $10,000,000 will be spent on the actual construction by the company in Western Canada this year, and every effort will be made to get as much mileage in operation this year as possible, owing to the influx of American settlers requiring railroads, and the active competition of the other railroad systems now building in Western Canada.

Fishermen are Getting Active—Small Catches Have Been Made

Suckers are reported to be running but no large hauls have been secured as yet. Both at the locks and at the dams north of Auburn Railway bridge small numbers of the fish, varying in sizes have been seen and the users of the gaff and net will now proceed to get busy. The arrival of the suckers is every year eagerly awaited and it will not be long before those who relish the feed that may be secured by means of this fish will be able to satisfy themselves to their heart's content.

THE FLOW OF THE RIVER

The flow of the river is less than the highest up to this date last year by 13 inches. Thirteen inches on top of what is now filling the narrow bed of the river, means a lot of water and the water that did not fall last winter, although the expectations of the initiated in this respect have been exceeded.

ALMOST A SCRAP SATURDAY NIGHT

On Saturday night shortly after seven o'clock a row occurred on Charlotte street, but owing to the watchful eye of P. C. McGinty the disturbance was stopped before it had gone very far. It appears two men got into an altercation in a hotel and one dared the other to come outside and settle it a la Johnson, and to this he was accommodated. Both parties gave full vent to their feelings on reaching the above-named street, but as has been said before, the officer of the law got busy and parted the would-be scrappers and escorted one of them to the Police Station, but he explained matters in such a satisfactory manner that he was not called upon to spend Sunday in the cells.

The deed transferring the part at Port Stanley from William Bowman to London has been discovered.

ALLOWED OFF ON PERJURY CHARGE

Frank Reynolds, who was charged with perjury at the close of the assault case which he laid against Chief Howard, and whose case was enlarged until to-day, was allowed to go on suspended sentence by Magistrate Dumble at the police court this morning.

Mr. R. F. McWilliams appeared for accused and elected to be tried summarily, and pleaded not guilty on the evidence that had been taken in the assault case.

Accused's counsel said the question was whether he deliberately and intentionally swore something that he knew to be false. Mr. McWilliams held that the prisoner did not do this as what evidence he had given was in good faith, and he cited another case of similar kind.

The magistrate allowed that the man was drunk at the time of the assault, and this may have been the cause of the prisoner swearing to the evidence that he had given in court. But was this any excuse. Crown-Attorney Wood was willing that in the case of the magistrate finding the accused guilty that he be leniently dealt with, as the prisoner had, no doubt received a lesson that would be of benefit to him.

The magistrate found Reynolds guilty and gave him a good lecture, but on account of the punishment he had already suffered and as he had shown a desire to live a better life in the future he would let him go on suspended sentence.

NO WITNESSES TO PROVE CHARGE

Frederick Eastland Charged With Not Being Able, Through Drunkness to Properly Manage His Horse

Frederick Eastland, was drunk on Saturday night and the horse and buggy which he was driving threw him out and ran away. A delivery waggon of J. F. Matthews Co. while turning the corner of Brock and George streets became mixed up with the runaway outfit and the result was the animal attached to the delivery waggon received injuries of a serious nature.

Eastland appeared in court this morning to answer to the charge of being unable to properly handle his horse through being drunk and pleaded guilty.

After hearing the evidence the Magistrate enlarged the case until Tuesday morning.

The first witness was the driver of the delivery waggon who stated that about 8.30 Saturday night while turning the corner of Brock and George streets accused's horse ran into the horse driven by him. The shafts of the buggy penetrated the withers of of his horse and it received other injuries of a serious nature.

Dr. Poole gave evidence as to the extent of the injuries received by the horse. There was a puncture between four and five inches deep in the withers and there were several abrasions. He could not tell at present to what extent the injuries would effect the horse.

Accused said that part of the harness had broken and this was responsible for the horse running away.

The Magistrate held that there was no evidence to show that accused had been drunk or was responsible for the runaway.

Chief Rozzel asked for an enlargement of the case until he could get the necessary witnesses to prove the drunk charge and the time was set for tomorrow morning.

CHIEF OBJECT FRATERNAL ORDER SHOULD HAVE

Is the Development of Love Such as Was Spoken of by Christ—Rev. J. G. Potter's Address to Oddfellows and Lady Maccabees—Annual Church Parade.

Peterborough and Otonabee Lodges I. O. O. F., celebrated their ninetieth anniversary by attending divine service last night in a body. There were 250 in the procession, including many members of the Rebekahs, the largest turnout the societies ever held. The Oddfellows met in their lodge rooms, George street, and marshalled by Lieut.-Col. Miller, proceeded to St. Andrew's church for divine worship, where a section was reserved for them. They were accompanied by a number of visiting brethren. The church was crowded for the service.

Rev. J. G. Potter, the pastor, preached a splendid sermon, particularly applicable to the occasion. He chose as text from St. John, 13-34, 'A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you.' The speaker told of the power of love and its wide significance, and spoke of the love that Christ wanted us to cherish for one another, as the greatest thing for good there was.

The preacher said he did not need to state to those gathered together the great privilege he had in addressing the societies. He was glad to welcome the Rebekah Lodge to the church in company with the Oddfellows.

The speaker dwelt on the value of fraternal societies and said Oddfellowship had its uses and as it had the objects of helpfulness, benevolence and fraternity should be encouraged and prayed for. We had reason to know that the benevolent societies of our city were sincere.

The true test of a good society could be made along very simple lines. The societies to which a man belonged should improve him for his life in his home and the church. And Oddfellowship stood for the highest ideals in these respects. The great value and practical accomplishments of the order was explained by the preacher, who also told of the magnificent progress that had been made. Without disregarding the request of the committee not to take the opportunity of advertising the order during his sermon Mr. Potter said that he hoped he would not be doing so by giving a few facts of interest to prove the growth and advancement of Oddfellowship. He referred to the accomplishments in the various departments of the order and that of the Rebekahs also. In a world-wide sense the increase in new members during the past year was 3,339,000.

The speaker urged upon his listeners the value of obeying Christ's admonition to love one another, and explained the broad meaning of the word love, and the love that Jesus Christ wanted men to have in their hearts. The true spirit of love lay in the following of the principles of Christianity, if all remembered the importance and value of these greater things would be accomplished in this world.

In all parts of the world men needed the help and sympathy of others. A man who was filled with the love of Christ and a desire to obey his message would not have to have the ten commandments placed before him all the time. The measure of that love was to be in the words of Christ, "as I have loved you."

Christ's life was made up of doing constantly the good things even if they were the little things. Many of us want to do big things and would not be contented until we had the opportunity to accomplish something large.

The speaker told of the necessity of lodge members keeping from giving any slander against their fellow members and hoped that the gathering at the service would prove of benefit to the Oddfellows in their noble work.

The solos in the anthem sung during the service was taken in pleasing voice by Mr. Gordon Wright and Mr. Fred Skitch sang most acceptably, "Thy Will be Done."

After the service the brethren returned to their lodge rooms where Lieut.-Col. Miller spoke the great appreciation of the order for the excellent and impressive sermon delivered by Mr. Potter, and of the services rendered by the pastor and the church to the society.

A vote of thanks was unanimously carried and will be forwarded to St. Andrew's.

Rev. Mr. Potter and Mr. A. McFarlane made brief responses on behalf of the church.

Bicycles are rapidly coming back into popular favor, the demand this year being five times what it was five years ago. We have planned for it in two ways—by getting the very best English wheel we can for popular selling, and saving to our customers all intermediate profits by filling orders direct by mail instead of through agents. In this way we can offer and give better satisfaction all round. The quality of the wheels is all right—only the best materials used and only skilled mechanics employed in construction. The equipment is right up-to-date and the machines throughout are such as we can thoroughly recommend. We sell automobiles as well as bicycles and our plan is to make wheels serve as a good advertisement to the entire business. Send for illustrated folder.

$50 Wheels for $25

DISTRICT ASSOCIATION IS LIKELY TO BE FORMED

Lawn Tennis Executive Met on Saturday Evening—Players Will be Divided Into Three Classes—Clubs Must Join by May 15th

At the meeting of the executive of the Tennis Association on Saturday evening many items of interest were discussed and decided. The prospect of forming a district league seems to have met with the favor of the nearby towns, as already communications been received asking for admission. This gives every indication of a successful district competition.

In order to carry out the plans of the association every club in the city is urged to thoroughly organize as early as possible and complete its membership. Every individual playing under the schedule of the association must be a member of one of the clubs.

By May 15th every club intending to join the association must have its application in the hands of the secretary. Already five clubs have entered and this number may be increased to seven or eight if the prospective new clubs are formed.

The two main lines of competition which the association will conduct will be inter-club matches of two teams each, playing home and home games for the club championship of the city, and games of singles for the city championship.

The plans for the games in singles will be so extensive that the novice in tennis will get his share of the pleasure of competition, just the same as the old experienced player. With the opening of the season the players will be grouped into three classes, according to their experience and ability in the game, and then the games arranged so that the contests will be fairly equal. After the first several rounds have been played the survivors will meet their future opponents by drawing lots. Undoubtedly this plan will make the game interesting to all concerned, and the novice will have an opportunity of meeting players who will prove most instructing to him.

By these contests in the singles the better players will be brought to the fore, and from these teams will be chosen by the various clubs to represent them in the doubles in the inter-club contests.

To defray the expenses of the association the fee has been made a very nominal one, 25c. for each person applying under the schedule.

By June 1st every man who intends entering the schedule must have his name and fee in the hands of the representative of the association in his club, or Herb B. Collier, the secretary of the association. If he belongs to two or more clubs he should at the same time indicate for which club he proposes to credit his successes.

OUTSIDE BOXERS HERE FOR THEIR BOUTS THIS EVENING

Jimmy Kelly, of Buffalo, and Jack Edwards of Toronto are in town for their bouts at the roller rink tonight with Corney Burns and George Lillie, respectively.

Kelly is well known as a boxer around Buffalo and in New York State where he has figured successfully in many bouts. He is a very handy boy and will strip tonight at 137 pounds. Among his victories over Canadian glove artists is his defeat of Frank Carroll of Toronto in three rounds. He looks to be in fine condition. His eye is bright and his complexion clear and from external appearances he seems ready to jump into the ring for a long battle. Kelly is well built and looks to be fast and husky.

Edwards of Toronto, who stacks up against Lillie has been boxing professionally for some time and is looked upon in Toronto as a clever man at the hit and get away game. He is tall and rangy and weighs about 123 pounds. Among his recent bouts are a draw with Jimmy Aikens at North Bay in a go of eight rounds and a victory over Jack Wright in six rounds at Newmarket.

W A Hoagland, the champion walker, will referee the bouts as he is booked to arrive here this afternoon to transact some business in connection with the walk to be held here next month.

ALF. SHRUBB'S COMFORTABLE VICTORY OVER ST. YVES

New York, April 24.—The American League Baseball Park was brilliantly lighted to-night, and about 10,000 people braved the chilling atmosphere to witness the race between Henry St. Yves, the French champion, and Alfred Shrubb, the English champion, over a five-lap track, that is heavy from recent rains, for 15 miles. There was a goodly sprinkling of the fair sex present and they were as enthusiastic as the male element.

The betting made St. Yves favorite at odds of 8 to 5.

ECCLES WINS PRELIMINARY.

The preliminary race was started at 8.25 p.m., for a jaunt of five miles. Jas. Eccles won, Mike Spring second, Bob Halleen third, M. D. Butler fourth. Time, 27.37 2-5.

At the hour appointed for the main event, Fred Appleby appeared on the track and challenged the winner. At 9 p.m. Shrubb and St. Yves appeared on the track and sprinted around the track to limber up. At 9.03 Official Starter Hon Thomas Foley lined the two runners up and fired the pistol that sent them flying around on their journey. Shrubb at once jumped into the lead, and before half a lap had been traversed was in the lead by ten yards. At the end of the first lap he led by two yards, but at the second had increased it to 40 yards, and 50 yards at the third lap.

THE RING

London, England, April 24—Through his hurry-up defeat of Gunner Moir at the National Sporting Club this week, Ian Hague, a stalwart Yorkshireman, is to-day the heavyweight champion of England. Hague is sure to remain in the English limelight for at least a month, or until after his battle with Sammy Langford, the dusky American, who is coming over to fight him on May 24. The feeling, of course, is that the new title-holder will have his hands full in quitting even with the man whom, it is believed here at least, Jack Johnson is afraid to meet.

England's heavyweights, in recent years, have been of only moderate caliber at best, and Hague, while disposing of Gunner Moir in easy fashion, cannot be fairly termed a classy boxer. Hague has dropped from the clouds, as it were, into the championship circle, for until he accepted Moir's long-standing defi to meet anything in the shape of an Englishman, he was practically unheard of by the public generally, although those who follow the boxing game recalled with little effort his debut at the National Sporting Club by winning a heavy-weight novice's competition and his subsequent settlement in short order of the pretensions of Frank Craig, the Harlem Coffee Cooler, in four rounds; of Charley Wilson in five and of Ben Taylor in three.

Hague went into the ring this week to whip Moir scaling 189 pounds and standing a half-inch under six feet, and is but 24 years of age, or seven years younger than was his opponent. He is a strong, lusty fellow with a big heart, a real liking for the game and a frame calculated to withstand all that the best home-bred man, at least, can deal out. That he has not shown a superabundance of skill is not surprising, seeing that the young Yorkshire boy has never had a boxing lesson in his life, but he showed marked improvement against Moir, although he will probably always rank with the natural rather than scientific fighters. He is of the daredevil sort, but it looks as though a good straight left would stop him, and Langford is known to have just such a punch in his repertoire.

The new champion agreed to the meeting with Langford the same night that he won his title, and at once hied himself back to his little camp at the seaside village of Withernsea, a pretty and bracing spot on the Yorkshire coast, some twenty miles from Hull. As for Moir, he can no longer be regarded as a great drawing attraction. The English generally showed great magnanimity toward him following his showing against Burns, which was none too good, but his failure to last any time at all against Hague relegates him to the rear, apparently for all time.

MIDLAND FOOTBALL LEAGUE DIVIDED INTO FOUR DISTRICTS

Important Meeting Held on Saturday—Schedule Drawn up and Other Arrangements Made.

On Saturday afternoon a meeting of the Midland Football League was held at the Y. M. C. A. to draw up the schedule of games for the season of 1909.

Those present and the clubs they represented were:

Dr. Devitt, Bowmanville; C. Sisson, Y.M.C.A.; Wm. Bell and H. Darling, Warsaw; N. Moore, Lakefield; C. M. Lownes and H. Davis, Brintons (Peterborough); R. Pearce, Norwood and Keene, W. Hutchins, Havelock; Thos. Moffat, Marmora; Dr. Morgan, Dr. McPherson and Percy Fitzgerald, Loyalists.

Dr. Devitt, the president of this league, was the representative at the annual meeting of the Ontario Football Association in Toronto on Easter Monday, and gave a splendid report of the proceedings of that meeting.

After this report was given and a few matters of routine business were disposed of, the task of arranging the schedule was proceeded with.

As the four districts were formed in accordance with the wishes of the delegates, and as the time and place of each game was considered by the representatives from the respective districts, there should be no necessity of making any changes in that part of the schedule already drawn up.

The four completed districts are:

ONE.

Oshawa I., Bowmanville, Oshawa II., Cobourg.

TWO.

Y. M. C. A. (Peterborough), Bethany, Brintons (Peterborough).

THREE.

Keene, Warsaw, Lakefield.

FOUR.

Havelock, Norwood, Marmora.

The officers of the league are somewhat superstitious, and do not feel comfortable while the Intermediate Series has just thirteen entries, so an attempt is being made to form another eastern district in the neighbourhood of Stirling, Hetherie's Corners, Hoard's Station and Burnbrae. An addition of three clubs in this series would make "sweet sixteen," which would be a charming send-off for 1909. The formation of another district would not affect the present schedule until the finals are reached.

There is also under consideration the arrangement of a junior series, as it is a good means of developing and encouraging the young players—the age limit being twenty years. Havelock and the Norwood High School are desirous of this series and in all probability a snug little district will be formed in that vicinity. As this series is entirely separate from the intermediates there is ample time to get the juniors into action and have their games concluded before July 1st. Any communication on this subject will be promptly answered by the secretary, Ernest Brumwell, Peterborough.

Plans are already under way for the publication of the Midland League Annual which will contain a fund of useful information desired by every player within the limits of this league.

Those clubs which have not forwarded the admission fee, the list of players and the name of an official referee are reminded that it is necessary that these be sent in to the Secretary-Treasurer at the earliest convenience.

LOCAL PLAYERS TO TOUR WITH "THE TYRANNY OF TEARS"

A company of players, under the direction of Mr. Irving Beers, will shortly play Campbellford, Hastings, Norwood, Stirling and the surrounding towns in "The Tyranny of Tears," the English piece that was presented here a short time ago by Robert Ganthony.

Six or seven members will be required for the caste, and five have been definitely chosen. Misses Pearl Morgan, of this city, and Marion Broadbent, of Lindsay, and Messrs. Irving Beers, Arthur Graham and John King, of Peterborough, and John Light, of the company that was seen here in the play. Another member will be added to the company before the tour begins, and if it is successful the larger towns will be visited.

EDMONTON WILL AGAIN COME EAST AFTER STANLEY CUP

Edmonton, April 24.—The hockey season in Edmonton is finished for this year and the boys have put away their sticks and skates until another winter. The Edmonton hockey team are to be congratulated upon the excellent showing they made this winter. They have proved beyond doubt that they are champions of the whole of Western Canada and their work in Eastern Canada was of such a ntaure as to arouse there a very wholesome respect for the puckchasers from Alberta's Capital.

Next year it is possible that Edmonton will again send a team east to play for the Stanley Cup, this time against Ottawa, provided none of the teams which now have their challenges accepted, lift the silverware. It is believed that the same team that played for Edmonton this year, with the addition of a couple of good players such as Lester and Frank Patrick, would be able to lift the cup.

A glance over the records made by the Edmonton hockey team this season is the best indication of their playing ability. During the season the team played twenty games winning all but one. This is a record that perhaps not another team in Canada can show. And the Edmonton team did not confine its game to weaker teams in smaller towns in the west but went up against some of the fastest teams in the E.C.H.L. except perhaps the Ottawas, and came through the game with honor to themselves and credit to their home city.

BALL TOSSER'S CORNER

DELAYING THE GAME.

Rule 33, section 1.—If, after the batsman be standing in his proper position ready to strike at a pitched ball, the ball be thrown by the pitcher to any player other than the catcher, within the catcher's lines, and within ten feet of the home base (except in an attempt to retire a runner) each ball so thrown shall be called a ball.

Section 2.—The umpire shall call a ball on the pitcher each time he delays the game by failing to deliver the ball to the batsman for a longer period than 20 seconds, excepting that at the commencement of each inning, or when a pitcher relieves another, the pitcher may occupy one minute in delivering, not to exceed five balls to the catcher or an infielder, during which time play shall be suspended.

Section 3.—In event of the pitcher being taken from the game by either manager or captain, the player substituted for him shall continue to pitch until the batsman then at bat has either been put out or has reached first base.

REMEMBER the intermediate league meeting to-morrow night at 8 o'clock. Come and bring a two-dollar bill with you.

THE KARNOTS will not be together this season. The players will be distributed among the other teams.

THE CORDAGE works will not be represented by a team in the senior City League.

THE P. R. R. will not extend their line up to the Nicholls Oval to accommodate the fans who will take in the intermediate games this season.

Should Danny McCabe remain in the city this year his services as umpire should be secured by either one of the leagues.

NIGHT GAMES should not figure in either the intermediate or senior leagues this season, as experience in the past has shown that neither team can do their best.

RANDOLPH PICKUP WAS DISCHARGED

Rudolph Pickup, who was arrested last week by High County Constable Cochrane, in the Township of Smith, and brought here to face a charge of vagrancy, was given a hearing before Magistrate Edmison this morning.

Constable Cochrane gave evidence to the effect that the accused had been causing a lot of trouble to the residents in the vicinity of where he was arrested, and did not bear a very good reputation. The high constable did not think it safe for him to be allowed to wander around the country.

The magistrate, however, allowed Pickup to go free, but warned him against going back to the scene of his arrest. Rudolph promised to locate in a new country.

Good Work of Dorcas Society

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir.—The people of our city will doubtless be interested to know what was done amongst the poor and needy during the past winter by the Dorcas Society.

In the fall of last year several ladies were touched by the unmistakable signs that want and distress would be amongst us again as the winter advanced, and determined to try and do something which would in some measure alleviate the same. Other ladies were invited to join, and in a short time the Dorcas Society was organized. An appeal was made for left-off clothing, which was most generously responded to. The ladies then met at the home of the much-esteemed president, Mrs. W. G. Rankin, 598 Gilmour street. The clothing was made over or repaired, as necessary, and made ready for distribution. In the meantime a concert was in preparation to raise funds to enable the society to extend their work a little further. This was given in St. Andrew's school room, and proved a success financially, in addition to which Mr. Edwards, the kind-hearted proprietor of the Crystal, very generously donated us the proceeds of two afternoon performances. The Society was now in a position to give practical help. The names of needy families were obtained; the ladies investigated the same; clothing was sent also provisions, which were considered most suitable to the need and the number in each family. Eighteen families received clothing, ten families clothing and provisions, and four with provisions only. In all, some thirty-two families have been assisted, independent of creed or denomination, many of them, regularly and systematically, all the winter through. $43.91 was expended on provisions. It has meant a sacrifice of time and ease to the workers but they feel themselves a hundred-fold repaid, knowing as they do, the comfort and help they have dispensed to some of their less fortunate brothers and sisters.

The Dorcas society has fifteen members and have held seventeen meetings the average attendance being 10.

There is a small balance on hand, which will be held over to commence another season's work.

The society wishes to thank all those who have aided them so much with gifts of clothing.

Thanking you for this space,

Yours truly,
MRS W G COMMON,
Secretary.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Canifton, Ont.—"I had been a great sufferer for five years. One doctor told me it was ulcers of the uterus, and another told me it was a fibroid tumor. No one knows what I suffered. I would always be worse at certain periods, and never was regular, and the bearing-down pains were terrible. I was very ill in bed, and the doctor told me I would have to have an operation, and that I might die during the operation. I wrote to my sister about it and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Through personal experience I have found it the best medicine in the world for female troubles, for it has cured me, and I did not have to have the operation after all. The Compound also helped me while passing through Change of Life."—Mrs. LETETIA BLAIR, Canifton, Ontario.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to suffering women.

MAKE A CHANGE

A New Back for an Old One—How it is Done in Peterborough

The back aches at times with a dull feeling making you worry and restless—sharp pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, it is agony to bend, stoop or lift. The rubbing of liniments or applications of plasters does no good in these cases, they do not reach the cause. To get rid of these symptoms and exchange the bad back for a new and stronger one follow the example of this Peterborough citizen.

Mrs John Barclay, 583 George St. Peterborough, says:

"My back was weak and tender and a dull, grinding pain had settled in the small of it. I could not stoop to lift anything and could scarcely turn in bed. Rheumatism had settled in my hands and shoulders. I was in constant suffering and could find no relief. The urine plainly told the disordered, inactive state of the kidneys as it was thick and highly colored and contained a quantity of brick dust sediment. Booth's Kidney Pills were advertised at the Market Drug Store, and I tried them. I found more relief in one box of Booth's Kidney Pills than in all else put together. My back strengthened and the pains left it. Rheumatism disappeared and has not since returned. The urine cleared. I am strong and well and feel like a new person."

The Barrier

By Rex Beach

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

He let her out, closed the door after her and locked it; then, drawing a deep breath, he raised his clinched hands above his head and gave a great sigh of exultation. Next he took out his six shooter and examined it carefully. The shells did not suit him, so he filled the gun with new ones, loosened the three lower buttons of his vest and slid the weapon inside his trousers band; then, facing the direction of Gale's trading post, he spoke aloud:

"I was a long time coming, Gaylord, but I'm here, and I've got you where I've wanted you these fifteen years! Yes, and I've got you, too, Burrell! By heaven, this is my night!"

His lithe body became panther-like in poise, his bearing that of the meat eating animal, and his face set in a fierce, exultant cruelty as he blew out his light and left the cabin.

CHAPTER XIV.

A MYSTERY IS UNRAVELED.

LIEUTENANT BURRELL was considerably taken aback when a quarter of an hour after the young lover's ecstatic return to his quarters Gale knocked at his door, for the trader's visit, coupled with the late hour and his somber countenance, forecast new complications.

"He's here to object, but it won't go," thought the lieutenant as he made his visitor welcome.

Meade swung his big reading chair out beneath the hanging lamp and, going to the sideboard, brought back a bottle, some glasses and a pouch of tobacco. Noting the old man's sigh of fatigue as he sat himself down heavily, he remarked sympathetically:

"Mr. Gale, you've made a long trip today and you must be tired. If this talk is to be lengthy, why not have a drink with me now and postpone it until tomorrow?"

"I've been tired for eighteen years," the other replied. "Tonight I hope to get rested."

"Well, let's get at it," the younger man finally said.

"I suppose you'll want to interrupt and question me a heap, but I'll ask you to let me tell this story the way it comes to me till I get it out. Likewise you'll want to know what all this has to do with you and Necia. Yes; she told me about you and her, and that's why I'm here." He paused. "You really think you love her, do you?"

Burrell removed his pipe and gazed at its coal impersonally.

"I love her so well, Mr. Gale, that nothing you can say will affect me. I—I hesitated at first about asking her to be my wife because—you'll appreciate the unusual—well, her unusual history. You see, I come from a country where mixed blood is about the only thing that can't be lived down or overlooked, and I've been raised with notions of family honor and pride of race and birth, and so forth, that might seem preposterous and absurd to you. But a heap of conceits like that have been bred into me from generations back. They run in the blood of every old family in my country, and so, I'm ashamed to say, I hesitated and tried to reason myself into giving her up, but I've had my eyes opened, and I see how little those things amount to, after all. I'm going to marry Necia, Mr. Gale. I'd like to do it the day after tomorrow, Sunday, but she isn't of age yet, and if you object we'll have to wait until November, when she turns eighteen. We'd both like your consent, of course. I'd be sorry to marry her without it. But if you refuse we'll be forced to displease you." He looked up and met the father's gaze steadily.

The other man's lips framed a faint smile.

"We'll see. I wish to God I'd had your decision when I was your age. This story would be different and easier to tell." He waited a moment, then settled to his self appointed task. "I was mining at the time up in the mother lode country of California, which was the frontier then, pretty much as this is now, only we had better things to eat. I was one of the first men into a camp named Chandon—helped to build it, in fact—and got hold of some ground that looked real good. It was hard mining, however, and, being poor, I was still gripping my drill and hammer after the town had grown up.

"A woman came out from the east—Vermont it was—and schoolteaching was her line of business, only she hadn't been raised to it, and this was her first clatter at the game. Her folks died and left her up against it, I gathered from what little she told me—sort of an old story, I guess, and usual, too, only for her. She was plumb unusual."

He seemed to ponder this a moment and then resumed:

"It don't make any difference to you how I first saw her and how I began to forget that anything else in the world was worth having but her. I'd lived in the woods all my life, as I said, and knew more about birds and bugs and bees than I did about women. I hadn't been broke proper and didn't know how to act with them, but I laid out to get this girl, and I did fairly well. There's something wild in every woman that needs to be tamed, and it isn't like the wildness that runs in wood critters. You can win that over by gentleness, but you have to take it away from a woman. Every live thing that couldn't talk was my friend, but I made the mistake of courting my own kind the same way, not knowing that when two of any species mate the male must rule. I was too gentle. Even so, I reckon I'd have won out only for another man. Dan Bennett was his name—the kind that dumb animals hate, and—well, that takes his measure. His range adjoined mine, and, though I'd never seen him, I heard stories now and then—the sort of tales you can't tell to a good woman—so it worried me when I heard of his attentions to this girl. Still, I thought she'd surely find him out and recognize the kind of fellow he was; but, Lord, a woman can't tell a man from a dog, and there wasn't any one to warn her.

"This Bennett came from the town below, where he ran a saloon and a brace game or two; but, being as he rode into our camp and out again in the night and as I didn't drink nor listen to the music of the little rolling ball, why, we never met even after he began coming to Chandon. Understand, I wasn't too good for those amusements. I just didn't happen to hanker after them, for I was living with the image of the little schoolma'am in my mind, and that destroyed what bad habits I'd formed.

"It was along in the early spring that she began to see I had notions about her, but my d—d backwardness wouldn't let me speak, and, in addition, I was getting closer to ore every shot at the mine and was holding off until I could lay both myself and my gold mine at her feet and ask her to take the two of us, so if one didn't pan out the other might. But it seemed like I'd never get into pay. The closer I got the harder I worked, and, of course, the less I saw of her, likewise the oftener Bennett came. I reckon no man ever worked like I did—two shifts a day, eighteen hours, with six to sleep. The skin came off of my hands, and I staggered when I came out into the daylight. At last I struck it, and still I waited awhile longer till I could be sure. Then I went down to my little shack and put on my other clothes. I remember I'd gone so thin that they hung loose, and my palms were so raw I had hard work handling the buttons and got my shirt all bloody, for I'd been in the drift forty hours without sleep and breathing powder smoke till my knees buckled and wabbled under me. To this day the smell of stale powder smoke makes a woman of me, but that morning I sang, for I was going for my bride, and the world was brighter than it has ever been for eighteen years. The little schoolhouse was closed, at which I remembered that the term was over. I'd been living underground for weeks and lost track of the days, so that I had to count them up on my fingers. It took me a long time, for I was pretty tired in my head, but when I'd figured it out I went on to where she was boarding.

"The woman of the place came to the door, a Scotchwoman. She had a mole on her chin, I remember, a brownish black mole with three hairs in it. She wore an apron, too, that was kind of checkered, and three buttons were open at the neck of her dress. I recall a lot more of little things about her, though the rest of what happened is rather dreamy.

"I asked for Merridy, and she told me she'd gone away—gone with Bennett the night before, while I was coughing blood from the powder smoke; that they were married in the front room and that the bride looked beautiful. She had cried a bit on leaving Chandon and—and—that was about all. I counted the buttons on the Scotchwoman's waist eight or ten times, and by and by she asked if I was sick. But I wasn't. She was a kind hearted woman, and I'd been to her house a good deal, so she asked me to come in and rest. I wasn't tired, so I went away and climbed back up to the little shack and the mine that I hated now.

"I turned into a kind of hermit after that, and I wasn't good to associate with. Men got so they shunned me, and I knew they told strange stories, because I heard them whisper when I went to the stores for grub once a month.

"From time to time I heard of her, but the news, instead of gladdening me, as it would have gladdened some men, wrung out what bits of suffering were left in me, and I fairly ached for her. Nobody comes to see clearer than a woman deceived, so it didn't take her long to find out the kind of man Bennett was. He wasn't like her at all, and the reason he had courted her so hotly was just that he had had everything that rightly belongs to a man like him and had sickened of it, so he wanted her because she was clean and pure and different, and, realizing that he couldn't get her any other way, he had married her. But she was a treasure no bad man could appreciate, and so he tired quickly, even before the little one came.

"When I heard that she had borne him a daughter I wrote her a letter, which took me a month to compose and which I tore up. One day a story came to me that made me saddle my horse to ride down and kill him—and, mind you, I was a man who made pets of little wild, trusting things. But I knew she would surely send for me when her pain became too great, so I uncinched my gear and hung it up and waited and waited and waited. Three long, endless years I waited, almost within sound of her voice, without a word from her, without a glimpse of her, and every hour of that time went by as slowly as if I had held my breath. Then she called to me, and I went.

"I tell you, I was thankful that day for the fortune that had made me take good care of my horse, for I rode like Death on a windstorm. I rode through the streets of Mesa, where they lived, and past the lights of Bennett's big saloon, where I heard the sound of devil's revelry and a shrill voiced woman singing—a woman the like of which he had tried to make my Merridy. I never skulked or sneaked in those days, and no man ever made me take back roads, so I came up to his house from the front and tied my horse to his gatepost. She heard me on the steps and opened the door.

"'You sent for me,' said I. 'Where is he?' But he had gone away to a neighboring camp and wouldn't be back until morning, at which I felt the way a thief must feel, for I'd hoped to meet him in his own house. I couldn't think very clearly, however, because of the change in her. She was so thin and worn and sad—sadder than any woman I'd ever seen. I'd changed a heap myself. Anyhow that was the first thing she spoke about, and the tears came into her eyes as she breathed:

"'Poor boy! You took it very hard, didn't you?'

"'You sent for me,' said I. 'Which road did he take?'

"'There's nothing you can do,' she answered. 'I sent to make sure that you still love me.'

"'Did you ever doubt it?' said I, at which she began to cry like a woman who has worn out all emotion.

"'Can you feel the same after what I've made you suffer?' she said, and I reckon she must have read the answer in my eyes, for I never was much good at talking, and the sight of her, so changed, had taken the speech out of me, leaving nothing but aches and pains and ashes in its place. When she saw what she wished to know she told me the story—the whole miserable story—that I'd heard enough of to suspect. Why she'd married the other man she couldn't explain herself, except that it was a woman's whim—I had stayed away, and he had come the oftener—part pique and part the man's daredevil fascination.

"'He's a fiend,' she told me. 'I've stood all I can. He'll make a bad woman of me as sure as he will of the little one if I stay on here, so I have decided to go and take her with me.'

"'Where?' said I.

"'Wherever you say,' she answered, and yet I did not understand, not till I saw the look in her eyes. Then as it dawned on me she broke down, for it was a terrible thing for a good woman to offer.

"'It's all for the little girl!' she cried. 'More than her life depends upon it. We must get her away from him.'

"She saw it was her only course and went where her heart was calling."

The lieutenant met the look of appeal in the trader's eyes and nodded to imply his complete understanding and approval.

"We love some women for their goodness, others we love for their frailness, but there never was one who combined the two like her, and now that I knew she loved me I began to believe again there was a God somewhere. I'd never seen the youngster, so she led me in where it was sleeping, and I remember my boots made such a devil of a thumping on the floor that she laid her slim white finger on her lips and smiled at me. All the fingers in the world began to choke at my throat and all the blood in me commenced to pound at my heart when I looked on that little sleeping kiddie. The tears began to roll out of my eyes, and because they had been dry for four years they scalded like melted metal. That was the only time I ever wept. The sight of her baby did it.

"'I love her already,' I whispered, 'and I'll spend my life making her happy and making a lady of her,' which clinched what wavering doubt the mother had, and she began to plan quickly, the fear coming on her of a sudden that our scheme might fail. I was for riding away with both of them that night, back through the streets of Mesa and up into the hills, where I'd have held them single handed against man or devil, but she wouldn't hear of it.

"'We must go away,' she said, 'a long way from here, where the world won't find us and the little one can grow to womanhood without knowing. She must never learn who her father was or what her mother did. We will start all over, you and I and the baby, and forget. Do you love me well enough to do it?'

"I uttered a cry and took her in my arms, the arms that had ached for her all those years. Then I kissed her for the first time."

The old man tried to light his pipe, which had gone out, but his fingers shook so that he dropped the match.

AN ENGLISH CUSTOM.

Five O'clock Tea Drinking Now an American Institution.

THE UP TO DATE COZY.

What More Grewsome Than a Half Cold Cup of the Beverage Whose Metier Is to Cheer!—How the Trouble May Be Overcome.

The tea cozy, like many more distinctly English things and like the very habit of tea drinking, has found its way to America. It has been among us a long time, but has never found favor here as generally as it has in England. There the house may scarcely be found that does not possess its tea cozies as surely as it does its teapots, which is conclusive.

Throughout England and Scotland the tea drinking habit is so firmly established, and with it the cozy, that it prevails in the palace, where tea is served with all possible elegance; in the simplest household, where it is brought to the busy matron in her sewing room, and even in the hovel a teapot simmers perpetually on the rickety stove. Perhaps only in this last and poorest dwelling is the tea cozy missing.

EAST INDIAN EMBROIDERY.

We serve tea, of course, but without the frequency of the English and rarely with her cozies, although the cozy habit is as comfortable as it sounds, for what is more grewsome than a cup of half chilled tea on a shivery day? Even porch tea should be piping hot.

The cosy is made of oriental work in high colors of East Indian embroidery and even of Irish lace. Many are embroidered in our usual stitches. The English cozy is frequently done with great elaboration on a bright red satin background, it being the habit to use certain unlaundered articles for dining room use. It is more in keeping with our American table furnishings to make the cozy of embroidered linen and with the outside cover detachable.

The regular tea cozy is fashioned of cotton in the old time shape and with varied outside coverings, but usually lined with thin silk and having a cord around the edges arranged to form a handle at the top. One very important feature, so often forgotten, is the tacking up of the inside silk lining to prevent its catching on the teapot handle or spout and pulling out in an ungainly way, if not upsetting the afternoon tea.

AN EASTER GIFT.

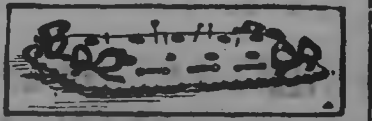
Something Dainty and Attractive in Pincushiondom.

One of the prettiest pincushions that has been seen in many a day is made of two pieces of pique or linen, buttonholed on the edge and laced over the cushion with ribbon. Nothing could be simpler to make or more attractive when finished for a dainty gift to give a friend at Eastertide.

To make the embroidered cushion transfer the rose design given on this page to a piece of linen by means of carbon paper. Buttonhole the edge, do the roses with a plain satin stitch, the leaves long and short stitch, the stems Kensington outline stitch and the center of the flowers French knots.

The embroidery may be all in one color or the flowers pink or yellow and green leaves with darker green stems. The ribbon should match the flowers.

The cushion is very dainty when made of white pique, with dots embroidered in pink with pink ribbon or blue dots and blue ribbon. This is unusual and is as pretty a pincushion as any one might wish. It is shown in the sketch.



PIQUE CUSHION WITH DOT EMBROIDERY.

Either the embroidered or the pique cushion may be laundered and should be kept daintily immaculate.

The edge of the undercover is to be buttonholed. Holes may be worked for the ribbon. Lay the embroidered cover over the cushion and the plain one under it and run the ribbon through the holes.

If desired a little sachet may be put in with the filling of the cushion.

The Kitchen Sink.

The up to date kitchen sink is such a dainty affair nowadays that it needs some kind of protection to prevent chipping and other ills incidental to dishwashing. Rubber mats for fitting the bottom of the sink may be bought. They are most convenient.

They come in different sizes for from $1.25 upward.

Wooden racks for the sink, upon which dishes may be drained, are cheaper and answer the purpose of the rubber mat to a certain extent.

A FLOWER LEGEND.

How the Myosotis Came to Be Called Forgetmenot.

Dr. A. F. Thomson communicated to Mills' "History of Chivalry" the following romantic account of the origin of the popular name, forgetmenot, of the favorite little flower myosotis: "Two lovers were loitering on the margin of a lake on a fine summer's evening when the maiden espied some of the flowers of myosotis growing on the water close to the bank of an island at some distance from the shore. She expressed a desire to possess them, when the knight, in the true spirit of chivalry, plunged into the water and, swimming to the spot, cropped the wished for plant, but his strength was unable to fulfill the object of his achievement, and, feeling that he could not regain the shore, although very near it, he threw the flowers upon the bank, and, casting a last affectionate look upon his ladylove, he cried 'Forget me not!' and was buried in the waters. As the world insists upon a reason, this story is as good as another, but the worthy knight must have been sadly out of his element not to have been able to return from a bank on which his mistress could discern so minute a blossom, unless, indeed, we suppose him to have been clad in armor, which was a habiliment ill adapted for a lover by land or water."

A Frontier Vocalist.

Among the flotsam and jetsam of humanity who are waiting in Prince Rupert for the gamble in lands is one who is beloved of all. His only known name is Texas, and he comes from Heaven knows where. Texas has a weakness for firewater, but he certainly can sing.

Prince Rupert would lose half its present individuality without him. From his shack at night come strains of the sweetest music, for Texas is a musician in the fullest sense of the word. The voice of Texas can make his hearers feel exactly as he wishes, and when he sings the Bohemian Girl all the flaps of the shacks are gently raised, and everyone listens in the dark. Men wander out of the hotels and saunter to shacktown for half-an-hour because Texas is singing. They forget, for that half-hour, that they have been up against it, and when they turn to go back to their hotels they are treading on roses strewn by Texas. Sometimes, when Texas sings there is a row of Massot Indians lying amongst the trees on the outskirts of the woods. They have perhaps come over from their island during the afternoon to sell native jewelry, or with a canoe load of halibut, and Texas has promised to sing if they will wait over. And do they wait? Why, they would wait till the chill of dawn, and paddle home in a sea gale with the blackest shadows hanging over them, rather than miss hearing a song from Texas.

Boys In the Pulpit.

Galt, April 26.—Four boys of the West End Y.M.C.A., Toronto, Harry Cook, Roy McGregor, Norman Neilson and Charles Sharpe, yesterday spoke at a mass meeting in Knox Sunday School on "How, Why, When and Where to Become a Christian."

Hotelman Shot.

Vancouver, B.C., April 26.—T. A. Cathcart, proprietor of the Barnard Castle Hotel in the west end, was shot Saturday night by a man, who has since disappeared. He is in a serious condition.

Their Eyes Examined.

St. Thomas, April 26.—Assistant Superintendent Snow of the M.C.R., and Dr. Parker, the road's oculist, were in the city on Saturday, examining a class of 38 engineers. These engineers, from all branches of the service and from all parts of the Canada division, failed to pass with a clear record in the eye test, and were all ordered to lay off until they had gone through a test at the hands of the assistant superintendent and Dr. Parker.

"Father John" Resurrected.

St. Petersburg, April 26.—Hundreds of persons in this city, chiefly of the prosperous class, have been induced to believe that Father John of Cronstadt, who died last New Year's Day, was resurrected at Easter. The police have arrested more than fifty self-styled Johannites, whose order has now been expelled from the city. Their aim is to establish a miraculous personality for their former master.

Canada Life Bill Again.

Ottawa, April 26.—Saturday was the last day upon which it was necessary to advertise the Canada Life Bill in The Canada Gazette, and to-day the bill will again be before the standing orders committee and if regular, will go to the House in the afternoon.

VALUABLE ADDITIONS TO THE VICTORIA MUSEUM

Domestic Utensils From the Far North—Collection of Mounted Birds—Fyles of Newspapers of a Decade Ago.

The Historical Society has recently received several interesting and valuable additions to its collection in the Victoria Museum, Inverlea Park. From Mr. George Boucher, an officer of the Hudson Bay Company, a shipment was received, consisting of Eskimo domestic utensils. The largest of these is a rectangular stone box which seems to have been chiselled out of solid stone and has been used for cooking food. This, as well as other articles in the shipment, may be seen in the Geological Room.

Miss Wallis, formerly of Peterborough, but now of Paris, France, sent a collection of mounted birds of brilliant plumage, a feather vase of very ancient appearance, a beautifully worked apron and an embroidered scarf, the work of peasants of the south of France.

From Mrs. Dennistoun the society has received the bound fyles of the Toronto Globe of 1873, 1874, 1878, 1879 and 1880; also, similarly preserved, the fyles of the Toronto Mail of 1874, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880 and 1881, and of the Montreal Gazette for the years 1873, 1874 and 1880. These fyles show that before 1880 the pages of these newspapers were fully one-third larger than at present. On July 1st, 1880, the Globe adopted the smaller sized sheet, and on August 2nd, 1880, the Mail also changed its size.

Mrs. Dennistoun also presented to the society the London Illustrated News of 1855, 1856, 1857 and 1858 in book form. These issues cover the period of the Crimea War and the Indian Mutiny and furnish very interesting reading.

Of the 1,166,126 immigrants who arrived in Canada in the last ten years 819,213 came from Britain and States.

MAN WHO WILL MAKE TWENTY THOUSAND MILE TRIP INTO THE FAR NORTH HAS ORDERED CANOE IN THIS CITY

In a few days the Peterborough Canoe Company will ship to Edmonton, Alta, a special cedar canoe for Henry Vincent Radford, journalist, naturalist, and explorer of New York who will make a twenty thousand mile trip into the far north. Mr. Radford ordered the canoe by telegraph a few days ago and it is being expressed to Edmonton, the express charges alone amounting to $55.

Concerning Mr Radford and his proposed trip the Winnipeg Telegram of recent date says;

"Harry Vincent Radford, journalist, naturalist and explorer of New York city, will take three years to make a twenty thousand mile trip into the land of the far north and he is now in the city on his way to the regions where civilization's comforts are yet unknown.

Mr. Radford will be untrammelled by companions. His task of travel and his work of exploration will be made single handed. Only the Indian and Esquimaux guides are to have a share in his project.

On Tuesday he arrived in the city equipped with seventeen pieces of baggage, a rifle, a shotgun, a stereoscope camera and a kodak, a case of tabloid tea, another of chocolate, still another of malted milk and many others which comprise the necessities of one who would venture an expedition such as his.

Mr. Radford is heading for the country knowing absolutely nothing about it. His quest is but the private enterprise of a traveller, who, he says, wishes to see things as they really are. He does not consider what he is attempting as anything heroic. He decries the idea that the trip is necessarily one of hardship. He will live among the people of the north, and eat, sleep and live as they live, and the comfort, if any, obtained from this will only be supplemented by the stock of provisions and necessaries which he is carrying.

He seeks among his travels to hit the head of Bathurst Inlet. His attention was called to the fact that only one man ever succeeded in this, and that 87 years ago when Sir John Franklin and his party reached this region. Nevertheless he will enlist, if possible competent Esquimaux guides, travel with them, study their language, folk lore and religion, and then in three years, he will be enabled to contrast Esquimaux etiquette with the conventionalities of the Great White Way in New York City.

Radford's idea is to start from Edmonton whence he will drive 170 miles to Lac La Biche. From this point he means to take a snowshoe trip to Fort Resolution a distance of 600 miles with the addition of a 500 mile loop westward from Ft. Smith to look for wood bison. He does not deem that this will be a difficult task and never claimed it was. He only wishes to make a close study of the habits of the animal. Here he says he will have a good opportunity.

From Fort Resolution, Radford will proceed towards Bathurst Inlet in the hope of discovering a new route through to the Arctic ocean by striking the head of the inlet.

He will enter Alaska by the Porcupine and Bell rivers and will follow the Yukon river several hundred miles up stream. Returning down the Yukon to the mouth, Mr Radford will then cross from Nome to the coast of Asia, where he will spend several months, studying native and animal life in that section of the world. Thence he will return along the west coast of Alaska and Canada. During the whole of the trip he will collect zoological specimens for the United States Biological survey, and will also make observations for various other scientific institutions.

Mr. Radford leaves on Monday for Edmonton, from where he will proceed to Fort Resolution

Ninetieth Anniversary of Oddfellowship in America

Yesterday was the ninetieth anniversary of the introduction of Oddfellowship into the continent of America and the day was celebrated by the members of the order all over the continent.

Oddfellowship has an organized existence previous to the 17th century. Thomas Wildey was born in London, England in 1782, and became a member of the order early in life. Coming to America, he founded at Baltimore, Maryland, the first Oddfellow's lodge on this side of the Atlantic on April 26th 1819. The initial meeting attended by five men was held in a room in the Seven Stars Inn, a famous old building which was destroyed by the great Baltimore fire of February 8, 1904. A brick from the famous building is a highly prized relic kept at the Oddfellows' hall, Sun Life building, Sparks street. Wildey died at Baltimore in 1861, an honored citizen of the United States. He had seen his work grow beyond his greatest expectations. Oddfellowship had become a factor in the lives of the people of the two great North American countries. Today the society is the largest on the continent. The principles of "the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," have touched the hearts of the people.

INTRODUCTION IN CANADA

The institution of Oddfellowship in Canada took place at Montreal on August 10th, 1843. Prince of Wales lodge, No 1, was formed, with five members in a garret over a hardware store on St Paul St. Within the next week eighteen gentleman of influence and good standing in the community were admitted and the lodge grew with surprising rapidity. On December 4th of the same year, a second lodge was established. This also prospered and Oddfellowship was soon firmly rooted in the Dominion.

FIRST LODGE IN ONTARIO

The first lodge in Ontario was instituted at Belleville in the summer of 1845. In 1846 a deputation from the Grand Lodge left Montreal and travelled over 800 miles mainly by stage coach. They visited amongst other places Brockville and Kingston, forming strong bodies in both these towns.

An earnest co-worker at Kingston was the late Bro John A Macdonald, who was afterwards to become Canada's illustrious premier. Bro. Macdonald was the first noble grand of Cataraqui lodge, No 10. Continuing, the deputation established lodges at Picton, Cobourg, Peterborough, Port Hope, Toronto, St Catharines, Hamilton and Cornwall. They finished their work and Oddfellowship was strong in "Upper Canada."

SUCCESS FROM THE START

The order in Ontario from its institution has proved a success.

In 1855 the Grand Lodge of Canada West now the Grand Lodge of Ontario was instituted at Brockville. Seven lodges were represented with a membership which appears insignificant beside that of the grand lodge of today, which governs over 825 lodges with a membership which in 1906 was over 35,000. Of the first officers on the Grand Lodge of Ontario there are none alive today. But the foundation for the order which in their wisdom and foresight they laid down, will ever stand as their best monument.

IN ONTARIO

In the province of Ontario there are 400 subordinate lodges of the Order with a total membership of over 40,000. During 1907 there was paid out in relief by Ontario lodges alone the snug amount of $128,808.46, or an average of $352.90 per day. Since the institution of the Grand Lodge of Ontario, up to 1908 the total amount of money paid out in benefits in this province by the Order—and the several Associations allied with it—amounted to $4,215,033.53.

Apart from the financial benefits that are to be derived by its members in case of need, the social and fraternal links in the chain of Oddfellowship are strong and lasting, and serve to bring its brothers closer together in the bonds of Friendship, and Universal Brotherhood. Therein lies its strength and age only welds their chain stronger.

GRAND LODGE OF ONTARIO

This lodge will hold its annual session at Ottawa this year, for the first time in 27 years. When it held its last convention in the Capital City, the Order had only about one third the strength it has at present, while the lodges in Eastern Ontario were very few and in a generally weak condition. Notwithstanding this the rally held there was great, and many old-timers will remember the large crowds which congested in the during Oddfellows' week, in August 1882.

The officers of the Grand Lodge of Ontario for the present term are as follows; Grand Master, A B McBride, Waterloo; Deputy Grand Master, Hon Daniel Derbyshire, Brockville; Grand Warden, S M Thomson, Brantford; Grand Secretary, J B King, Toronto; Grand Treasurer, W J McCormack, Toronto; Grand Representative, W. S Johnston, Toronto; Junior Past Grand Master, R R Britt, Essex; Grand Marshall, C H Mann, Hamilton; Grand Conductor, R D Sloan, Prescott; Grand Guardian, J H Richardson, Picton; Grand Herald, Wm. Henderson, Barrie; Grand Chaplain, Rev J J Haylock, Leamington.

FINEST LOT OF HORSES SEEN IN PETERBOROUGH

Were at Stallion Show on Saturday—Splendid Representatives of Different Breeds—Show a Great Success

The stallion show at the Market Square on Saturday saw the assembly of the finest stallions in the district and a keen interest was displayed by the breeders and farmers. The attendance during the afternoon was a very large one and the exhibition was a most successful one. It was held under the auspices of the West Peterborough Agricultural Society who are to be congratulated upon its success.

For some time past the horsemen of Peterborough and surrounding district have been looking forward to the holding of the show which proved even of greater importance than it was thought it would and the showing of high class horses was a very fine one. Everybody who attended the show commented on this and it was unanimously expressed that such a gathering of thoroughbreds or various breeds had never been seen in Peterborough before.

Congratulations are due the agricultural society for the success of the show and President R H Leary and Secretary Hall were untiring in their efforts.

The prizes were handsome rosettes of red, blue and white, emblematic of first, second and third prizes.

Speakers from elsewhere will be present to address the meeting.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR THE CITY TO SECURE ANOTHER INDUSTRY

MAY BUY THRONE

Young Turks May Let Abdul Hamid Stay for a Price —A Large Sum.

London, April 27.—A Times' special from Vienna says: The Constantinople correspondent of The Nieu Freie Presse was informed at midday by Mahmoud Chevket Pasha that, for the present, the Sultan will not be deposed. He is likely to be retained as nominal ruler until further notice, and will, in the meantime, defray from his private means the cost of the advance of the Macedonian troops upon Constantinople, and make to the Ottoman nation a present of the greater part of his fortune, amounting to some $250,000,000. The walls and barracks of the Yildis Palace will be demolished, and the garrison limited to one company, which will be supplied daily by different regiments.

The Daily Mail has received the following despatch from Constantinople: Parliament met in Stamboul yesterday for the first time since the mutiny on April 13. The session was secret, though it is understood the House considered what measures would be necessary to secure the Sultan's abdication. There was a strong opinion in favor of Yussof Izzedine, the nephew of the Sultan, as Abdul Hamid's successor, but the law of succession cannot be set aside without serious risks. Mehemmed Reshad, the heir-apparent, is an amiable nonentity. Abdul Hamid remains at the palace hopeful that the new trouble will pass and leave him untouched. Though his garrison has surrendered Parliament suspects that a guard a few thousand strong is still hidden in his walled citadel. The palace guns, therefore, remain trained on the Yildis.

MURDEROUS WOMEN HAVE BEEN CAUGHT

St. Petersburg, April 27.—A band of female cut-throats who for many months past have been committing a series of murders, were discovered and arrested Sunday in the village of Kurchino, 30 miles from St. Petersburg.

The principal culprits are a mother and her two daughters, who kept a tavern. Assisted by other women in the village they murdered travelers who stopped at the inn for the night, disfiguring the bodies beyond recognition, and then threw them into a rapidly flowing stream that passed near the inn.

Many of these corpses were found, but the distance of the village was so great that suspicions never centered there.

SENTENCED ON A BIGAMY CHARGE

St. Catharines, April 27.—Walter Blizzard, in custody for several weeks on a charge of bigamy, yesterday reverted his plea of not guilty and was sentenced by Judge Carman to two years in penitentiary.

Blizzard had been relying on the fact that witnesses, particularly Rev. Mr. Gates, who performed his third marriage, had refused to come to give evidence. It was only when the crown attorney had taken out a commission to have the evidence as to Blizzard's three marriages taken at Niagara Falls, and Lockport, that he gave up.

Ratepayers of Peterborough Will Be Asked to Sanction Entering Into An Agreement With "Purity Ware, Limited," a Concern That Will Locate in This City.

Will Locate Factory Here and Employ from 100 to 500 Hands--Building Will Be 500 by 200 Feet--By-law Will Be Submitted to Ratepayers on June 1st--The Terms of the Agreement.

On Tuesday, June 1st, the ratepayers of Peterborough will vote upon a bylaw which if carried, will bring to this city a large factory which will employ from 100 to 500 hands. Purity Ware Limited is the name of the concern which proposes to locate here. It is a Canadian company but backed by a very strong American concern. Purity Ware Limited will manufacture all kinds of enamel ware galvanized iron ware and range galvanized boilers. They will erect a factory 200 feet by 500 feet with the front part two storeys high. They will employ one hundred hands for the first year and at least 150 hands for the next nineteen years.

Negotiations for bringing the factory here have been in progress for several months. Alderman Gillespie, the chairman and the other members of the Manufacturers' committee have spared neither time nor effort to secure the industry for the city and are to be congratulated on bringing the bargain to a point where only the endorsation of the ratepayers is necessary to make the proposition a reality.

Representatives of Purity Ware Limited were present at a special meeting of the city council last night when the bylaw was given its first and second readings. It was decided to submit the bylaw to the ratepayers on June 1st.

The new factory if the ratepayers endorse the bylaw, will be located on the property known as the old race track, located on the east side of the Otonabee river and north of where the locks bridge touches the eastern shore. The factory will be alongside the Belleville branch of the Grand Trunk Railway and will be within the corporation. The site is considered an excellent one.

WHAT THE COMPANY IS TO DO.

The bylaw which the council gave its first two readings last night provides in part as follows;

Purity Ware Limited of Peterborough is to erect a factory building 200 feet by 500 feet. Part of the building will be two storeys but the greater portion will be only one, but built so solidly that a second or third storey can be put on. The cost to be at least $50,000. A paid up working capital of $100,000 is to be raised. The company is to employ 100 hands the first year and 150 hands for the next nineteen years. On condition that the full number of hands are not employed the company is to pay for the site in proportion to the number that are employed.

The city is to hold a mortgage of $50,000 upon the building, site and fixed machinery for 20 years and are to have one member upon the board of directors during that time.

The company to have the option to pay off the entire loan at any time during the 20 years.

THE CITY'S SHARE

On condition that the Purity Ware Limited perform their part of the contract the city is to give a free site of ten acres of land; give exemption from taxes except school and local improvement taxes, for ten years; to loan $50,000 for 20 years; at 4 per cent. per annum to be paid back in ten equal payments after the first ten years. The city to pay over one half of the loan or $25,000, when the factory is completed and the second half when the machinery is installed many cases a revised version is Providing the bylaw carries and in any way the company does not proceed with the work of construction, they have deposited $250 to pay for the cost of submitting the bylaw.

THE NEGOTIATIONS.

It was early in March that the Manufacturers' Committee first heard of the organization of the proposed new manufacturing company. Ald. Gillespie lost no time in getting into communication with the proprietors, Messrs McFarlane, Edwards and Noble all of Toronto. Arrangements were made for a meeting of the promoters with the Manufacturers' Committee. The gentlemen came here and were shown about the city. Several sites were visited and the visitors were very favorably impressed.

They were asked to make a proposition to the city. This was done, and a special committee consisting of Aldermen Gillespie, Hicks and Turner and City Clerk Armstrong, went to Toronto, where a second session was held. At this meeting the name of the New York firm which is behind the new company was learned, and arrangements were made for a trip to New York city to interview the management of that company. Ald. Gillespie and City Clerk Armstrong for the city, and Ald. Bradburn for the Board of trade, went to New York, where they saw the management of the company, and were shown through part of the immense factory located at Brooklyn. This company receives the very highest rating from the banks and financial agencies, their capital and reserves totalling several millions.

The local representatives secured an agreement from the New York company to supply the necessary machinery, which is to be valued by an independent valuator at $100,000 to $150,000, the company to take stock in the new business for that amount. In return for this the city of Peterborough was to make certain concessions, and these are embodied in the by-law. Neither the city nor the New York company are bound to expend one dollar until the Canadian company has $100,000 subscribed and paid up working capital.

Since the New York trip the whole question has hinged on a satisfactory agreement being made between the city and the Canadian company. With this end in view several sessions have been held. The matter was submitted to the committee of the whole council and endorsed by them and the Manufacturers' Committee was authorised to go ahead and complete the contract. The manufacturers' Committee and the Canadian company have reached an agreement which is satisfactory to all parties concerned.

AT THE COUNCIL MEETING.

When the council met last night Messrs. McFarlane, Noble and Edwards, of Toronto, representatives of Purity Ware, Limited, were present.

Ald. Gillespie moved, seconded by Ald. Duncan, that the by-law to aid Purity Ware, Limited, be given its first and second readings. This was carried.

Mayor Rush presided and all the aldermen were present except Ald. Hicks, Bradburn and Morrow.

SOME INFORMATION.

For the information of the ratepayers it may be said that the new industry is a most important one. A market has already been established in Canada for the goods that will be manufactured, and a large portion of the expert trade will be looked after by the Peterborough factory, while the local market is rapidly increasing. The goods to be manufactured are all kinds of kitchen and other utensils, as well as all kinds of galvanized iron wares. The employees will be skilled and will demand good wages.

The company's architects have already been busy and have surveyed the property and have made the preliminary plans for the building. They were submitted to the council and approved.

TO CARRY THE BY-LAW.

To carry the by-law it will be necessary to have in its favor two-thirds of those entitled to vote on money by-laws.

LARGE ROLLING MILLS WILL BE ERECTED IN CONNECTION WITH PURITY WARE, LIMITED

At the Council meeting last night, Mr. Noble, of Purity Ware, Limited, stated it was also proposed to erect large rolling mills in connection with the Purity Ware Factory. These will be located across the Grand Trunk tracks. The rolling mills will be for the manufacture of block tin and sheet steel. If the by-lay is carried the rolling mills will be gone ahead with without any assistance from the city, except a fair assessment.

The building for the rolling mills would be at least double the size of the Purity Ware buildings. The produce of the mills would be something new in Canada. Although there is a large quantity of sheet steel and block tin used it is all imported.

Mr. Noble also informed the Review that his company fully intended to commence operations on both factories this year, and once they got started they will be rushed to completion, as they are anxious to get their machinery going and their goods on the market.

INQUEST AT HAMILTON IS POSTPONED

Kinrade Enquiry Held Over Pending Decision of Court---Writ of Certiorari Issued

Toronto, April 27.—By consent of the crown, Justice Teetzel yesterday granted the application of George Lynch-Staunton, K.C., acting for the Kinrade family, for a writ of certiorari.

"I direct that a writ of certiorari should be issued," said Justice Teetzel, "reserving all the objections offered by the crown returnable to the Divisional Court, which is now sitting. This may mean an adjournment of the inquest at Hamilton, but it cannot be helped."

To-morrow is appointed for the hearing, the object of the writ being to quash the warrant issued by Coroner Anderson for the attendance of Florence Kinrade as a material witness at the inquest on the death of her sister. The inquest, which was to have been resumed last night, will not be proceeded with before Thursday evening.

Mr. Staunton took the bull by the horns in addressing Justice Teetzel in support of his application. He spoke with considerable heat, which increased as he proceeded.

"No language can describe the infamy of those proceedings. If there is any power in the law to protect the rights of the citizen, it is called for to-day. The coroner sits there at the inquest and does absolutely nothing. We might just as well have one of the policemen in charge of the case there.

"The girl faints twice in the stand. She has sworn on either examination that she has told all she knows and the exact truth. My lord, they asked her things that should make the men there hide their heads in shame.

"They asked her questions that would tend to destroy all the character of every member of the Kinrade family."

It is reported that this bridge was condemned last fall, and timber to repair it was provided and on the ground.

To Prevent Desertions.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 27.—Captains of the fleet held here by the ice blockade have adopted a unique plan to prevent desertions by members of the crew or attempts of unionists to cause trouble. Instead of tying up at the piers, many of the boats have anchored in the middle of the river and no sailors are given shore leave. The boats tied up at the piers permit no visitors aboard. One captain has a big smallpox placard exposed to prevent intrusiveness.

A SENSATION IS EXPECTED

In Connection With the Kinrade Murder Case Within the Next Few Days -- House Searched

Special to the Review.

Hamilton, April 27.—Pinkerton detectives yesterday searched the Kinrade home, and it is understood they secured the strongest kind of evidence upholding the information learned in the south.

It is expected there will be startling developments in the case within the next few days.

THE HAND ORGAN AND THE CANARY

The man with the handorgan is with us again. This morning a foreigner appeared on the streets with his instrument of torture, but the monkey was missing from his customary place on the shoulders of the musician. Instead a canary, which appeared to be as tame as his predecessor, was perched on the organ and for a nickle produced a paper from a well filled box which was supposed to tell the fortune of the one who produced the necessary piece of silver. But business did not appear to be coming the way of the musician and his bird, as the people in this city know their fortune probably far better than printer's ink can tell them.

At the Sydney collieries 625 special constables have been enrolled.

MATHESON BECOMES PRIMATE AND HAMILTON ARCHBISHOP

Elections Held by House of Bishops of Anglican Church Result in Appointment of Archbishop of Rupert's Land as Primate—Bishop of Ottawa Becomes Archbishop and Metropolitan of Canada.

Toronto, April 27.—The Church of England in Canada is no longer without an official head, and the ecclesiastical province of Canada again has its archbishop.

At the meeting of the house of bishops of the general synod yesterday afternoon the Most Rev. Samuel Pritchard Matheson, Archbishop of Rupert's Land, was elected primate of all Canada, and representative on the general consultative body of the Lambeth conference. Rev. Canon Phair of St. John's College, Winnipeg, was appointed secretary of the house of bishops in the place of the Bishop of Toronto, resigned. Thirteen bishops were present at the election: Archbishop Hamilton of Ottawa, Archbishop Matheson of Rupert's Land, Bishop Pinkham of Calgary, Bishop DuMoulin of Niagara, Bishop Thornloe of Algoma, Bishop Mills of Ontario, Bishop Williams of Huron, Bishop Stringer of Yukon, Bishop Holmes of Athabasca, Bishop Farthing of Montreal, Bishop Sweeny of Toronto. No action was taken in regard to the appointment of a Canadian bishop for China.

In the morning the house of bishops of the province of Canada met and elected Rt. Rev. Charles Hamilton, Bishop of Ottawa, as Archbishop of Ottawa and Metropolitan of the Province of Canada. Eight bishops were present, the Bishops of Montreal, Ontario, Algoma, Niagara, Toronto, Huron, Ottawa and Bishop Reeve. Rev. W. M. Loucks, rector of St. Matthew's, Ottawa, was elected secretary and registrar of the house of bishops in the stead of the Bishop of Toronto. The house adopted a resolution of sympathy with the family of the late Archbishop of Toronto. The Archbishop of Ottawa was appointed chairman of the board of examiners of divinity degrees.

Immediately preceding the election Holy Communion was celebrated in St. James' Cathedral, most of the bishops being present.

The new primate is a native of Manitoba. Born in 1853 and educated in his native province he has filled the posts of canon and dean of the cathedral at Winnipeg, coadjutor bishop to Archbishop Macrae, and since 1905 Archbishop of Rupert's Land. He came of Highland ancestry.

Archbishop Hamilton of Ottawa has been successively rector of St. Peter's and later of St. Matthew's, Quebec, Bishop of Niagara, and first Bishop of Ottawa, since the setting apart of that diocese in 1896.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Daylight Bill Advanced.

Ottawa, April 27.—The daylight saving bill was passed yesterday morning by the special committee dealing with it, and reported favorably to the House. Whether it gets through this session, however, is doubtful.

The act, which does not apply to the Yukon Territory, now provides that from 2 o'clock a.m. in the first Sunday of November of next year, the time shall be one hour in advance of the ordinary standard time now in use, and shall be standard time. It is intended to come into force in 1910.

Nineteen Boards of Trade have concurred in the proposal, while seven municipalities protest against the innovation.

Deputy Minister Butler receives no extra compensation, but Messrs. Pottinger, Tiffin and Brady got a salary of $6,000 each and will devote all their time to the work of the board.

Mine Operators Will Wait.

New York, April 27.—It was announced yesterday that the meeting of the anthracite coal operators, fixed for to-day in this city, had been postponed subject to call. No reason is given, but it is supposed that this action is due to the holding of a convention by the miners at Scranton to-day.

Falls From 24th Storey.

New York, April 27.—Falling 350 feet from the 24th storey of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.'s skyscraper on Madison Square yesterday, Thomas Mortimore, 43 years old, was instantly killed. Hundreds of people in Madison Square were watching him at work and saw him fall.

Woman's Body in Niagara.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, April 27.—The body of a woman, with the head and arms missing, was picked up by some fishermen on the lake shore near the Four-Mile Pond yesterday. The body apparently has been in the water for some time and bears evidence of having come over the falls.

COULDN'T ANSWER

Sir Wilfrid Could Not Say Where Canada Stands Regarding Hecate Strait.

Ottawa, April 27.—R. L. Borden brought to the attention of the Government in the House yesterday a statement in the press that on several occasions the U. S. Government had applied, through the British consul at Washington, for a statement of Canada's contention in regard to jurisdiction over Hecate Strait, but without avail.

Sir Wilfrid said that there had been some correspondence on the subject, but he was not in a position to state Canada's position in the matter.

Hecate Strait, which separates Queen Charlotte Island from the mainland of British Columbia, was the scene of the recent seisure of an American vessel for fishing in territorial waters of Canada.

While private bills were under discussion R. L. Borden insisted that it was time Parliament should lay down some principle in regard to the renewal of lapsed patents.

Following this suggestion E. M. Macdonald argued that power should be vested in the Minister of Agriculture as commissioner of patents to deal with such cases after the manner of the new practice in England, which had given every satisfaction, namely, by enforcing the manufacturing clause in the case of all foreign patents.

In reply to a question by Mr. Macdonnel as to the position in which the French treaty stands at present, the Finance Minister said.

"The treaty of 1907 was approved in due course by the Parliament of Canada, and also by the Chamber of Deputies of France, but when it reached the French Senate there was considerable delay owing to the strong opposition among the French Senators, who claimed that the treaty was too favorable to Canada. After considerable delay and negotiations a supplementary treaty was entered into which has been laid before this House. That, as well as the original treaty, has been approved by the French Senate, but it requires yet to be approved by the Chamber of Deputies.

"We have delayed bringing forward a resolution to confirm the supplementary treaty because we have decided to await the action of the French Chamber of Deputies. That body adjourned for several weeks, but I anticipate that at an early date the treaty will receive its approval, and at the same time steps will be be taken to present to this Parliament a measure for the approval of the new treaty."

A question by Major Curry elicited from the Minister of Militia a number of technical points regarding the respective dimensions of the Ross and Lee-Enfield rifles. In regard to the muzzle velocity of the two arms the Minister said it was about the same in each, approximately 2,000 feet per second with service ammunition.

In reply to Mr. Ames, the Finance Minister said that the total cost, paid by way of interest upon the temporary loans, amounting to $101,000,000, made during the last twelve and three-quarter years, had been $1,066,006. For the previous corresponding period the total amount paid for interest on the sum of $136,500,000 was $1,717,648.

Replying to Mr. Taylor (New Westminster) as to the report that laborers from Siberia are being imported to work on the G.T.P. Railway, Mr. Lemieux said: "The Labor Department has received no report in this matter. The only notice we have had of it is the mention that was made of it in the House."

Another question by Mr. Taylor elicited the information that on March 28, 1907, just previous to his escape from the New Westminster penitentiary, a postoffice order for $100 addressed to Bill Miner, the noted convict, had been received at the penitentiary. It had been sent by J. C. Budd of Princeton, B.C., and was received by Deputy Warden Bourke. It was deposited in the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster in the savings bank account. Previously there had been on deposit to Miner's credit $49.10, taken from him when he was received into the penitentiary. The Minister of Justice said that the possession of money was of no advantage to a life prisoner in the way of providing him with luxuries or otherwise.

A POET'S LIFE ENDS IN POVERTY

London, April 27.—The poet William Watson, in a fiery letter to The Times, charging the British nation with being uninterested and unmoved by the tragedy of John Davidson's disappearance, declares that noted poet has died because he could not make a living.

"One thing at least is certain," says Mr. Watson, "his blood is upon us as if we had slain him with our very hands. He goes to an unknown grave in the last bitterness of despair. It is another addition to the long list of tragedies which began with Spenser, and did not end with the death of Chatterton."

THE KINRADE CASE

We congratulate our evening contemporary upon its editorial on the Kinrade case, which it treats with a vigour altogether suitable to the present state of that case. Florence Kinrade is being "sweated" in the witness box, not by detectives but by counsel for the Crown, surely an altogether unheard of proceeding. If the girl is to be tried let her be tried in the usual way, but the spectacle of a witness being used to pave the way for her conviction, if it be found possible to try her, in the future, is foreign to British fair play, as well as procedure.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY

For the fourth week in succession we record general public dissatisfaction with the delay of the Ottawa Government in providing for rural mail delivery in the County of Peterborough. The Conservative policy of helping Canada by helping the people and not by feeding to repletion capitalists and fortune hunters was at first ridiculed. Seeing that the people listened and believed the supporters of the Government cried out in alarm that they, too, would provide rural mail delivery which the Examiner had guyed, jeered at and anathematised as a silly and impractically expensive project, etc., so long as it was merely a Conservative plank. Of course the G. T. P. was not expensive! But then it served a political purpose. Rural mail delivery was merely doing the public a public good, which is the last thing to be thought of. So what have we in Peterborough? Nothing. In a few places in Canada—very few—rural mail delivery is under weigh but in Peterborough there is nothing—not even enough to hang a Grit bluff on. The farmers of the county of Peterborough are just as much entitled to rural mail delivery and any other accommodation as the farmers of the far west.

THE DAYLIGHT BILL

The object of the "daylight bill" is to have us follow the sun in our activities. In this way we use all the daylight instead of ignoring or wasting some of it, as at present. Although this project has numerous advantages, it is questionable if we can change our time of rising and going to bed every little while to enable us to follow the sun closely. It will, ten to one, produce nervous prostration, or some other variety of breakdown. It is argued that nature sanctions it in the case of birds and animals. Nature suggests a lot of things to birds and animals that are plainly not intended for us. The lion and his kind stays out all night and sleeps abed in the day-time. Snakes do likewise. Also mosquitoes. No doubt it would be foolish to work all night and sleep all day, but at the same time nature above all things seems to dislike irregular habits both as to meals and times of going to bed and rising. Fads of the same sort have been tried from time immemorial and in a period when night shifts are as common as day shifts we can't see that it makes very much difference.

THE FISHERMAN'S LOT

Dr. Grenfell said that the lot of the independent fisherman in Labrador was better than that of the artisan in a large industrial centre like Montreal. After talking of the natural resources of Labrador, some of which, declared Dr. Grenfell, surpassed those of the richest parts of the Yukon, the lecturer went on to tell of his work among the deep sea fishermen, whom he declared to be a simple, generous, hardy race of men whose worst fault was drunkenness. He said that the dangers of the sea were great, but caused greater damage to the boats than loss of life.—Montreal Star.

Dr. Grenfell is thoroughly well acquainted with the lot of the city man and of the country man, from London the great to Labrador the less. He gives it as his mature opinion that the fisherman of Labrador has a better lot than the artisan of Montreal. How would the laborer's lot compare, then, if the artisan's is poorer? The salvation of humanity as a body of men, women and children, lies in getting back to the freedom, open air and natural condition of the land. The glamour of the city and the lights of its streets have dragged the "people of the plains" from their natural course of life. Life in a modern city with its low pay, high pressure and higher prices is a veritable horror for a body of the people who have little or nothing to spare. Those who are first to feel it are the women and children —the mothers of the rising generation and the rising generation itself. Coming disaster is plainly written on their foreheads. Yet the land cries out for cultivators. The stream and woodland and hamlet, the clear sky and the fresh air are calling with all the strength of nature to nature's children and yet the artificial heat of the city outbids it. The voice of nature is lost in the roar of traffic and the din of cheap amusements. Truly we have lost our bearings like wild birds in the night. The fault lies primarily in our system of education which though called "nature study" makes the study of nature repellant and distasteful. For the progress of science and mankind it is absolutely necessary but as a system of national education results prove it to have warped us in the wrong direction.

BILLY, BILLY BUSTER!

Billy, Billy, Buster! who speaks first! is a time-honoured question addressed to a mythical youth by the name of Buster. The Liberal uproar in the city of Quebec is over an entirely different question. It is "Who goes first!" there. It is, of course, a well-known fact that Liberal title-hunters are radicals until they reach the first rung, after which they become more and more lovers of "tin-pot titles" until they reach a point at which they can look down patronizingly on their former comrades when their joy is supreme and the reward of the blessed attained. Not all Liberals, of course, are like these, but many of them are, especially those who, like Sir Wilfrid Laurier, proclaim themselves "democrat to the hilt" before putting on the fustian of a new dignity. Of such as in their secret hearts love even the tin-pot alone, because it is near to the title we have many, also. If there is any way to get up for their benefit, a set of honour at a little dance, or to secure for them a position of patronage at a picture post card competition, or the like, it is at once taken possession of. The scouts sally forth. The "glory" is won. The less they fit the more determined are they to wear the honours which, if they do not come with coaxing, are dragged to the feet of the aspirants, who, like the dragon in the play, sit up for appearance sake and cry at intervals "I'm democrat to the hilt! The hilt referred to is no doubt the hilt of the tin sword, for although a steel one is cheap enough, yet, since it is only "show" that they are after—the tin one will do.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The city fathers are to be congratulated upon the highly successful sale of the city's debentures.

Sir Hiram Maxim thinks that guns will be of little avail against airships and aeroplanes since they can attack in the dark.

Rural mail delivery is with cheap rural telephones the one thing necessary to the farmers' happiness. It saves him a lot of money and time and saves much wear and tear upon the "buggies" besides giving more time for useful work at home. Why has the promise of the Laurier government in Peterborough county not been made good?

CANADIAN MAGAZINE

The Canadian Magazine for May is a most interesting number. The first article in point of timeliness is entitled "Kaiser Wilhelm; His Opportunity and Failure." It affords a splendid conception of the present situation in Europe. "Ontario's Outworn Police System," is a vigorous criticism by John Verner McAree, a writer who apparently knows whereof he writes. "Montreal, A Great Commercial Centre," is contributed by John S. MacLean and is finely illustrated. There are other good illustrated articles —"Hebert the Sculptor," by Gustave Dutaud; "Subduing the Sockeye," by Harold Sands and "Making Cheese in Switzerland," by Y. P. Sumner. Miss L. M. Montgomery author of "Anne of Green Gables" contributes a story of the supernatural entitled "The Return of Hester." A comprehensive appreciation of the music of the season, particularly in Toronto, is given by Miss Katherine Hale and there is as well an article by Arthur Hawkes, entitled "Why I am a Suffragette," and nature sketches by Suzanne Marny and F. M. Kelly, a clever character sketch by James P Haverson, with poetry from John Boyd, E. M. Yeoman, A. Clare Griffin, Douglas Roberts and Charlotte Beaumont Jarvis.

NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL MEETING

The Township Council met on Saturday, April 24th, in the township treasurer's office in Peterborough. All the members were present. The Reeve John Brown, Esq., in the chair. The minutes of the two former meetings were read and confirmed. Mr. J. Fowler, sr., attended the meeting and addressed the Council, Mr. Fowler stated that in his opinion it would be better for the township if the old system of statute labor was substituted for the present of commutation and to appoint a pathmaster upon each concession line.

A petition was read from T. H. Vaughan and 12 other ratepayers, asking that a bridge be built on the west side of Monaghan road at the juncture with Orphington avenue.

An account was handed in from J. Batten for spikes, etc., $1.

On motion of Messrs. Howden and Morrow, the account was referred to Mr. R. Lillico for certification.

Moved by Messrs. Howden and Morrow, that a committee consisting of Messrs. Howden, Dobbin and McKee are hereby appointed to build a bridge of cedar over the drain on the west side of Monaghan road, at its junction with Orphington avenue. This was carried.

Moved by Messrs. Howden and McKee, that the whole Council be a committee to go, at any time named by the reeve, and lay out and supervise the work of the several road commissioners in the township during the year. This was carried.

Moved by Messrs. Dobbin and Morrow, that Robert Sanderson be appointed road commissioner on road division No. 4, for the year 1909. This was carried.

Moved by Messrs. Dobbin and McKee, that Mr. J. Armstrong be reappointed road commissioner for road division No. 3, for 1909. This was carried.

Moved by Messrs. Morrow and McKee, that John McIntosh be appointed road commissioner on road division division No. 1, for 1909. This was carried.

On motion, by-law No. 611, to appoint road commissioner for the year 1909, was introduced, read and finally passed.

Council then adjourned to meet as a Court of Revision of the assessment roll, 1909 and for general business on Monday, May 31st next at 2 p.m. in the town hall.

CURE IT IN ONE DAY

Coughs and Colds Disappear Like Magic When Hyomei is Used

If the thousands of people who suffer from hacking coughs and agonizing colds would arouse themselves sufficiently to follow this advice, they would cease to complain within 24 hours.

Here is the advice, if you take it and you are afterwards sorry that you did, it won't cost you a penny.

Go to Wm. Madill the druggist, and purchase from him a Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me) outfit. It will only cost you $1.00. Take it home; use it according to directions and if it does not cure your cough or cold take it back and he will refund the purchase price.

Mrs. I. Coon, of John street, Acton, Ont says: "I had a swelling come over my eyes which was caused by the catarrhal conditions. I had to cough up the bad impurities that dropped into my throat and it felt as if a hard cold had attacked me, right in my head, nose and glands near. A week's treatment of Hyomei overcame my trouble. I am glad to endorse Hyomei."

When you use Hyomei you don't swallow nauseating drugs. You simply breathe in the soothing, pleasant and antiseptic Hyomei air through the little pocket inhaler that comes with each outfit. As this medicated air passes over the inflamed parts, relief comes almost at once and cure follows.

Hyomei is also guaranteed by Wm. Madill to cure catarrh, croup, grip and asthma.

ST. MARY'S CHURCH BEING DECORATED

The members of the congregation of St. Mary's church thought themselves transplanted Sunday morning into some celebrated cathedral as they entered the edifice and gazed in astonishment and pride at the wonderful effect wrought by the artists' brush on the interior. The scaffolding had been taken down in the body of the church, where the work was completed, but some of it still remains over the altar.

The most important part of the decorative work is now under way immediately over and on either sides of the main altar. However, the parishioners who visited the church Sunday were given an opportunity to view the beauties of the interior of the church, which promises to be, when completed, one of the handsomest edifices in the province.—Lindsay Post.

Burglars Around London.

London, Ont., April 27.—A gang of expert housebreakers who worked Strathroy on Friday night, made a rich haul in South London on Saturday night and Sunday morning, and the police have notified Hamilton and Toronto that the men headed that way.

In the house of James Fox the thieves worked all around the bedrooms where Mrs. Fox and her daughters lay sick, and finally awakened her. The woman screamed for help, and the husband chased the men with a gun.

New Telephone Incorporation.

Albany, April 27.—The Public Service Telephone Co., capital $10,000,000, was incorporated yesterday to operate lines of telephone and telegraph, telautograph or other electrical lines of communication, pneumatic and otherwise, in and through the various cities, towns and villages of New York State, the Dominion of Canada and elsewhere. The principal office of the company is not stated, and according to the certificate, the company is to begin business with $700.

Jap Fleet In Yankee Waters.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 27.—For the first time in ten years warships of Japan entered a Pacific coast port of the United States, when the cruisers Soy and Aso, comprising the Japanese training squadron, commanded by Rear-Admiral Ijichi, steamed into San Pedro Sunday. The Aso is the flagship of Admiral Ijichi, a veteran of the war with Russia. The squadron will visit Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Victoria, and possibly other ports.

Miner's Head Blown Off.

Cobalt, April 27.—George Watson was instantly killed on Saturday night while drilling in the McKinley-Darragh mine. He worked into a missfired hole and an explosion followed. When found practically the whole of the unfortunate man's head had been blown away.

Although Watson had only been with the McKinley-Darragh people since Friday, he had worked in the mines since he was 14.

Burglars' Long Sentences.

New York, April 27.—Following his imposition a week ago of a 42-year term in Sing Sing on Hyman Gritzhandler for attempted burglary, Justice Dike yesterday imposed a sentence of 34 years upon Meyer Krinick, Gritzhandler's partner. The two men, who were caught picking a lock of a policeman's apartments, are charged by the police with being perpetrators of more than one hundred burglaries.

10,000,000 Tons of Coal.

Wilkes-Barre, April 27.—It is reported that there are some ten million tons of coal in storage and unsold. This coal costs the companies about $2.50 a ton at the mines, eight cents a ton storage and the transportation charges, so they will naturally dispose of it before mining much more.

$2,000,000 Asbestos Issued.

Montreal, April 27.—Kitcat and Aitken of Edinburgh has underwritten two million of the stock of the Amalgamated Asbestos Co. through the Bank of Scotland. Henry Malcolm Hubbard has been elected a director. He is a director of the Mexican Tramway Co.

Did Castro Bury Gold?

Caracas, Venezuela, April 25, via Port of Spain, April 27.—It is persistently reported here that Cipriano Castro left a fortune in gold buried in Caracas. If this is so, it explains Castro's lack of funds and his anxiety to get back to Venezuela.

Only Once In Three Years.

London, April 27.—King Edward has made a new regulation, under which ladies will be prohibited from going to court oftener than once in three years, unless in an official position.

Hundreds Fight Fire.

Calgary, Alta., April 27.—Hundreds of citizens of Riverside, a suburb of Calgary, fought for three hours Sunday afternoon against a prairie fire which threatened the town.

Reduction of Rates.

Washington, April 27.—An important series of rates was yesterday filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission affecting westbound traffic to Pacific coast terminals. The rates, which are to become effective on June 5 next, make an average reduction of ten cents a hundred pounds on all commodities tariffs from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific coast. No reduction yet has been made in the eastbound traffic.

Windsor Home for Aged Fails.

Windsor, April 27.—The Smith Fox Home for Old People, a Detroit institution, has failed. About fifteen inmates have been turned out and without shelter.

This home was established many years ago and scores of aged men and women have signed their property over to the promoters receiving therefor a contract to provide them with food and maintenance for the rest of their lives.

Charged With Murder.

Toronto, April 27.—Palla Stifoff, held in the Macedonian murder case, has now been charged directly with the murder. Yesterday Detective Mackie swore out a warrant charging him with that crime.

Stifoff now admits that the blood stains on his coat are human blood, but declares that they are due to the bleeding of his nose a day or so before the murder.

Bystanders Fatally Hurt.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 27.—Thousands of persons at the Coliseum Motor Cycle track saw a rider going a mile a minute thrown over the fence and across the grand stand without suffering serious injury. Two spectators, however, who were standing at the race, were probably fatally injured.

Col. Sam Hughes, M.P., and A. S. Goodeve, M.P., were the orators at the St. George's banquet in Guelph last night.

Hogs.

Market steady; prices unchanged, at $7.50 for selects, fed and watered at market, and $7.25 f.o.b. cars at country points.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 26.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 24 were 2085 cattle, 231 sheep and lambs, 1711 hogs and 2470 calves, while the supply for local consumption to-day amounted to 1000 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 305 hogs and 100 calves.

A feature of the trade since last Wednesday has been the increased demand from exporters for all good to choice stock on account of the fact that cable advices from all the leading foreign markets have been much stronger than a week ago, and prices show an advance of ½c to 1c per lb., owing to light supplies, and trade to-day at this improvement was very firm. This, coupled with the comparatively small supplies of cattle coming forward here, and the good demand from local and out-of-town butchers has tended to strengthen the situation some, but prices show further advance as compared with those of last Wednesday. The quality of stock offered was generally of a good, useful sort, and an active trade was done. Sales of picked lots of Ontario stall-fed steers, weighing from 1300 to 1350 lbs., sold at 6c per lb., while straight loads of good to choice stock were bought for export at $5.75 to $5.85 per 100 lbs. Good, useful butchers' cattle in loads sold at 5¼c to 5½c; fair at 4½c to 5c, and lower grades at 3½c to 4¼c per lb. Manitoba fat cows in loads sold at $4.75 to $4.85 per 100 lbs., and good to choice bulls at 4½c to 5¼c per lb.

The trade in small meats was quiet on account of the fact that supplies were limited, and in consequence of which prices ruled firm. The demand for the little stock that was offered was good, and sales of yearling lambs were made at 6½c to 7c, and old sheep at 5c to 5½c per lb. A few spring lambs brought from $3 to $6 each, as to size. The demand for calves was good at prices ranging from $1.50 to $6 each, as to quality. In sympathy with the strong cable advices on Canadian bacon and the steady upward tendency of prices of late, in all the leading foreign markets, coupled with the limited supply of hogs coming forward here, a very strong undertone prevails in the market, and prices this morning scored a further advance of 10c per 100 lbs. The demand from packers and dealers was good, and an active trade was done with sales of selected lots at $8.25 to $8.35 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, 77 MURRAY STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

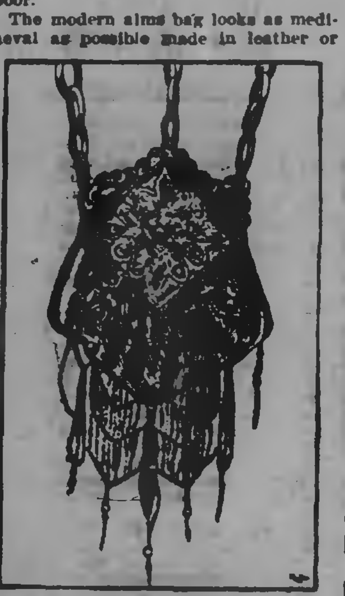
OH, SO VERY STYLISH!

Alms Bags the Latest Novelty of the Mode.

The woman who wants to be really in fashion has bought herself or is making herself an alms bag.

This is the latest novelty, and during the spring it is to figure on all the dresses for street and afternoon wear.

Like all the new fashions, the alms bag is taken from mediaeval times and is no more or less than a little bag like that which Faust's Marguerite wore at her side or in which St. Elizabeth of Hungary carried alms to her poor.



AN ALMS BAG.

The modern alms bag looks as mediaeval as possible made in leather or cloth heavily embroidered and ornamented with bangles, fringes and pendants of metal or silk. The almoner's bag originated with the strolling monks in the eleventh century. When these monks journeyed throughout the country, living on alms, they carried small leather bags, in which they gathered their collections. The bag was attached to a cord about the waist, and a faint echo of this cord has survived in the fashion of today, the bag in many cases being suspended from the high directoire girdle by an ornamental cord or chain.

A very beautiful bag of green leather embroidered in tarnished green and gold threads is made to go with one of the early spring frocks. The long pendants are of heavy twisted gold and silver wires interspersed with colored beads.

PARISIAN SWEETMEAT.

Old Time French Delicacy That Will Add Novelty to Today's Menu.

Here, clipped from an old French cookbook, is the recipe for that Parisian delicacy "pommes a la Fantaisie" (apple fantasy):

Peel, core and slice thinly three pounds of apples.

Place an ounce of butter in a clean enameled iron stewpan, and as soon as it boils add the apples, together with sifted sugar to taste, the juice of half a lemon free from pips and a wineglassful of claret.

Stew very slowly until quite tender.

Then place in the bottom of a fancy pie dish.

Whisk four eggs, the whites and yolks separately, to a stiff froth. Add to them a small cupful of grated bread or sponge cake crumbs which have been well soaked in milk. Add grated nutmeg and sifted sugar to taste.

Cover the apples with this mixture and bake until of a light golden brown hue.

Turn out upside down on a fancy dish.

Cover with sifted sugar and then with a latticework of strips of thinly cut angelica.

This sweet is equally good served hot or cold.

FOR THE EPICURE.

A Light Dessert and a Pick-me-up Soup.

To make the best of all light desserts, French pancake, one needs two fresh eggs, two tablespoonfuls of milk, one tablespoonful of self raising flour and one tablespoonful of caster sugar. Put the flour in a basin, add the sugar and mix it well in. Make a hole in the flour, add the eggs, previously lightly beaten, and beat it all together. Have ready two buttered saucers; put half the mixture in each, bake in a moderate oven for fifteen minutes till a golden brown and then spread with apricot or strawberry jam, turn each over, like a half moon, and serve very hot.

Green corn soup is a splendid pick-me-up on a cold night. To make it take all the white part from a head of celery and a medium sized onion and cut into small dice, put into a saucepan with two pints of milk and cook until perfectly tender; then add the contents of a tin of corn, boil up again and run through a sieve; season with pepper, salt and a small blade of mace; add half a pint of boiled milk and stir in gently the beaten yolks of two eggs. Boil about one ounce of macaroni in salted water till perfectly tender (twenty minutes), cut it into small pieces and serve in the soup as a garnish.

Curled celery is an attractive garnish. Cut thick stalks of celery in two inch pieces. With a sharp knife, beginning at the outside of the stalks, make five cuts parallel to each other extending one-third the length of the pieces. Make six cuts at right angles to the cuts already made. Cut the other end in the same fashion. Put the pieces in cold or iced water and let stand for several hours.

AT A GOTHAM PLAY.

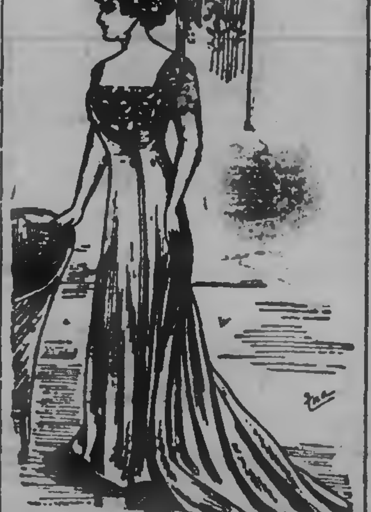
What a New York Girl Thinks of Maude Adams.

BARRIE'S LATEST SUCCESS.

The Scotch Playwright Knows the Heart of a Woman Better Than Do Most Men—Conversation Overheard at the Performance.

My Dear Elsa—Yesterday afternoon I went to see Maude Adams in Barrie's new play, "What Every Woman Knows," and it's so nice and comfortable to talk it all over with you today, even if it has to be done at the point of a pen, for you, too, are a Barrie admirer, and the spell of Maude Adams' witchery has cast a glamour many times over your dear little self, hasn't it? So you can imagine that with such an author's work interpreted by such a sympathetic actress how great was the enjoyment.

And, then, who, my dear, but the author of "The Little White Bird" could have conceived the quaint title of the play? And who better able to probe gently, tenderly, causing no moment of pain, to the very heart of the matter? For if there is one writer of the present day who understands that subtle mysticism of a woman, that mysticism which has little or nothing to do with character and little enough else with her psychology, it is this charming Scotch story writer, J. M. Barrie.



GOWN OF GREEN SATIN CRAPE.

Bernard Shaw perhaps understands the mind of a woman, but only in the heart of a woman and not in her mind will you find the crying need of her. And it is this—the heart of a woman—that Barrie so well knows. The heart of a woman is really the heart of a child, so simple that it hides behind its simplicity, sheltered from the curious eyes of the crowd, and there this canny Scot, weaver of tales, has looked for it and found it.

In his heroine, Maggie Shand (Maude Adams), Barrie has shown us clearly, conclusively, that behind the success or greatness of every man there has ever been the tender, understanding, unselfish love of some woman who has been content to efface herself so completely that her influence has never been felt until its withdrawal revealed the fact of its existence. This is what every woman knows, but how few men ever realize this guidance, or what loving woman would want them to? No, dear, I think in the very secretness of this service lies its strength, don't you? To show how few men can even appreciate that influence after seeing it translated in three powerful acts let me tell you that as I was struggling with my hat after the play I heard a man say: "Heaven only knows what every woman knows, but I'd be mighty darn sorry to have them start in and tell us all they know. If they did Chief Croker, with his dandy fire department, couldn't put out the conversational blaze."

The story of the play is simple enough. The scene is laid among uneducated, although sturdy, honest Scotch folk. The Wylie family, of whom there are three old bachelor brothers and a young much loved sister—Maggie, a domestic little body—have become richer than their neighbors through successful milling interests. The brothers know that Maggie, though pretty and romantic, has, strangely enough, no followers. The minister at the manse, their sentimental hope for her, has just announced his engagement, and they are afraid their sister's affections have received a blow. To repair such cardiac damage they propose to a young and struggling university student who has broken into their house like a common thief at night to study a book in their collection, of which Aleck Wylie says, "We have four yards selected by the minister and never read by us;" that they will give him £300 a year to finish his education if at the end of the course he marries Maggie. The quaint Barrieism of this situation is exquisite—Maggie's surprise, not to say aversion, though pleased acceptance of the proposal and John Shand's blunt, downright Scotch refusal to "tie himself to a Wylie." "Why, mon," he says to David Wylie, "with my brains and the career I'm going to make for myself I could marry any lady in the land." "True, lad, but how are you going to get the education without the £300?" This prompts John to say, "Weel, Maggie, I'm willing." "So am I, John, but before you sign the contract I've a word to say. My brother told you I'm twenty-five. Now, I'm, oh, lots older! I'm twenty-seven. And another thing, I wasn't run after. Nobody cared for me. I'm without charm—just vulgar and uneducated—but I'll do my best, John; I'll do my best."

The brothers ask Maggie what is charm. "Charm? Oh!" Can't you hear how Maude Adams in her drawling, cooing tones answers: "Charm's the bloom on a woman. With it she needs nothing, not even education. Without it she has nothing."

That Maggie begins to mother John Shand, who, by the way, is six years younger than herself, is evident in the way she makes him wrap the woolen scarf about his neck when he's leaving. And that she is going to keep up with him intellectually you understand when she takes the book John's been reading to her room with her "to know as much as he does." John makes good and in five years is returned to parliament as the "woman's candidate." There is an amusing side play on the suffragette question which has, however, little to do with the real action. All these years John has been true to his bargain and after his election presents Maggie to his constituents as the future Mrs. Shand.

There is a very strong scene when Maggie tears up the marriage contract and tells John that he is free—free to enjoy his life and to love as she knows he is capable of loving. She urges him to see the humorous side of things. "If I could only make you laugh, John," she pleads. "I've heard it said that it takes a surgical operation to make a Scotchman see a joke," is all the encouragement she gets. And when he adds, "But, then, Maggie, I don't see how anything can be inserted by a surgical operation," she gives him up as hopeless and marries him to keep him out of danger.

In London they have a fine social position, and by Maggie's finesse and care for his political career, acting as his secretary and inserting into John's strong, logical speeches dashes of humor that appeal to the house, a cabinet minister offers him a chance of obtaining a portfolio. When accused by her friends of helping her husband she evades the insinuation by saying: "I help John! He wouldn't let me." When the cabinet position is almost within John Shand's reach he spoils everything by announcing his love for Lady Sibyl, a pretty girl who at the beginning of his career called him "vulgar" and piqued him into making her like and love him. Maggie overhears him telling Lady Sibyl that she is the inspiration of his life and on her own wedding anniversary sees him give this girl a ruby pendant intended as her gift and of hearing him say, "This is a drop of my heart's blood."

Maggie is magnificent as John tells her of his love for Lady Sibyl, and as he falters over the confession she reminds him of the time when he first began to care for her.

There are no reproaches when he and Lady Sibyl decide to leave London together. Maggie suggests in the most disinterested manner at this point that John had better wait for two weeks before leaving and in the meanwhile prepare the speech that will clinch the position. Even in this crisis Maggie's influence dominates, for John helplessly looks to her for advice, asking, "But where shall I go?" "Now for one of Lady Sibyl's inspirations," is Maggie's very human rejoinder. But as the muse does not respond Maggie suggests that he spend the time at a house party in the country to which the Shands and Lady Sibyl have been invited. "I will run down for a day to see how you and Lady Sibyl are getting on with the speech," are her parting words to the man who is breaking her heart. To herself she croons, "He's my little boy, and I can manage him." The speech is not convincing to the minister, who is also a guest at the house party. John and Sibyl become heartily tired of each other, and it is only when Maggie appears with a polished draft of the speech that she and John had planned and in her diplomatic way has substituted for the first one that the cabinet position is secured. John then realises what a woman knows and does for the man she loves, and Maggie's unselfish devotion of years is repaid by his heartfelt cry, "The Lord has been better to me than I deserve." Maggie, looking at the humorous side of life, saves the tenseness of the situation by dropping on the floor at his feet and laughingly looking up at her husband, saying: "They say Eve was made from one of Adam's ribs, but she wasn't, John. She's made from his funny bone."

You poor, dear Elsa, how I have made you suffer by my overabundance of Barrie-Adams enthusiasm. It happens only once a season, so please do forgive selfish MABEL.

P. S.—There's not even room to tell you about the stunning green satin princess frock I've sketched for you.

"Monkey Brand Soap makes copper like gold, tin like silver, crockery like marble and windows like crystal.

To Prevent Lint Sticking.

When pieces of felt are pasted to the bottom of ornaments that are to stand on a polished surface care must be taken that the surface is not damp or the varnish fresh, or the lint from the felt will stick to the wood and be worse than the scratch.

This happens quite often in the sides of old mahogany desks. The unsightly mark on the top can only be removed by scraping gently with a piece of fine sandpaper and then rubbing up with sweet oil and vinegar. Do not scrape hard, or the varnish will be scored and the surface of the mahogany be ruined.

Has anything been heard lately about the Bald Lake bridge? What is the Laurier Government doing in the matter?

Woman Who Knows Her Mind.

The Spaniards are beginning to realise that Victoria is made of stronger stuff than her husband, and, despite her open leaning to English ideas, she continues to gain in popularity. It is known she attends bullfights only as a concession to public wish and national custom, and it would excite no astonishment were she to announce her absence from all bullfights in the future. Against determined opposition she has effected a revision of the rules of the Spanish court and has introduced a system which makes for the liberality of the English court, in which she was raised and from which Alfonso carried her off a bride less than three years ago. Old fashioned Spaniards profess to be shocked by the reforms the young queen has wrought, but just the same they have been unable to withhold admiration for her strength of will. It has taken brief time, in truth, to mark Victoria as the most authoritative of the women sharing as consorts the thrones of the old world.

Domestic Elimination.

It seems to be one of the troubles with any kind of elimination, whether of custom or observance, books or "truck," that what one person wants to get rid of is apt to involve something precious to some one else. No sooner do you get a shelf cleared of magazines that have been collecting, neglected, for a year past than some one passionately laments a priceless back number. You have only to throw out an ornament or picture that seems both faded and superfluous to hear some voice utter the horrified expostulation, "You are not going to throw that away!" But, apart from this disadvantage, elimination takes so much time and so much courage that it is no wonder that many of us, day after day, give space for that which gives us neither comfort nor pleasure. It is no wonder that we accumulate and accumulate seemingly without our own volition.—Mary Stewart Cutting in Harper's Bazar.

Unworried.

The Duchesse de Berry, whose husband was the son of Charles X. of France, was driving with her husband when the horses took fright and ran away. The duchess had continued the conversation without changing the tone of her voice, and at last her husband exclaimed:

"Why, Caroline, do you not see what has happened?"

"Yes, I see. But as I cannot stop the horses it is useless to trouble about them."

The carriage was upset, but no one was hurt.—Youth's Companion.

His Granddaughter Objects.

Miss Ethel Dickens, a granddaughter of Charles Dickens, is reported to be violently opposed to the project now on foot in England of erecting a statue to the memory of the novelist. She calls attention to the fact that her grandfather in his will distinctly said that he was to have no "monument, memorial or testimonial." Miss Dickens is the head of a large typewriting bureau in London and is described as a keen business woman.

Eating at Bedtime.

Do you go to bed hungry? This is not a good thing to do. Nothing should, of course, be eaten which is hard to digest, but something should be taken to stay the stomach's craving and insure sleep.

Wafers and warm milk, hot water and brown bread or a few dates are all good. They should be eaten slowly. If they are not well digested, instead of inducing sleep they will cause wakefulness.

Don't Do It.

Dr. Weir Mitchell declares that women often talk themselves into a nervous collapse. "Talking," he says, "reduces the vital force. One has only to lose one's voice temporarily to find out how many unnecessary remarks one makes."

With Roast Lamb.

For a delicious salad to serve with roast lamb sprinkle orange pulp with minced mint leaves, dress with lemon juice and sugar and serve on lettuce leaves.

Mr. James Dingwall (Superintendent of St. Andrew's Sunday School in Williamstown, Ont., for nine years) states: "I am now over eighty years old, and I can strongly recommend Fruit-a-tives for Bladder and Kidney Trouble and Chronic Constipation."

Mr. H. Marcheseault (High Constable of Quebec), testifies:—"I suffered for ten years with Severe Pain in the Back. Nothing did me any good until I tried Fruit-a-tives."

Mr. W. J. McComb (the leading merchant of Trenton, Ont.), writes:—"I was a martyr to Headaches—consulted doctors — wore glasses — without the slightest relief. Then I took Fruit-a-tives and this remedy cured me."

SULTAN OF TURKEY DEPOSED HIS BROTHER RECHAD SUCCEEDS

Special to the Review

Constantinople, April 27—The Sultan, Abdul Hamid, II. has been deposed. His dethronement is the joint work of the National Assembly which secretly voted in favor of his deposition and a religious edict by the Sheik ul Islam, approving and legalizing the deposition. The Sultan will be removed from the Yildiz Kiosk today. Immediately following the deposition of Abdul Hamid, his brother, Mehmmed Rechad Effendi, was proclaimed the new Sultan amid scenes of the wildest enthusiasm.

DEADMAN'S ISLAND EMBROGLIO STILL AT IT IN VANCOUVER

To the view of the alert, impassive citizen, the proceedings in the City Council chamber, last evening, with regard to the Deadman's Island embroglio, present few featuures on which Vancouver has reason to congratulate herself. Here we have a piece of ground, to which Mr. Weart, as a lawyer acting for Mr. Theodore Ludagte, just as the city solicitor might act on behalf of the city, or as any lawyer may act for his client, claims that his client holds a lease. Several citizens, on the other hand, contend that the lease is invalid, and that the land in question belongs to the city, by virtue of the Order-in-Council by which the Dominion Government granted Stanley Park to the people of Vancouver. It is a question of competing claims, a question of law. Last night, as appears from the published count of the proceedings in the City Council chamber, one or two citizens chose to make it a matter of stormy invective, abuse and disorder. Either Deadman's Island belongs to Ludgate under lease, or it belongs to Vancouver under Order-in-Council. What is to be gained by abuse of the opposing counsel?

Clearly, this is not a question on which popular passion, or the indignation of particular individuals, however violently inflamed, however adequately and unconventionally expressed, will prove of any avail. Vancouver is a law-abiding city. Who has the right in law to Deadman's Island? Only legal skill can determine. The claim which Dr. Bell Irving put forward, that he and the other members of the Board of Park Commissioners represent the citizens in this matter, is a ibg claim, an important claim; but can it be supported and made good? The Board of Park Commissioners concerns itself with Park affairs, but what evidence has the public that Deadman's Island is a Park affair? At the ordinary, everyday level, there is nothing to support the contention. Deadman's Island is not used as part of Stanley Park. The point on which the whole matter turns, indeed, is precisely this; Is Deadman's Island part of Stanley Park, as such, does it belong to the city under the Order-in-Council by which the park was gifted by the Dominion Government to the people, or does it belong to Mr. Ludgate under lease. It is purely a question of law. What do the citizens say should be done about it?

This is the first time in years that the citizens have been asked the question. It is plain that something should should be done—something more than choleric gentlemen paying a visit to the City Council chamber when the question, or any phase of it, is brought up. Neither a member of the Park Board, nor a member of any other public Board may claim to "defend the interests of the citizens" in this wise. Shouldn't the citizens be allowed to have some way in the matter? Have they been consulted about what they may regard as their interests in it? As the affair stands at present, no members of any public Board has the right to arrogate to himself the claim that he "defends the interests of the citizens."—Vancouver World.

CHARGE PROVEN THIS MORNING

And Frederick Eastland Was Fined $5.00 and Costs Amounting to $10.30

At the police court this morning, Frederick Eastland was found guilty of being drunk and therefore incapable of handling his horse and rig which ran away Saturday night, thereby inflicting injuries on a horse the property of the Geo Matthews Co.

He was fined $5 and costs amounting to $10.30 to be paid in ten days and in default of payment fifteen days in jail.

P. Alexander was the first witness called and stated that he saw accused on Brock street between the hours of seven and eight on Saturday night. He could not say if Eastland was drunk but the horse was running from one side of the road to the other and at one time was on the sidewalk. The driver had hold of the reins. Later he saw Eastland at the corner of Brock and Water streets and he appeared to be repairing some parts of the harness.

Arthur J. Johnston saw Eastland between nine and ten o'clock at the corner of Brock and Water streets. He did not have the horse and rig. Eastland appeared to be sober and capable of taking care of himself.

P. C Mebarry stated that he received a telephone message on Saturday night at 8.30. He went up to the Commercial hotel and arrested Eastland who was in the sitting room conducting himself in a disorderly manner. Eastland's horse was in the shed but was not attached to any rig. The vehicle had been demolished.

P. Alexander was recalled and stated that he had sent the telephone message as he thought that Eastland or somebody else would receive serious injuries.

The Magistrate held that the charge had been proven against the accused and he imposed the above fine.

THE NEW COIFFURE

How to Arrange Your Hair in th Latest Style--An Interesting Article on Hair Dressing

Certain interested readers have asked just how you arrange the new coiffure—not the demure Psyche knot, but the so-called Dolly Varden puffs and rolled sides. Now, I am forced to admit that this parted mode is not so universally becoming as the pompadour, nor should the extremely thin-faced, the ultra-dignified, and the not very young woman appear in the long rolls of puffs that so resemble the short curls of childhood. Barring these exceptions, the coiffure is graceful in the extreme.

But before I go on to explain the mechanism of this arrangement of the hair, which is as seemingly artless as it is in reality complex, I feel like warning the thin-haired woman not to be tempted into the artifice of "rats" and artificial hair, for even though her mirror praise her, mirrors have not the penetration of human eyes, and can scarcely give more of an idea of how she will look on the street than can opera-glasses tell one how the painted beauty of the footlights will appear in the pitiless sunlight. Side rats—if so we may call the padding worn under either side of the parted coiffure—have not even the justification of the aureole-like pompadour roll, as they do not even imitate the effect of abundant hair. Far from making the naturally flat locks look thick, they mar a naturally shaped head with a most unnatural bump over either ear. As for the artificial puffs that come on a string to be pinned in place as needed, like all fads that end upon the ten-cent counter, they can be told from real hair, or from attached hair, at a glance, and so cheapen the wearer thereof, as all artificialities do. True the disproportionate size of some of the season's hats quite demands a disproportionate mass of hair, but then we are none of us required by law to wear the extreme.

And now for a practical answer to the above-mentioned queries. The effect of five puffs may be obtained by counting the side rolls as two of the number. The side roll can be managed by inserting the side comb from outside of the strand, with the comb so arranged that it curves away instead of towards the head. And, of course, in order to allow for the roll, it must be placed several inches farther along the strand of hair than it would be ordinarily. Once placed in this starting position, you have only to turn the teeth of the side comb first backward, then down and under in a semicircle until you can thrust it into the hair in its normal position. The comb is thus completely hidden by the hair that rolls over its back. A little practice will show one at just what angle she should insert the comb to obtain the most graceful effect.

To roll back hair into the three puffs, it will hold better, you will find, if you first divide into three strands, then tie each strand close to the roots with a bit of elastic. Now hold the middle strand out to its full length, "rat" it on the upper side very slightly to hold the strand together crosswise, and then begin to roll it from the end over and over your fingers until you reach the head. You will have to do this over one shoulder, or else over your head, and it really is not easy. Now pin it very, very carefully in place, using little wire pins all around the puffs, and use the shell pins only on top for looks. Finally roll the two side strands each away from the middle one, rather than toward it, as this best conceals the elastic at their bases. By a little coaxing you can make these back puffs come on a line with the side rolls, and then a barrette, and you are a thing of beauty.

THE UNIONS AND TRADE EDUCATION

Latest Venture of Printers' Organization---700 Students in a Year

The I. T. U. Commission on Supplemental Trade Education which has this work in charge promulgated its first advertisement asking for students last March and in a year has secured an enrollment of more than seven hundred. These include expert printers as old as sixty and youths of seventeen and eighteen. The experienced compositors say they find much in the first graduate being one of the highest salaried men working at the trade.

There have been schools of typography in continental Europe and in Great Britain for many years, the idea being given its great stimulus in the latter country by the many-sided William Morris, who did so much to improve the appearance of the printed page but British employing printers who have examined the ITU Course methods of instruction, as well as the secretary of the British Typographical Union —for many years a director of Manchester's famous Municipal Technical School —agree that in teaching principles the International Typographical Union has started a revolution in trade education. These comments have had their effect on across-seas craftsmen. While foreign students pay considerably more than Americans and Canadians there are several British, Australian and South African printers taking the course. One mail recently brought an application from Canada's most northerly province and another one was from Bloemfontein, South Africa.

The course is open to those working at the printing trade, and the officers and interested members of the Typographical Union are sure that it is but a beginning of what is to become a prominent feature of union work. Already the question has been advanced of making a study of the course a prerequisite for an apprentice's admission to membership in the union. The laws will not be changed hastily, but there is not doubt that —now an opportunity to learn is open to them—the union will in the near future pay more attention to the technical qualifications of youthful applicants for admission.

During the past two or three years the American public has been treated to much comment and suggestion on the matter of trade education. In the industrial centres there are local societies actively promoting this object, while the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education is designed to advance the interests of the new idea in a national way.

Meantime America's oldest and most progressive labor organization—the International Typographical Union—has formulated and launched a system of technical education that furnishes display, job and all other compositors an opportunity to acquire a knowledge of the principles underlying good typography, which can not be taught in printing offices. Owing to the diversified needs of its almost 50,000 members, including printers in small country towns and those in the largest metropolitan offices, the union was compelled to adopt the correspondence system, but the instruction is imparted along the lines of the best and most modern educational methods.

The art schools have been levied on for the benefit of the working printer. The principles of design and color harmony are taught scientifically, the students applying them to practical work (done in type or by pencil sketches) under the personal supervision of competent instructors. Heretofore education in typography has been by the empirical method, but the I. T. U. Course aims at showing the "how" and the "why" of good typography in a scientific manner. The student first masters the underlying principles and then solves the trade problems submitted to him in the light of that knowledge. The key-note of the instruction is found The Course is sold for $20, which in Ruskin's aphorism, "Unity and simplicity are the sources of beauty."

The Course is sold for $20, which does not cover the cost of outfit, tuition, postage, etc. As a purely commercial venture, it would cost at least $60, but the International Union, in order to stimulate and encourage the study of their art by printers, defrays all advertising and other promotional expenses out of its funds, and in addition gives a rebate or prize of $5 to each student who finishes the lessons with ordinary diligence and intelligence. Many local unions supplement this by offering additional prizes to their members and apprentices working in union offices. It is estimated that the total union expenditure on account of the educational scheme is between $8,000 and $10,000 a year.

IMPROVEMENTS ARE DECIDED ON

At the Adjourned Vestry Meeting of St. Luke's Church

The congregation of St. Luke's received last night the final reports in connection with its yearly business. A large number were present. The rector, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, was in the chair, and opened the meeting with prayer. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting which were confirmed, the business was proceeded with.

Mr. J. J. Turner, Jr., spoke on behalf of the Bible Class, and asked for hearty co-operation on the part of the congregation in his work as teacher of the Bible Class. He also offered to place a pulpit and light in the church, to be paid for by the Bible Class, on the forthcoming visit of the bishop in June.

Mr. Turner suggested the presentation of an illuminated address of welcome and assurance of loyalty to the bishop.

The rector assured Mr. Turner of the hearty appreciation which he and the congregation had of his faithful work and inspiring energy in church work. Improvements to and repairs of the church property, were decided upon.

The committee on vesting the choir reported favorably and the matter will be referred to the congregation to vote on it by ballot.

Messrs. Fred Sedgwick and Henry Wokinden were added to the number of sidesmen, chosen at the previous meeting.

The rector, the wardens and Messrs. H. Nesbitt, E. A. Peck, J. J. Turner, jr., Arthur Kingdon, F. J. Jamieson, D. Spence, Frank Adams, and Wm. Gibbs were appointed the Advisory Board.

The officers of the various societies gave their reports, which showed excellent work done. To the rector, organizations and the press a hearty vote of thanks was tendered.

The meeting then adjourned the rector pronouncing the benediction.

CARTAGE COMPANY HAD A GOOD YEAR

That the past year had been a most successful one with the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company was brought out at the annual meeting of the company, held last night in the Bank of Montreal Chambers.

A large number of the shareholders and directors were present.

Managing Director, Wm. Buller, made his report, which was exceedingly satisfactory to the company, and he was given credit for his able management and good business policy. The company is in first class condition, and prospects are very bright for the future.

A resolution of condolence was passed by the shareholders and directed to be sent to the wife and family of the late Alfred Parker, who was one of the company's directors.

The following officers and directors were elected:

President and Managing Director—Wm. Buller.

Vice-Pres.—T. Hooper.

Sec.-Treas.—E. K. Hopkins.

Directors—President, Vice-President and Messrs. W. E. Talbot, Jas. Clancy and R. C. Braund.

On Friday evening of this week the eighteenth annual meeting of the association will be held. Short reports of the year's work will be presented.

THEATRICAL

LORAIN AMUSEMENT CO.

A big audience saw the opening performance of the Lorain Amusement Company at the Grand Opera House last night. The bill put on was entirely new and pleased immensely. The wonder of local people is that the company can put on such a high class show at such small prices. Little Vera Simmons sang "Won't You Be My Honey," and for an encore gave "Nothing's Too Good For the Irish," assisted by Master Gordon Ball, in costume. The latter also sang "Harrigan," and brought down the house. Wygand and Wygand in a new musical turn made a big hit, xylephone and saxophone solos being features. A song by Mrs. Wygand, with cornet accompaniment by Mr. Wygand, was received with much applause. Four fine moving picture films were shown. Several other specialties filled in nicely.

Performances will be given every night this week.

NO BUSINESS WAS TRANSACTED

The Canadian Club Will Hold Another Meeting — The Date to be Announced Later

There was not enough members present last night at the meeting announced to be held by the Canadian Club in the City Council chambers, to warrant any business being transacted, and it was thought advisable to hold the meeting again at a future date, when, it is hoped that the members will make a special effort to attend the meeting as a good representation is necessary when the election of officers takes place.

LIFE LESSONS FROM ST. JOHN

Interesting Paper Read at the Young People's Society of Knox Church

The Young People's Society of Knox church held their regular meeting last evening. Miss Ella Warren, president, was in the chair. It being devotional night, a paper was read by Mr. Rou Laing on "Life Lessons from the Gospel of St. John." The paper proved to be interesting and instructive as the subject was ably dealt with by the speaker. A vocal solo by Miss Clara Bartley was well rendered, and added much to the enjoyment of the evening.

It was decided to entertain the members of St. Paul's Young People's Society next Monday night. A good musical programme will be arranged, and a pleasant time may be looked for.

The delicious flavour of "Salada" Tea is largely due to the care used in the cultivation and preparation, and to the fact that it is packed in sealed lead packets, which prevents it coming in contact with articles that would affect its flavour.

MEETING OF THE CONGREGATION

At Mark St. Church To-morrow Evening

On Wednesday evening, instead of the usual prayer service at Mark street church there will be a general congregational meeting for the purpose of discussing matters relating to the church, and also for social intercourse. The meeting will take the form of a rally evening. On Friday evening a cottage prayer meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Teeford, 594 Concession street.

DON'T MARRY OUT OF YOUR OWN PLANE

BY HELEN OLDFIELD

Men, still more women, who marry out of their own plane of life take heavy risks. Happiness in married life first and foremost depends upon compatibility of temper, not a natural facility of disposition which readily adapts itself to the methods and tenets of others, but the entire and cordial agreement which is based upon community of tastes and of interests, which implies similarity of ideas, common sympathies, and equal standards of right and wrong.

Husband and wife may never exchange an angry word or look, and yet be so alien in temper, so opposite in sentiment, as never to agree. The intimate union of heart and soul, without which marriage is a sham and mockery, and often becomes a curse, can never be realized where this compatibility of temper does not exist.

All which makes for or against it chiefly, if not altogether, is determined by birth and environment. Temperament counts for much, and temperament, modern science tells us, largely is a matter of heredity. Training is all important, there is an old and homely saying that "what is bred in the bone will show itself in the flesh."

A fish out of water, a land bird on sea, is no more hopelessly out of its element than is the average man or woman who suddenly, without preparation, almost without warning, is transferred from one plane of life to another.

In the eye of the law one man or woman may be as good as another—that is to say, in the sense that their legal rights are the same. But even in courts of justice there are sharp distinctions as to characters and social standing; while all the world over silk is accounted of more value than cotton, sealskin than coney. "One vessel is made to dishonor, and another to honor," and no edict of congress or parliament can alter the stubborn fact.

"There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so." It all depends upon the point of view, which in turn depends upon the standards fixed by education and association.

The law of life is that people must be congenial in order happily to dwell together. For most of us the definition of any agreeable person is one who agrees with us, and the most ardent love cannot long endure the constant irritation of tricks and manners wholly in opposition to one's own.

A gentleman cannot marry his cook or housemaid, nor can a girl elope with her father's man servant, and hope, much less expect, that their friends and associates will receive the erratically chosen spouses into even the outer circle of their exclusive set.

Men who marry beneath them often have an uncomfortable time after the knot is tied. However high may be their own social status they cannot compel society to approve the match. True, if they are plucky and persistent, and the wives have the qualities necessary for social success, the pair usually win in the long run, but the struggle is apt to be a long and hard one, and society never forgets, though it may consent to ignore the pit from which the interloper was digged.

When a woman takes a husband from a lower social plane than her own, the case is by far more difficult. When a man marries he can, if he so elects, entirely cut his wife off from past associates, and separate her from her own people; on the contrary, a woman, so to speak, marries her husband's family, and thenceforth must cast her lot with them, unless the man sees fit to cut himself adrift. If the man successfully can rise, well and good; if the woman can descend with an air of complete contentment, no great harm may be done. But the risk is great, and few are the chances in her favor.

LECTURE BY REV. J.W. BELFORD OF WINDSOR MILLS, QUEBEC

A fair sized audience assembled in the Orange Hall last evening to hear the lecture by the Rev J. W. Belford, BA. of Windsor Mills, Que. As announced the lecture was held in the interests of a new church which it is proposed to build in the town of Windsor Mills and which at present is a much felt want in that locality.

Those who attended however, to hear the lecture last evening were well repaid for their trouble. The rev. gentleman is a very eloquent and well informed speaker, and the subject of his lecture was most interesting and worthy of a much larger audience. He commenced by referring to the discovery and the early settlement of Canada by the French, paying an eloquent tribute to the Jesuit missionaries, who so nobly gave up their lives to the work of civilising and Christianizing the inhabitants and traced the history of Canada through her various stages up to the present time. He pointed out the advantages which Canadians have over other peoples and predicted the building up under the British flag of a great united and powerful nation on the northern half of this continent. It was incumbent upon us, however, to teach the various nationalities who are now seeking homes in the Canadian west, how to become loyal and useful citizens. With the exception of about five per cent who are English speaking, these people arrive on our shores without any idea of freedom or what constitutes responsible government. It naturally follows, that if they are to appreciate our free institutions and what citizenship in our great empire means, education along these lines is absolutely necessary. We should all feel proud to own allegiance to the British crown. But this privilege carries with it great responsibilities. Persia at one time held greater sway than any other nation but it crumbled to pieces. The same fate befell Syria, Greece, Rome and Spain, and it behooves us, who belong to an empire greater than any of these, to be on our guard.

A vote of thanks to the lecturer was moved by Mr W H G Armstrong, and seconded by Mr R E Juby. Mr. J R McWilliams, who presided, in conveying the vote of thanks, hoped that Peterborough would again have the privilege of hearing the Rev. lecturer in the near future.

COLONIAL WEAVING CO. NOW READY TO GO AHEAD WITH THEIR NEW ESTABLISHMENT

But Time Specified in By-law Confirmed by Legislature Will Elapse Before Conditions Can be Complied With and Several Amendments are Wanted.

The Colonial Weaving Co. have applied to the city council for an extension of time in which to build their new factory, having found it impossible to proceed with the work last year as intended, owing to the tightness in the money market. The request was taken up at the meeting of the council last night. City Solicitor Hall pointed out that it was impossible for the city to grant the concessions asked, the by-law in connection with the new factory having been confirmed by the Legislature, and become stationary. The course left open was for the company to apply to the Legislature for the concessions asked, and the city would back them up in this move if considered desirable.

The company want until June 1st, 1910, to complete the new building, to have it fifty feet in width instead of sixty, and to employ fifty hands instead of sixty.

On motion of Ald. Gillespie and Duncan it was decided to ask the Legislature to amend the by-law as requested, with the exception that fifty hands must be employed for twelve months each year, instead of sixty for ten months.

The company will have to put up $200 to cover the cost of applying for the amendments.

The location for the new factory will be north of Rink street, between Stewart and Rubidge streets.

In their letter to the council the company state that they are now in a position to go ahead with the work of building, and equipping the new factory.

CORNEY BURNS GOT DECISION OVER KELLY IN 10 ROUND GO

The Latter Proved Himself a Very Clever Boy However—Local Lad Worked Hard—Edwards Won Preliminary.

It was a close decision Referee Staunton was called upon to make last night at the end of the ten-round bout between Corney Burns, of Peterborough, and Jimmy Kelly, of Buffalo. The boys boxed ten fast rounds, and both showed considerable class.

Kelly is one of the prettiest performers seen here, and showed that he had a good line of business in the ring game. He is a cautious and fast fighter, employing a peculiar and puzzling style. He is shifty on his feet, hits well, and covers up to quick advantage.

Corney did most of the leading, and was undoubtedly the more aggressive of the two. He kept tearing into Kelly all the time, and landed several good ones. The latter met him cleverly, however. It mustn't be thought that Kelly was on the defensive all the time by any means though, and while he was content to let Burns do most of the work, he flashed out at all stages, and quite often took a hand in forcing the fighting. Burns appeared the more willing to mix it up, and Kelly was to quite an extent satisfied with meeting his advances. It was probably the local boy's aggressiveness that found him the favor of the referee.

The six-round preliminary between Jack Edwards, of Toronto, and George Lillie, of Peterborough, was a cracking good go. The men cut a clashing pace from the tap of the gong, and went after each other in true battling style. For a while it looked as though there would be nothing whatever to choose between the two. Lillie showed up to advantage in the first couple of rounds, and was given great encouragement to win. He boxed fearlessly, but in the last three rounds especially Edwards had it on him in points. Lillie rushed hard, but was met with straight punches from his opponent. Edwards showed up to better advantage as a smooth boxer, and the ruling of Referee Geo. N. Graham was unquestionably a good one.

Previous to this bout a couple of youngsters boxed three short rounds. An amusing feature was when the juvenile referee tried to separate the combatants when they were in a clinch one of them turned on the third party, much to the amusement of the spectators.

BALL TOSSER'S CORNER

Rule 22.—If the score be a tie at the end of nine innings for each team, play shall be continued until one side has scored more runs than the other in an equal number of innings; provided that if the side last at bat, score the winning run before the third man is out in any inning after the ninth, the game shall terminate.

Rule 24.—A drawn game shall be declared by the umpire if the score is equal on the last even inning played, when he terminates play, in accordance with Rule 22, Section a, after five or more equal innings have been played by each team. But if the side that went second to bat is at bat when the game is terminated, and has scored the same number of runs as the other side, the umpire shall declare the game drawn without regard to the score of the last equal inning.

ALL TEAMS wishing to enter a team in the intermediate series are asked to be represented at the meeting to be held in the Y. M. C. A. to-night.

SHOULD the games be played on the Nicholls Oval, the executive should see that a netting is placed in the rear of the home plate, as this will save a number of balls from being lost and keep the game from becoming listless.

THE LOCKS WORKS may be represented by a team in the intermediate league.

Fred. Merkle is exonerated. Public vindication has come for the most abused player in baseball.

Hugh S. Fullerton, whose skill in writing baseball news and gossip is equal to that of any man working in that line to-day, has applied the brush and washed the record of Merkle.

In an article on "The Fine Points of the Game," in the American Magazine, Fullerton blames "Cy" Seymour for losing the deciding battle of the season for the New York Giants. This is the way it happened:

"It was Cy Seymour who lost the game, but perhaps not a dozen of the 30,000 persons who witnessed the struggle know that he did. New York had the game won until the third inning in which Tinker was Chicago's third batter. During the entire season Tinker had been hitting Mathewson hard and the psychological effect of past performances has much to do with pitching and batting.

"Matthewson feared Tinker and he signalled Seymour to play deep in centre field. He was afraid that a long drive by Tinker might turn the tide of battle. Seymour saw the signal and disregarded it, having an idea that Tinker would hit a low line fly. So he crept a few steps closer to the infield, instead of moving back 'Matty' dropped his famous 'fadeaway' over the plate and Tinker drove a long, high line fly to left centre.

"Seymour made a desperate effort to reach the ball, but fell a few feet short and the ball rolled to the crowd in the outfield for a three-base hit and started a rally that gave Chicago victory. If Seymour had played a deep field, as he was commanded to New York would have won the pennant."

INTERMEDIATE BASEBALL MEETING TO-NIGHT AT Y.M.C.A.

The intermediate league teams have had a week to discuss the constitution which were read and the amendments suggested at the meeting held last week and should be represented tonight at the Y.M.C.A., by responsible representatives in order that a large amount of business may be transacted. There are already five teams in this league and several more will ask to be admitted at the meeting tonight. This is a question that should receive much discussion. Is it not better to have four or five good teams who would be able to furnish a first-class article of ball than to have seven or eight teams which would necessarily take a large number of players, and the teams would not be as strong as in the case of there being only a small number in the league.

While the aim of this organization is to develop young players, the league should profit by past experience which has shown that teams which have not had capable management and therefore did not put the proper spirit into the game have been a detriment to the success of the league.

The meeting tonight is called for eight o'clock and those interested are asked to be on hand in good time.

CHURCH LEAGUE TEAMS WERE NOT REPRESENTED

Meeting Announced to be Held in Y.M.C.A. Last Night Had to be Called off

There were only two teams represented at the Church Baseball League meeting, announced to be held at the Y. M. C. A. last evening. The president of the leadgue, Mr. E. N. McWilliams and representatives from All Saints' and St. Andrew's were present, but it was not thought advisable to go ahead with any business. It is time all ball leagues were organized and ready for the season, and if the teams who played in the league last year and want to do so again, they want to get busy and do something. The officers are willing to do their part, but it is necessary for the teams to show that they mean to help, otherwise there will be no more meetings called.

SPORTING TALK

King and Evers are no longer the Johnnies on the spot for the Chicago Cubs but the Cubs seem to have a good Chance without them.

Larner, the most prominent short and middle distance amateur walker in England, and winner of the 3,500 meter and the ten mile walks in the Olympic games last year, will come to this country for contests.

A clergyman of Spokane, Wash., in giving an address on baseball, among other remarks said: "For the sake of the team, and for the sake of the game, stand up to the plate. If you can't fine out a home run, maybe you can drop a texas leaguer back of second that will do almost as much good. But bend every effort to meet the ball and not to fan out when there are men on the bases waiting to score. There may be two or three men on bases with two men out and two strikes against the batsman in the last half of the ninth. You've seen the situation right here in Spokane. Your hit, which may seem a small thing in itself, will mean victory for some one, while your failure to connect with the ball results in defeat for the others as well. Fight until the last man is out; God Almighty doesn't like a quitter."

TREATING HORSE CORNS.

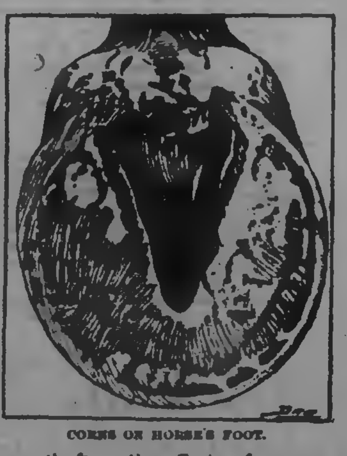
Preventive and Curative Measures Recommended by an Authority.

There is small understanding with the average horse owner of the suffering some animals go through on account of corns. The torture is acute, and the services of the animals are often lost to the owner without leaving knowledge of the cause. Dr. A. A. Holcombe, inspector of the United States bureau of animal husbandry, says of treating horse corns:

"As in all other troubles, the cause must be discovered if possible and removed. In a great majority of cases the shoeing will be at fault. For a sound foot, perfectly formed, a flat shoe with heels less thick than the toe and which rests evenly on the wall proper is the best. In flat feet it is often necessary to concave the feet as much as possible on the upper surface so that the sole may not be pressed upon. If the heels are very low the heels of the shoe may be made much thicker.

"If the foot is very broad and the wall light toward the heels a far shoe, resting upon the walls, may aid to prevent excessive tension upon the soft tissues when the foot receives the weight of the body. A piece of leather placed between the foot and shoe serves largely to destroy concussion, and its use is absolutely necessary on some animals to enable them to work."

"Among the preventive measures may be mentioned those which serve to maintain the suppleness of the hoof. The dead horn upon the surface of the sole not only retains moisture for a long time, but protects the living horn beneath from the effects of evaporation. For this reason the sole should be pared as little as possible.



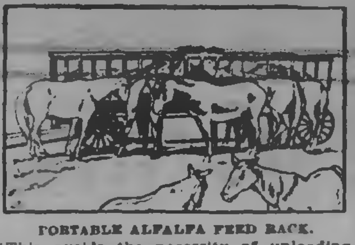
CORNS ON HORSE'S FOOT.

"As to curative measures, much depends upon the extent of the injury. If the case is one of chronic dry corn, with but slight lameness, the front should be poulticed for a day or two and the discolored horn pared out, care being taken not to injure the soft tissues. The heel on the affected side should be lowered until pressure is removed, and if the patient's labor is required the patient must be shod with a bar shoe or with one having stiff heels. Care must be taken to reset the shoe before the foot has grown too long, else the shoe will no longer rest on the wall, but on the sole and bar.

"I believe in cutting moist corns out. If there is an inflammation present cold baths and poultices should be used."

ALFALFA FOR LIVE STOCK

In a bulletin on alfalfa recently issued by the department of agriculture the writer says of its value: Alfalfa is one of the most highly nutritious and palatable of feeds for all classes of farm animals either in the form of green alfalfa or as hay. Dairy cows require high protein feeds in order to produce profitable flows of milk. These can be supplied by feeding nonleguminous roughage and such concentrates as bran and cornmeal. Such concentrates are expensive, however, and can be replaced by a feed like alfalfa. Experiments made by the Tennessee agricultural experiment station in regard to the replacing of grain with alfalfa in rations for dairy cows indicated that one and one-half pounds of alfalfa will replace one pound of wheat bran. The tests showed that with alfalfa hay at $10 a ton and wheat bran at $20 the saving effected by substituting alfalfa for wheat bran is $2.80 for every hundred pounds of butter and nearly 20 cents for every hundred pounds of milk.



PORTABLE ALFALFA FEED RACK.
[This avoids the necessity of unloading the hay in the feed yard.]

Alfalfa forms probably the best roughage for fattening cattle, as its lack of bulkiness enables the animals to consume sufficient quantities for rapid gains. It is also very valuable for young growing stock before the fattening period begins.

Alfalfa is an ideal hay for sheep, but is apt to cause bloat if used as pasturage. It is the custom throughout the mountainous regions of the west to pasture the sheep on the wild grasses in the mountains during the summer and then drive them to the valleys during the winter to be fed on alfalfa hay. As an instance of its value for sheep in the east the experience of the Wing brothers, in Ohio, may be cited. Spring lambs cost them $6 per hundred pounds when alfalfa was not used in the ration as compared with $2.50 per hundred when alfalfa formed the principal part of their feed.

Alfalfa is fed to hogs for the most part in the green state as a soiling crop or as pasture. The hay, however, constitutes a maintenance ration for hogs during the winter, and when fed on it sows enter the spring farrowing season in excellent condition. Wherever possible brood sows should secure alfalfa at least during the latter portion of the period of gestation.

At the Kansas agricultural experiment station it has been shown that an acre of alfalfa produced 776 pounds of pork during the season. In another experiment it was shown that for every bushel of Kaffir corn meal and 7.83 pounds of alfalfa hay the hogs made a gain of 10.88 pounds. When the alfalfa was withheld from the ration the gain was only 7.48 pounds for each bushel of grain fed.

Alfalfa may be fed to horses both in the green state and as hay. Instances are on record where horses have performed heavy work during the summer season on nothing but green alfalfa. Many persons hold that the kidneys are unduly stimulated by alfalfa, but this does not appear to be well substantiated by experimental data.

The principal drawback to the pasturing of cattle and sheep on alfalfa is their tendency to bloat. This danger can, however, be reduced to a minimum by proper precautions in not allowing the cattle to go on to the pasture with empty stomachs, especially when the alfalfa is wet.

OUTLINE FOR SIMPLE ALFALFA EXPERIMENTS.

Perhaps no other crop requires such a variety of different treatments, depending upon the special locality in which it is grown, as alfalfa. For this reason early attempts are likely to be failures and consequently should be made upon a very small scale. Many have succeeded in producing profitable crops of alfalfa only after sowing it for several years in succession. It is suggested that the area seeded at first be small and that it be divided into a number of subdivisions, each receiving a different treatment, as shown in the illustration. The idea is to try on the same field at the same time all the different treatments that are likely to prove successful. The treatment giving the best results can be applied to an increased acreage the succeeding season. In this way the experience which would otherwise require a number of seasons to procure can be obtained at the end of the first year.

E. F. Jeffries and Clarence Brown are the medallists of the graduating class of London Medical School.

SUBSTITUTES FOR SILAGE.

Sugar Beets and Mangels Excellent For Cows in Winter.

When the dairyman is unable to provide silage for his cows the balanced ration should include something besides hay, bran, mill feed and occasionally oil cake. This is imperative for the dairyman and desirable for growing and fattening stock.

For this purpose pumpkins are largely grown for late fall feed, but they cannot be kept far into the winter. Following these there is no vegetable that equals the sugar beet, especially in the delightful flavor and richness that it imparts to milk, and an allowance of even three or four a day to each cow, chopped into convenient bits and fed in connection with hay, is eaten with avidity and conduces to health as well as enjoyment for the animals.

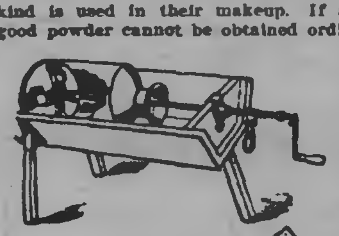
Next to the sugar beets and even easier to grow are the mangels, raised exclusively for stock, and in European countries forming a large part of the food, a practice that might be most profitably imitated in America, where the grain feeds have lately greatly advanced in price.

Scours In Pigs.

For two or three years we had some trouble with our young Berkshire pigs at weaning time, says a breeder. Frequently the best of each litter would have white scours. For several years we have had no trouble along this line, as we began feeding a side dish of wheat middlings, fed dry in a creep while the young pigs were still on the dam. Since we began this dry feed we have had no trouble. I think that the difficulty comes in most cases by giving a wet feed, but where dry feed is used no trouble occurs. We always feed warm, soaked corn at the same time. After they are weaned they are fed twice a day just what they will clean up nicely.

Cleaning Dairy Utensils.

The proper way of washing milk utensils is something that is often neglected. All milk should be rinsed from the surface of the tin before it comes in contact with the boiling water, as the heat will cook the milk on to the surface, forming a coating very difficult to remove. If this coating is not removed it furnishes food and a place for bacterial growth. This is especially true in localities that are damp. After rinsing the vessels free from milk they may be washed in hot water. There should be added to the water some good cleansing compound. Some of the so called washing powders are not good, for a grease of some kind is used in their makeup. If a good powder cannot be obtained ordinary commercial sal soda and a little borax can be used. It is always important to wash milk utensils as soon as possible after their contents are emptied. If left to stand two or three hours some of the milk dries, and then the more hot water is put on it the closer it sticks. Always wash milk pails and cans first with cold water.



A MILK CAN WASHER.

THE DAIRYMAN.

Provide good milk pails. There are a great number of patent milk pails on the market that prevent filth from falling into the milk. Strainer top pails are quite extensively used and are very effective in keeping out foreign matter.

Regularity in Work of Dairy.

Too much importance cannot be attached to the regularity in all dairy work. The cow is a creature of habits. The more regular the attention given her the better work she will do in the dairy. Teach the boys to be kind and gentle to the cows, to feed them properly and with regularity. Try to make the cows contented as possible. Gentle treatment, good feeding and regularity are the three requirements in handling dairy cows.

Remedy For Cowpox.

Oxide of zinc ointment rubbed on the cow's bag morning and night is a very good remedy for cowpox. The disease is carried from cow to cow on the hands of the milker. So when the disease is in the herd the milkers should wash their hands carefully after milking each cow. Do not use the milk from affected cows until they are cured.

For Kicking Cows.

To cure cows of kicking when being milked a dairyman says a remedy which has proved effectual without a single exception is simply clean lard. About fifteen or twenty minutes before the cow is milked the first time the lard should be applied to the teats, and when through milking wipe the teats perfectly dry with a soft, dry cloth and apply the lard again. This was usually found necessary for about five or six milkings. Many milkers have a bad habit of wetting their fingers when milking, and when the teats of young cows are left in this condition, especially in winter time, they get sore. On the other hand, lard heals or takes away the soreness that is so natural, caused by the action of rough, hard hands upon the teats that are not accustomed to the milking process.

Number four party surveying the Hudson Bay Railway are believed lost.

The C.N.R. will reconstruct its line from Winnipeg to Duluth.

THE SHEPHERD.

Overfeeding or sudden changes from poor to very rich food, combined with want of exercise, if not actual causes, will contribute to the development of the loss of wool among ewes.

Selecting the Breeders.

Do not buy a ram for a breeder unless he has a good length of wool on his belly and legs—wool down to the hoof. In selecting ewes for breeders special care should be taken to secure good, thrifty animals of medium size, compact and well formed.

Importance of Dry Bedding.

Equally important as pure air, water, salt, good feed, etc., is the matter of dry bedding. Sheep do not like to stand with wet feet, and if your shed has nothing but a wet floor or bottom for them to stand on you will find a part of the growth in value which represents possible profits to you is soaking away into that wet floor, never more to be available to you. Keep your growing lambs warm and dry, and you will find you are conserving your profits.

Good Feed Brings Hardy Lambs.

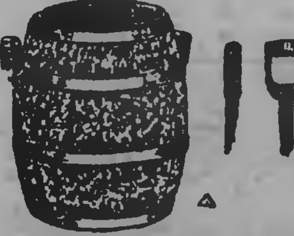
Many sheepmen lose on their sheep because they allow their ewes to run down and become weak, with the result that their lambs are puny things, which have a hard tussle to pull through. Ewes should be fed liberally of both grain and forage. Oats, with some corn, with plenty of clover or alfalfa hay, will bring them to lambing time in a fit condition to bear strong lambs and take care of them. An occasional allowance of bran and meal will also be good for them from the time they are taken off pasture until they are turned out in the spring.

Value of Salt For Sheep.

Experiments recently made for the purpose of ascertaining the nutritive value of salt for sheep show that those which have been fed salt gained in weight four and one-half pounds more than those which received no salt. Moreover, the sheep which received salt produced one and one-third pounds more wool and of a better quality than those which received no salt.

Shovel Handles For a Barrel.

A couple of railroad laborers carrying a barrel of water between them clearly demonstrated that necessity is the mother of invention. A closer investigation showed that they had made use of the handles from two broken shovels. The handles were cut to the proper length and trimmed on an angle, as shown in the sketch. These handles were then fastened to the sides of the barrel opposite each other with large screws.



EASY PLAN FOR CARRYING A BARREL.

Japanese Millet.

Japanese millet requires less attention than corn, is easily cut and handled and gives a great yield to the acre. Under favorable circumstances it will grow four to five feet high. The cattle eat it as well as they do the corn, with about the same results in milk and butter production.

Leasing the Farm.

Put everything down in writing when you lease a farm. Memory cannot be relied on. It is remarkable how different men will remember different things. If it is all down in black and white there can be no mistake.

MY LUCKY DAY

Mr. Thomas Wyfie (Box 384), Galt, says:—"It was the luckiest day of my life when I struck PSYCHINE, for I truly believe I shouldn't be alive now but for that.

"A neglected cold was the beginning of my trouble, and what seemed to be a simple ailment, soon developed into a serious and dangerous condition. I got so low that it was scarcely possible for me to walk around, and I lost so much flesh that I looked like a skeleton. I was just about ready to 'hand in my checks,' although only 20 years of age. The medicine the doctor gave me made me worse and I got disgusted. Then I struck PSYCHINE."

"PSYCHINE did miracles for me. The first bottle gave me new life and courage, and in less than no time I began to put on flesh rapidly, and I felt I was on the high road to recovery. My appetite returned, and I 'ate like a hunter,' as the saying goes. My friends were surprised, and hardly knew me. In three months I was as strong and well as ever, and returned to work in the mill. I have not had a day's illness since. Nobody could wish for better health than I enjoy, and it is all owing to PSYCHINE. It should be in everybody's hands."

For Coughs, Colds, Loss of Appetite, Throat, Lung and Stomach Trouble, take Psychine. Druggists and Stores sell at 50c and $1.00. Send to DR. T. A. SLOCUM, Limited, Spadina Avenue, Toronto, for a TRIAL FREE.

Bean Milk.

"Pigeon milk is a myth," said a milkman, "but there actually is a bean milk. It is drunk, put in tea and coffee and even frozen for ice cream. The Japs are the inventors. This milk is made of the soja bean. The bean is first soaked, then boiled in water. After the liquid turns white, sugar and phosphate of potash are added, and the boiling is kept up till a substance of the thickness of molasses is obtained. Nobody could tell this bean milk from condensed milk, and when water is added it can't be told from the fresh. The Japanese poor use nothing else."

BABY FELL ON TO THE STOVE

Mrs T. S. Dougall, of 523 Flora Avenue, Winnipeg, says:—"My baby girl was arranging some of her doll's washing on a clothes rack beside the stove, when she fell, and her hand, being thrown out to try and save herself, came in contact with the side of the hot stove. She sustained a serious burn, and her cries and screams were terrible.

"I sent out to the druggist for the best remedy he had to use on a burn. He said there was nothing to equal Zam-Buk, and sent back a supply. I applied this, and it soothed the pain so quickly that the child laughed through her tears. I bound up the hand in Zam-Buk, and each day applied Zam-Buk frequently and liberally, until the burn was quite cured. The little one was soon able to go on with her play, and we had no trouble with her during the time the burn was being healed. I feel very grateful for this cure, and would recommend all mothers to keep Zam-Buk handy for emergencies like this."

This is good advice. Zam-Buk being purely herbal in its composition, is particularly suited to the delicate skin of children. While a powerful healer, it is also highly antiseptic. Applied to a burn, a cut, a scald, of a scratch—to any injury of the skin, in fact—it will kill all disease germs, and removes all danger of festering, blood-poisoning or inflammation. At the same time it stimulates the cells to great activity, and fresh healthy skin is soon produced to repair the damage. Fifty cents spent on a box of Zam-Buk has saved scores of people as many dollars, to say nothing of saving hours of pain!

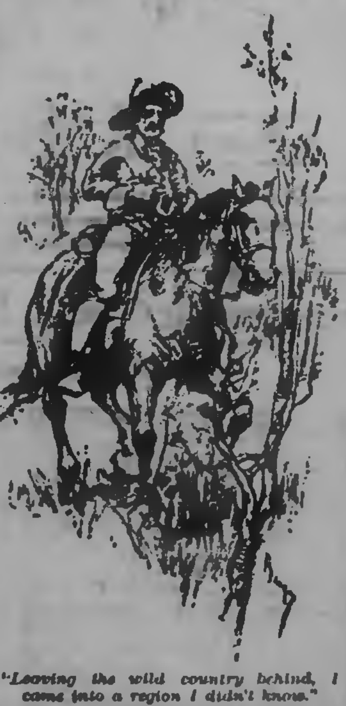
Her plan was for me to take the youngster away that night and for her to join us later, because pursuit was certain, and three could be traced where one might disappear. She would follow when the opportunity offered. I saw that he had instilled a terror into her and that she feared him like death, but as I thought it over her scheme seemed feasible, so I agreed. I was to ride west that hour with the sleeping babe and conceal myself at a place we selected, while she would say that the little one had wandered away and been lost in the canyon or anything else to throw Bennett off. After a time she would join us. Well, the little girl never waked when I took her in my arms nor when the mother broke down again and talked to me like a crazy woman.

"I traveled hard that night and swapped horses at daylight. Then, leaving the wild country behind, I came into a region I didn't know and found a Mexican woman who tended the child for me, for I was close by the place where Merridy was to come. Every night I went into the village in hopes that some word had arrived, and I waited patiently for a week. Then I got the blow. I heard it from the loafers around the little postoffice first, but it dazed me so I wouldn't believe it till I borrowed the paper and read the whole story, with the type dancing and leaping before me. It took some hours for it to seep in even after that, and for years I recalled every word of the d——d lie as if it had been branded on me with hot irons. They called it a shocking crime, the most brutal murder California had ever known, and in the headlines was my name in letters that struck me between the eyes like a hammer. Mrs. Dan Bennett had been foully murdered by me in a fit of sudden jealousy, and I had disappeared with the baby! The husband had returned unexpectedly to find her dying, so he said, but too far gone to call for help and with barely sufficient strength to tell him who did it and how! Then the paper went on with the tale of my courting her and her turning me down for Bennett. It told how I had gone off alone up into the the hills, turning into a bear that nobody, man or child, could approach. It said I had brooded there all this time till the mania got uppermost and so came down to wreak my vengeance. They never even did me the credit of calling me crazy. I was a fiend incarnate, a beast without soul and a lot of things like that—and, remember, I had never harmed a living thing in all my life. However, that wasn't what hurt. What turned me into a dull, dead, suffering thing was the knowledge that she was gone. For hours I couldn't get beyond that fact. Then came the realization that Bennett had done it, for I reasoned that he had dragged a hint of the truth from her by very force of the fear he held her in—and slain her. God! The awful rage that came over me! But there was nothing to do. I had sworn to guard the little one, so I couldn't take vengeance on him. I couldn't go back and prove my innocence, for that would give the child to him.



"Leaving the wild country behind, I came into a region I didn't know."

"What a night I spent! The next day I saw I had been indicted by the grand jury and was a wanted man. From a distance I watched myself become an outlaw; watched the county put a price upon my head, which Bennett doubled; watched public opinion rise to such a heat that posses began to scour the mountains. What I noted in particular was a statement in the paper that 'the sorrowing husband takes his bereavement with the quiet courage which marks a brave man!' It happened that the Mexican woman couldn't read and talked little. Still, I knew they'd find me soon—it couldn't be otherwise—so I made another run for it, swearing an oath, however, before I left that I'd come back and have that gambler's heart.

"It was lucky I went, for they uncovered my sign the next day, and the country where I'd hidden blazed like a field of dry grass. They were close on my heels, and they closed in from every quarter. But, pshaw, I know the woods like an Indian, and the wild things were my friends again, which would have made it play if I'd been alone, but a girl child of three was harder to manage. So I cowered and skulked day after day like a thief or the murderer they thought me, working always farther into the hidden places, traveling by night with the little one asleep on my bosom, by day playing with her in some leafy glen, with my pursuers so close behind that for weeks I never slept, and my love for the child increased daily till it became almost an insanity.

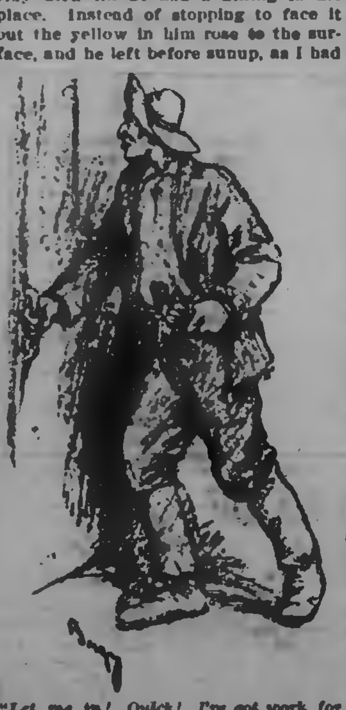
"We had close squeezes many times, but I finally won, in spite of the fact that they tracked us clear to the edge of the desert, for I had hit for the state line, knowing that Nevada was a wilderness and feeling that I'd surely lose them there. And I did. But in doing it I nearly lost Merridy. You see, the constant travel and hardship was too much for a prattling baby, and she fell sick from the heat, the dust and thirst.

"I was bound for the nearest ranch or camp where a woman could be found; but, as luck would have it, I went through without trying. I had gone farther from men and things, however, than I thought, and this return pursuit was a million times worse than the other, for I couldn't go fast enough to shake Death, who ran with his hand on my cantle or rode on my horse's rump. It was then I found Allunа. She was with a hunting party of Pah-Utes, who knew nothing of me nor of the white man's affairs and cared less, and when I saw the little squaw I rode my horse up beside her, laid the sick child in her arms, then tumbled out of the saddle. They had a harder job to pull me through than they did to save Merridy.

"The little one was playing around several days before I got back my reason. Meanwhile the party had moved north, taking us with them, and, as it happened, just missing a posse who were returning from the desert.

"When I was able to get about I told Alluna that I must be going, but as I told her I watched her face and saw the sign I wanted. The white girl had clutched at her like she had at me, and she couldn't give her up, so I made a dicker with her old man. It took all the money I had to buy that squaw, but I knew the kiddie must have a woman's care, and the three of us started out soon after alone and broke.

"Since then we three have never rested. I left them once in Idaho and went back to Mesa, riding all the way, mostly by night, but Bennett was gone. He'd run down mighty fast after Merridy died till he had a killing in his place. Instead of stopping to face it out the yellow in him rose to the surface, and he left before sunup, as I had left, making a clean get-away, too, for there was no such hullabaloo raised about killing a man as there was about—the other. So my trip was all for nothing.



"Let me in! Quick! I've got work for you to do!"

"I figured it wouldn't be right to either you or Necia to let you go it blind, and so I came in to tell you this whole thing and to give myself up."

Gale stopped, then poured himself another drink.

"To give yourself up?" echoed Burrell vaguely. "How do you mean?" He had sat like one in a trance during the long recital, only his eyes alive.

"I'm under indictment for murder," said the trader. "I have been for fifteen years, and there's no chance in the world for me to prove my innocence."

"Have you told Necia?" the young man inquired.

"No; you'll have to do that. I never could. She might—disbelieve. What's more, you mustn't tell her yet. Wait till I give the word."

"John Gale," said the lieutenant, "you're the bravest man I ever knew and the best." He choked a bit. "You sacrificed all that life meant when this girl was a baby, and now when she has come into womanhood you give up your blood for her. By all that's great, you are a man! I want your hand!"

Then he inquired irrelevantly: "But what about Bennett, Mr. Gale? You say you never found him?"

The trader answered after a moment's hesitation, "He is still at large," at which his companion exclaimed, "I'd love to meet him in your stead!"

Gale seemed seized with a desire to speak, but even while he hesitated out of the silent night there came the sound of quick footsteps approaching briskly, as if the owner were in haste and knew whither he was bound.

"Lieutenant Burrell!" a gruff voice cried. "Let me in! Quick! I've got work for you to do! Open up! This is Ben Stark!"

CHAPTER XV.

AND A KNOT TIGHTENED.

A DAY of shattered hopes is a desolate thing, but the night of such a day is desolate indeed. In all his life Poleon Doret had never sunk to such depths of despondency, for his optimistic philosophy and his buoyant faith in the goodness of life forbade it. The arrival of the freight steamer afforded him some distraction, but there was only a small consignment for the store, and that was quickly disposed of; so, leaving the other citizens of Flambeau to wrangle over their private merchandise, he went back to his solitary vigil, which finally became so unbearable that he sought to escape his thoughts, or at least to drown them for awhile, amid the lights and life and laughter of Stark's saloon.

Runnion annoyed him with his volubility, for the news of his good fortune had fired the man with a reckless disregard for money, and he turned to gaming as the one natural recourse of his ilk.

It was shortly after midnight that Stark came into the place. Poleon was not too absorbed in his own fortunes to fail to notice the extraordinary ferocity and exhilaration of the saloon keeper nor that his face was keener, his nostrils thinner, his walk more nervous and his voice more cutting than usual when he spoke to Runnion:

"Come here!"

"I'll be with you when I finish this hand," said the player over his shoulder.

"Come here!" Stark snapped his command, and Runnion threw down his cards.

Drawing the reluctant gambler aside, Stark began to talk rapidly to him, almost within earshot of Poleon, who watched them, idly wondering what Stark had to say that could make Runnion start and act so queerly. Well, it was their affair. They made a bad pair to draw to. He knew that Runnion was the saloon keeper's lieutenant and obeyed implicitly his senior's commands. He could distinguish nothing they said, nor was he at all curious until a knot of noisy men crowded up to the bar and, forcing the two back nearer to the table where he sat, his sharp ears caught these words from Runnion's lips:

"Not with me! She'd never go with me!" And Stark's reply:

"She'll go where I send her and with anybody I tell her to."

The Frenchman lost what followed, for a newly dealt hand required study. He scanned his cards and tossed them face up before the dealer; then he overheard Runnion say:

"It's the only one in camp. He might sell it if you offered him enough." At this Stark called one of the men at the bar aside, and the three began to dicker.

"Not a cent less," the third man announced loudly. "There ain't another Peterborough in town."

Going outside, Runnion said again to Stark:

"She won't go with me, Ben. She don't like me. You see, I made love to her, and she got mad and wanted me killed."

"She'll never know who you are until it's too late to turn back," said the other, "and you are the only man I can trust to take her through. I can trust you. You owe me too much to be crooked."

"Oh, I'll act square with you! But, look here, what's all this about anyhow? Why do you want that girl? You said you didn't care for her that way. You told me so yourself. Anyway, I ain't the safest kind of a chaperon for a good looking girl."

Stark laid a cold hand on Runnion's shoulder close up to his neck.

"Never mind what I said. She's mine, and you've got to promise to be straight with her. I've trusted you before, and if you're not on the level now say so. It will save you a lot of trouble."

"Oh, all right!" exclaimed Runnion testily. "Only it looks mighty queer."

He melted into the darkness, and Stark returned to his cabin, where he paced back and forth impatiently, smiling evilly now and then, consulting his watch at frequent intervals. A black look had begun to settle on his face, but it vanished when Necia came, and he met her with a smile.

To be Continued.

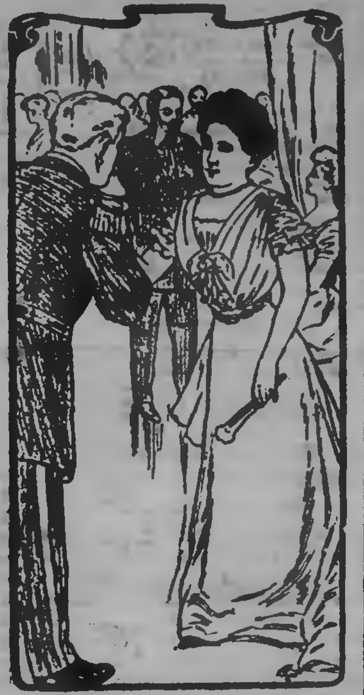
Woman's World

A CABINET HOSTESS.

Mrs. Philander C. Knox, Wife of the New Secretary of State.

One of the most popular women of the Taft cabinet will be Mrs. Philander C. Knox, wife of the secretary of state. This gracious lady will fill her new position with the same grace and distinction she displayed as chatelaine of the attorney general's home in the Roosevelt administration.

Secretary and Mrs. Knox are the most youthful looking couple in official life. Jokes about their identity being submerged in their juvenile appearance are many. That of the old countryman from Pittsburg when Mr. Knox was attorney general who loitered about the official office and finally sidled in when the messenger was not looking is one in which Mr. Knox delights. The man approached him stealthily and, leaning over, whispered hoarsely: "Son, I am from Pittsburg and I want to see Knox. Here's a dollar if you slip me in right now."



MRS. PHILANDER C. KNOX.

There is another about the old lady who called to see Mrs. Knox and was kindly received by the hostess herself and who sat and sat and finally blurted out: "Miss Knox, you have been very good to me, but I want to see your mother. Will you just run and call her?" Mrs. Knox is petite, but as her distinguished husband is less than five feet seven she is just the right height to make the ideal couple. Her gowns are gracefully chosen and always in perfect harmony with her environs and the event. She does not attach that superlative importance to her gowns as do some Washington dames with much less income, but she is so exquisitely neat that she always looks well. Some one said that she reminds one of a little brown wren, for she is partial to brown and other subdued shades.

There are four Knox children, all well known in Washington, Pittsburg and Valley Forge.

The eldest, Mrs. James Tindle, was Rebecca Page Knox, a serious minded young woman who refused to accept the homage which comes to a cabinet minister's daughter. Reed Knox, the eldest son, startled Washington society by eloping with Miss Helen McCook, one of the clan of the fighting McCooks. Perhaps Mrs. Knox is prouder of her second son, Hugh, who is very like his father and a lawyer practicing in Pittsburg. Philander C. Knox, Jr., the third son, has been a boon companion of Kermit Roosevelt. He is known as Phil, and he is one of the young men who should be good politicians, for he is such an excellent "mixer." Phil gave a Christmas party in his early Washington career, and his guests included newsboys, messengers and bootblacks, and he insisted upon the best in the house being served for their delectation.

Mrs. Knox is the daughter of the late Andrew D. Smith of Allegheny, Pa., and as Miss Lillian Smith she was as popular in her girlhood as in her mature womanhood. Having enjoyed wealth all her life and being inured to social life, Mrs. Knox is an admirable hostess in any circle.

Chasing Away the Blues.

Every once in awhile some one learns something that he has known all the time. Paradoxical as this may seem, it is true. In a general way, you know a hundred things you only half stop to think about and really never put into practice. And then some day by mere chance you find out this old truth for yourself, and from then on it seems like a brand new discovery to you.

Perhaps, for instance, you have often heard that fresh air will do for you what drugs couldn't accomplish. A certain Cleveland girl who just the other day thought she was staring a nervous collapse in the face had always heard this, too, but it never occurred to her to take it seriously.

The nervous collapse she did take seriously, however. So would you if your head was throbbing and your muscles fairly tense with overwrought nerves. Things looked pretty black. There were hard things to bear, and—well, what's the use?—the world looked pretty dark. Possibly a doctor could help. Today there was no time, but tomorrow she would surely go. In the meantime there was an engagement which drove her out of the house. The car was not coming.

"Shall we walk?" a chance companion said.

It didn't matter—nothing mattered—so they swung off down the street, with a fresh breeze blowing against their faces.

Perhaps there was something in the way the sun shone that day, but after a few blocks things began to look just barely possible to that girl, and the "nervous collapse" did not seem quite so imminent. With another quarter mile tense muscles were relaxed, and there was only the faintest possible throb perceptible in the region of her head.

You're going to guess the end, but it happens to be a true story, and so you must hear it. By the time the errand was done the world seemed like a very livable sort of place to that girl, who had been on the verge of a breakdown.

Of course you have always heard about a brisk walk in the fresh air and its healing powers, and you always have been perfectly willing to take somebody else's word for it.

But just suppose you actually try it for yourself. Try it to cure headaches and blues and doubts and fears and all manner of hobgoblins that threaten and pursue and see for yourself what a leveling, vision brightening influence there is in just plain sunshine and air. If it doesn't work there is something on your conscience.

A special meeting of the city council will be held tonight at 8.30 o'clock to consider an important matter.

The steamer Chas. O. Jenkins arrived at Ashland from Fort William, and is the first to cross Lake Superior this season.

Brantford will do its own street paving.

BUILDING STATISTICS FOR MARCH SHOW PETERBOROUGH TO BE SECOND IN INCREASE

Winnipeg is First in Increase Over 1908—Twelve Cities Show Average Gain of 127.50 per cent.

Instead of there being any indication of a let up in the building line greater activity becomes manifest as the season advances, and it seems no longer a question as to whether Canada will surpass all previous records, but more of a matter of speculation as to how great the gain will actually be on this year's work. Returns for March as supplied Construction from centres reflecting the situation in every section of the Dominion, show that not only has the month registered a material increase over the substantial gains made in the two preceding months but that a remarkable building wave is sweeping over the entire country.

Of the fifteen cities reporting, twelve submit comparative figures, which place the gain for the month at 127.12 per cent over the corresponding period last year, while in no place it is gratifying to note, has a decrease been recorded. One thing quite evident in view of the volume of construction now being carried on, is that the money of the country has found its way back into the channels of trade and that loans for good prospective investments are much easier to negotiate than for some time past.

The biggest increase for the month —646 per cent—is noted in the case of Winnipeg, which so far this year show an expenditure of $1,059,000 for new buildings as against $141,000 for the same months of 1908.

Peterborough has the second largest gain that of 294 per cent, and while the amount is small, it shows nevertheless that work undertaken, was greatly in excess of that of the corresponding month of last year.

Edmonton the only city in last month's table to show a falling off, has reasserted herself by recording a gain of 269 per cent, and Calgary has again come forward with an increase of 125.41 per cent, which is indeed remarkable in view of the high percentages this city has shown in the past four months.

Substantial gains are also noted in the case of Vancouver and Victoria, which surpass last year's figures for March by 64.50 per cent and 9.78 per cent, respectively. Both of these cities have shown a steady advance since the first of the year, and it is reported that at no previous time has there been as great an amount of work in immediate prospect.

A striking feature of the month's report is the strong upward trend, which prevailed throughout Ontario. Every city submitting comparative figures has more than doubled the amount in building operations, as compared to the month of March of last year.

Fort William's gain was 26.9 per cent; Toronto 103 per cent; Ottawa 106 per cent; London 175 per cent; Peterborough as previously stated, 294 per cent; and it is quite likely that equally as good a showing would have been recorded in the case of Windsor, Berlin and Kingston had comparative figures for the corresponding month of last year been submitted. From the manner in which Toronto is forging ahead it looks very much as though her total valuation for new buildings this year will come close to the $16,000,000 mark. Fort William also will undoubtedly have a much higher per cent gain than ever before, while Ottawa will, in all probability witness the greatest building year in her history.

In Montreal everything is moving along in a most satisfactory manner the gain for the month of 90.34 per cent following the marke in January and February that the metropolis is enjoy material expansion.

Halifax's gain of 273 per brings her conspicuously t and despite of the falling ence in January this city h trebled her figures on th work.

Reports from the variou to future work shows the be most propitious. SPLENDID MUSICAL NUMBERS AT THE BENEFIT CONCERT FOR CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

A Large Number Were Present and Each Selection Was Enthusiastically Received—Programme Was Furnished by Local Talent—Held at Conservatory Music Hall.

The benefit concert held for the Children's Aid Society last evening at the Conservatory Music Hall, provided one of the choicest musical programmes which has been presented before an audience in this city for some time. The audience was large and those who were present were given a treat which it is not their good fortune to enjoy very often. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental numbers, in which the best of local talent took part, and each number received well merited applause from the appreciative audience.

The selections by the Conservatory Orchestra gave that organization an opportunity of demonstrating their ability as a well-trained and strictly high class body of musicians, much to the enjoyment of the audience. Miss Helen Davies in a solo and also in a duet with Mr. W. McIlroy, as on previous occasions, pleased her listeners with her beautiful voice and by her fine expression. A quintette, composed of Messrs. McIlroy, Cutting, Gillespie, Crane and Nelson, richly deserved the appreciation which was tendered them at the conclusion of the number. Miss McCaw, of the Conservatory staff, with a piano selection captivated those present by the beautiful manner in which it was rendered. A vocal solo by Miss Lavina Hallihan gave that talented young artist an opportunity of demonstrating her ability as a singer, much to the delight of the audience. Mr. W. McIlroy, who is always a favorite, sang in his usual capable and effective manner. Miss Reesor was heard to good advantage in a vocal solo. The Conservatory of Music is indeed fortunate in being represented by such a clever and charming vocalist.

Miss Choate's excellently played violin solo drew forth the generous applause of the audience, and the number was given with her customary brilliancy. Mr. Lee sang a tenor solo in splendid voice, and the selection was most cordially received. One of the most pleasing features of the programme was the quintette number, so delightfully sung by Miss Davies and Mr. Crane's quartette.

The closing number of the programme was a finely rendered duet by Miss Reesor and Mr. McIlroy.

The programme was as follows;

PART ONE.

Selection—Conservatory Orchestra.
Solo—Miss Helen Davies.

SUMMER PROGRAMME OF BOYS' DEPT. OF Y.M.C.A.

Many boys and parents imagine that as soon as the summer comes the Y.M.C.A. closes down until fall. A few years ago that used to be the case. Some Y.M.C.A.'s at the present day do so. But the Boys Department, under the supervision of Mr. G. T. Evans, will be just as active as during the winter months, as will be seen by the programme that has been mapped out for May. But instead of carrying on an active work inside the building the boys will go outside.

When the warmer weather comes many tramps and hiking parties will be arranged, and the parents need have no fear in letting their boys go, as they will be well looked after.

The programme for May is as follows:

May 1—Paper chase at 2.30 p.m.

May 8—Open.

May 15—Tramp for wild flowers. Boys will leave the building at 2.00 o'clock, take a lunch, and return home about 7.30. The flowers will be taken to the hospitals on Sunday.

May 20.—One mile trial race for purpose of selecting a team of ten boys to run a relay race of one mile each from Lakefield to Peterborough on May 29th against the time for the Examiner race. Trial will be held at 2.30. Business boys' trial at 7.30. The first ten to finish will represent the "Y" in the relay.

May 21—Kite flying contest. This is a new feature that will be introduced. Prizes will be given as follows:

To the boy who gets out 600 yards of string first. To the boy getting out most string. To the boy flying the largest kite. Boys had better get busy and make their kites now.

May 22—Three mile walk at Nicholl's Oval at 2.30 p.m.

May 29—Relay race, Lakefield to Peterborough. Team of ten runners to run against time. Leave Lakefield at 2.30.

VOL. LVIII., No. 93. PETERBOROUGH, ONT., CANADA, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1909 TEN CENTS PER WEEK

SESSION OF THE DOMINION HOUSE IS NEARING THE END

Commons May Prorogue Before the Twentieth of May—Sir Wilfrid Gives Notice of Extra Sittings and Several Signs Are Given That Proceedings Are Drawing to a Close.

Ottawa, April 28.—That the end of the session is in sight, is indicated by a notice of a resolution by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that after this week the House will sit in the mornings from 11 to 1 o'clock and on Wednesday evenings.

Also, in the railway committee it was announced that the last meeting would be held on Thursday, while the Conservative caucus yesterday morning favored a winding up of the session by May 20.

Hon. Mr. Fisher introduced a bill yesterday to create a permanent commission on the conservation of the natural resources of Canada. There are to be thirty-two members. Twelve ex-officio, consisting of three from the Federal Cabinet and one Provincial Minister from each province who is charged with the administration of lands, forests and mines, including the chairman and twenty to be chosen by order in council. The commissioners are not to be paid any remuneration except for traveling expenses. One meeting at least each year will be held.

Mr. Verville moved to discharge from the order paper his bill respecting the hours of labor on public works. He proposes to bring the question up in another way and it would be impossible to do it with the bill before the House. There is no chance of the bill being advanced this session.

The budget debate was continued by E. M. Macdonald (Pictou) who argued against a reduction of duty on coal, claimed that the Liberal party had never been the party of free trade fads and expressed the hope that the British preference would be limited to goods entering Canada by Canadian ports.

William Wright (Muskoka) dealt with the extravagant expenditures of the Government, yet his district, which pays a quarter of a million yearly in taxes, was refused a necessary $4,000 postoffice for the Town of Gravenhurst.

G. H. Bradbury told that 25,000 acres of Dominion lands in Manitoba had fallen into the hands of Liberal speculators at low prices.

Mr. Stewart of Hamilton concluded the debate. His main argument was for increased protection on stoves. He made a good impression.

SHOULD TRAIN SAILORS SAYS THE HON. G. W. ROSS

Ontario's Former Premier Thinks Provision Should be Made for Instruction in Seamanship and Navigation.

Ottawa, April 28.—In the Senate yesterday, Hon. G. W. Ross moved a resolution that "In the opinion of the Senate, liberal provision should be made at once for the instruction of Canadian mariners in seamanship and navigation, with a view to the development of the shipping interests of Canada, and, if need be, the protection of Canadian commerce in coastal waters and on the high seas."

Senator Ross said he wished to call attention to the inadequate education now provided in Canada for seamen. Canada was spending about seven millions a year on military training. We should halt and consider what can usefully be done for the education of Canadian sea forces. As far as he could ascertain not a thousand dollars a year was being spent on naval matters. The number of ships of Canadian register had declined in the last 30 years, which was natural if men were not trained to man the ships. The number of ships of Canadian register was now 7,528, having a value of about 20 million dollars, which value was greatly increased when cargoes were added. They carried many valuable lives in passengers and crews.

With the exception of Great Britain, Canada had the greatest number of fishermen of any country in the world, enrolling last year 71,254, or half the number of men required to man the British navy, and three times as many as were on the American fleets during the Spanish-American war.

Sir Richard Cartwright pointed out that the carrying out of the resolution would envolve a large expenditure of public money and should have serious consideration. The question was now under the consideration of the Canadian Government, which proposed to consult with the Imperial authorities as to the best manner in which Canada could give naval aid.

Senator G. W. Ross accepted the suggestion of Sir Richard Cartwright and withdrew the resolution.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Edward Lalonde was drowned near Kingston while breaking a log jam.

John Martin, farmer, residing near Englehart, hanged himself on Saturday.

Harold McGuire of Napanee was blinded in one eye by running against a barb wire fence.

Two boys named Miller were burned to death at Vancouver. They had been locked in the house.

The body of M. J. Urquhart, aged 39, of Sarnia, was found in the river at Detroit. He had been missing since February.

Owing to lack of documents and witnesses the royal commission into Montreal's affairs was yesterday postponed until to-day.

H. W. Richardson is the new president of the Kingston Board of Trade.

Michipicoten Mining Camp on Lake Superior is in need of supplies.

H. E. Martin, a bank clerk, is under arrest in Philadelphia, accused of making a practice of ripping the skirts of young women passengers on street cars.

ARCH BRIDGE IS DAMAGED

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 28.—The recent ice jam damaged the retaining walls of the upper steel arch bridge on both sides of the river, the greatest damage having been done on the Canadian side, where the wall is cracked. On the American side the damage is thought to extend below the water line. The walls were constructed to withstand an immense pressure. There is every evidence that the ice pack attacked the arch itself on the American side.

From the mouth of the river upward for several miles the river is practically clear of ice.

Explosion on Jap Schooner.

Vancouver, April 28.—A Japanese halibut schooner was loading a supply of gasoline on Monday night, when she caught fire, and immediately there was a deafening explosion. Half a dozen men were blown into the air, while others took to the water to escape the flames, and several nearby steamers steamed away into the harbor.

The damage amounts to about two thousand dollars. One Jap's jaw was torn away.

HAVE SECURED MISSING LINK

Police Said to Have New Evidence in the Kinrade Case

Hamilton, April 28.—As a result of a sudden visit of detectives to the Kinrade residence yesterday, it is whispered to-day that some strong evidence corroborative of facts learned in Virginia was unearthed. Inspector Miller, at whose suggestion the Pinkertons were sent to Virginia and who was here for a short while yesterday, absolutely declined to discuss the matter.

Whether the inquest resumes on Thursday night will depend altogether on the ability of the crown to secure the attendance of Florence Kinrade. Mr. Blackstock is determined to wait until he can have an opportunity of asking her a few more questions on matters which have become pertinent to the enquiry since her last appearance.

Must Find New Home.

Toronto, April 28.—Owing to the selling out to-morrow of the "Abberley" on Sherbourne street, the Kinrades will have to find another home. It is understood that they applied for rooms at a nearby apartment house, but were refused.

Meanwhile the Thiel Detective Agency has two men on the job night and day, so that the family's every move will be known.

CAUCUS PASSED RESOLUTIONS

Ottawa, April 28.—At the Conservative caucus yesterday morning it is understood that the chief item of business was the G.T.R. loan bill, which will be before the House to-day.

Two or three resolutions will be submitted by the Opposition. One of them will call upon the Government to insist on more tangible security from the railway for the loan of ten millions of dollars instead of the fourth mortgage, which the Government appears willing to accept.

Another suggestion is that if the railway is not able to finance the undertaking to its completion, the Government should take over the road and operate it for the public.

An Auto Fatality.

Katotowitz, Prussian Silesia, April 27.—Count Gustav Von Bellestrém was killed Monday when his automobile crashed into a tree. The count's skull was fractured.

BILL MINER IN THE EAST

The British Columbia Train Robber is Said to Have Been at Ottawa

Ottawa, April 28.—That the notorious Bill Miner was in Ottawa Saturday, April 17, and remained here for several hours; that he was in the house of David McNab, 12 Redpath street, and that he left the Redpath house for Carleton Place, where he remained for a time, to return to a hamlet near Ottawa, where he is now hiding, is the sensational story that The Evening Journal publishes:

The Journal says that McNab saw the local police. Chief Detective Dicks, interview last night by a reporter, bore this out, but says the name given was not McNab. He referred the man to Col. Sherwood, head of the Dominion police.

Miner Around Woodstock.

Woodstock, April 28. Police Chief Thompson says that last fall a farmer was robbed by a man whom he believed was Miner, and he sent west for a photo. This he showed to the woman where this man had been staying and she identified it.

A BANK CLERK IS SENTENCED

Saskatoon, Sask., April 28.—Fred Leo, the absconding Northern Crown Bank clerk, was before Judge McLorg yesterday morning. Counsel pleaded for leniency on account of his age and his parents, claiming that his holding two positions in the bank was the cause of the theft, enabling him to carry on operations for seven months without detection.

He was sentenced to two years on the first, second and fifth counts, one year on third and fourth, and on the sixth, seventh and eighth he was given four years, all to run concurrently. He left for Edmonton Penitentiary yesterday afternoon.

SLAUGHTER WAS AWFUL

Missionary Tells of Horrors of Massacre of Moslems at Adana

Constantinople, April 28.—An account of the disorders at Adana has been received here by telegraph from Rev. Herbert Adams Gibbons, a missionary.

"The entire Vilayet of Adana has been visited during the past five days by a terrible massacre of Armenians, the worst ever known in the history of the district.

"Conditions have been unsettled for some time and there has been animosity between Turks and Armenians owing to the political activity of the latter and their open purchasing of arms.

"William Chambers, field secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, and myself proceeded last Wednesday to the Konak and found a howling mob demanding arms with which to kill the Giaours. We then went to the Turkish office to summon the British consul. On the steps of the building we saw three Armenians who had been massacred.

"Adana became a hell. The bazaars were looted and set on fire. There was continuous shooting and killing in every part of the town and fires raged in many quarters.

"Moslems from the neighborhood began pouring into the city and notwithstanding our vehement protests, the Vali distributed arms to these men, alleging that they were Turkish reserves.

"On Friday the Armenians yielded, since when there has been little murdering.

"Adana is in a pitiable condition. The town has been pillaged and destroyed, and there are thousands of homeless people here without means of livelihood. The corpses lie scattered through the streets. On Saturday morning I counted a dozen cartloads of Armenian bodies in one-half hour being carrid to the river and thrown into the water. In the Turkish cemeteries graves are being dug wholesale."

LOCKED IN A BOX CAR

Chester Springs Man Has Harrowing Experience in United States

Elmira, N.Y., April 28.—Locked in a box-car, filled with barley, for four days and nights, without any food or water, Charles Connors of Chester Springs, Canada, looked like a ghost when he was helped from a Lackawanna train in the local yards yesterday afternoon by Lackawanna Detective Gorman and Patrolman McCarthy.

Connors had been working in Chicago as a laborer. On Saturday night he had something to eat in Chicago about 6 o'clock. He went to the railroad yards and climbed into a box-car, partially filled with barley. He was heading for Kingston, Ont., where he has relatives. He fell asleep for a short time and when he awoke he found the car had been locked and sealed.

In the meantime the car was taken to Buffalo and started on its final trip to New York. At Bath the brakeman heard hammering and shouting inside the car.

LAWLESSNESS AT HARRISBURG

Brantford, April 28.—As a result of lawless depredations by a gang of young men, a reign of terror is said to exist in the village of Harrisburg.

An aged couple named Knight are complaining against some young men, who it is alleged dragged the old fellow from his bed, and with rope ready, threatened to hang him, discharging revolver shots at the same time.

County Constable Kerr at Harrisburg yesterday found respectable residents afraid to give information for fear of molestation and having their property destroyed. The lawless element practically rule the village.

The first prosecutions will be made here Thursday.

MOHAMMED RESCHAD IS NEW SULTAN OF TURKEY

Late Ruler is Officially Deposed and Seems Glad He Got Off So Easily—Church, Parliament, Army and People Agree on Course.

Constantinople, April 28.—The reign of Abdul Hamid II. ended yesterday with his deposition and the accession of his brother, Mehemmed Reschad Effendi, as Mehemmed V., a variation of "Mahomet." It is considered inappropriate to assume the precise name of the prophet. Mehemmed V. is the 35th sovereign of Turkey, in male descent, of the House of Osman, the founder of empire, and the 29th Sultan since the conquest of Constantinople.

Martial law was relaxed last night and the people gave themselves over to celebrating. Many buildings were illuminated and thousands of rounds were fired by the soldiers for joy.

The sheik-ul-islam, supported by all the principal personages of the higher church administration, issued the Fetva, as the decree of deposition is called. It informed Mehemmed Reschad Effendi that he was chosen Sultan by the will of the church, the will of the Parliament, the will of the army and the will of the people. It admonished him to serve God and keep the sacred law, as communicated by the prophet. This Reschad humbly promised to do.

The Fetva was prepared Monday night, both Abdul Hamid and his brother, Prince Reschad, being informed at an early hour yesterday morning. The sheik-ul-islam, it is said, personally visited the Sultan and read him the decree. He informed His Majesty that the question having been put in canonical form before the sheik and his associates, as to whether Abdul Hamid had not forfeited the right to rule over the faithful, they decided yes.

Abdul bowed his head, saying: "It is the will of Allah."

At a secret session of the national assembly in the morning, the decree was read. It declared that Abdul Hamil II. must abdicate or be dethroned. The assembly unhesitatingly shouted: "Dethrone him."

A deputation, consisting of two Senators and two deputies, thereupon visited the palace at Yildis and communicated to the Sultan the assembly's resolution.

Abdul Hamid replied: "I expected this, it is fate. My only wish is that the lives of myself and family be safeguarded and that I may reside at the palace of Cheraghan, as I wish to die where I was born."

A similar deputation proceeded to the Dolmabagtsche palace in Galata, and informed Mehemmed Reschad Effendi of the nation's wish. The newly-proclaimed Sultan replied that he bowed to the will of the people.

The Sultan-elect came by boat across the Bosphorus to Stamboul. He landed near the sublime porte and thence proceeded to the Sraskrat in a closed carriage, drawn by black horses. A large detachment of cavalry acted as an escort, and carriages containing his sons and his suite followed.

Troops lined the entire route, comprising regulars and volunteers of all nationalities of the empire, and enthusiastic crowds watched the procession and acclaimed the new ruler. Ahmed Riza, the former president of the Chamber of Deputies, and Gen. Schefket and his officers received Mehemmed Reschad at the portals of the War Office. All kissed the prince's hand.

He was plainly dressed, wearing a black frock coat and appeared happy and radiant.

He was ushered into the great hall by the entire Cabinet, where had assembled the representatives of the nation and state dignitaries, civil, military and ecclesiastical. The prince expressed the wish to perform ablutions and say prayers.

Shortly before 4 o'clock the prince solemnly subscribed to the oath, which was administered by the Sheik-ul-Islam. A mollah offered prayers for the welfare of the new Sultan and the prosperity of the nation, and the assemblage responded "Amen." The batteries boomed an announcement to the city that a new ruler had been sworn into office, while all present congratulated Mehemmed V., who immediately proceeded to the Top-Kapou Palace to venerate the relics.

Subsequently, in receiving a deputation from the National Assembly, Mehemmed said:

"I am pleased to become the first constitutional sovereign. Doubtless my successor will improve upon me, but you may rely upon my doing my best. I also have suffered oppression and can therefore enter into the feelings of my fellow-sufferers. Let us endeavor to work together for the welfare of the country."

OLD LANDMARK DEVOURED BY FIRE EARLY THIS MORNING

Drill Hall Burned to Ground--Fire Spread to Other Buildings--Supposed be of Incendiary Origin---Brigade's Fine Work.

One of the most sensational fires in the history of the city took place early this morning, when the old drill shed building was burned to the ground and several buildings in the neighbourhood were only saved from destruction by the heroic and well-directed efforts of the fire brigade. The gale that was blowing at the time of the fire was terrific, and it was all the firemen could do to keep their footing. The water, too, that fell on the ground froze in a short time, and this made the work of battling against the flames all the more difficult.

In spite of the fact that the brigade was under such a great disadvantage they rendered splendid service, and great encouragement and commendation is due them for their fine efforts and the way they kept down what looked for a while like a sweeping conflagration. The residents in the vicinity of the blaze are very grateful to the firemen for saving their homes, for large pieces of burning wood were blown about like snow flakes in a gale and fire broke out in several houses near by. Mr. Brownscombe's residence, Mr. Ben Yelland's shop, the Y. M. C. A. building, some sheds on George street belonging to Mr. William Yelland, all took fire on the roof, the flames breaking out on the Y. M. C. A. roof in no less than three places. With the quick use of chemicals, however, and four lines of hose to the roofs of the buildings, no serious damage was done, only small holes being burned where flames started.

INCENDIARY ORIGIN.

"Somebody set the drill shed on fire," is the opinion of the citizens in the neighborhood, who were asked by the Review concerning its origin. And as far as can be found out it looks as though this theory was correct.

At the present time no other cause can be found to which it may be attributed.

ALARM AT 4.45.

At 4.45 o'clock this morning the alarm of fire reached the fire station by 'phone. It was sent in from the police station by P. C. Meharry. A cab driver saw the blaze and immediately informed Constable Meagher, who was at the police station at the time.

COULDN'T SAVE THE SHED.

Mr. Ben Yelland was working on his books in his house, Murray street, nearly opposite the drill shed, at the time the fire started. He heard the noise of the fire, but thinking it was something else, did not bother to investigate it. The house soon became filled with smoke, however, and he went to the door and opened it, when he saw the fire. He immediately went into the residence of Mr. Brownscombe, who telephoned an alarm to the fire hall. This was received almost simultaneously with the call from the police station.

When the brigade arrived on the scene the north end of the building had collapsed and the south end was enveloped in flames to such an extent, and the heat was so intense that several wires of the Peterborough Light and Power Company's system on Murray street, were melted. It was seen that the inflamable frame structure was doomed, and the attention of the firemen was turned towards saving the places near by.

DIFFERENT DETACHMENTS.

Eleven hundred and fifty feet of hose, affording four streams, were attached to adjacent hydrants and the water pressure was excellent. The chief detailed his men off in different directions to the south, stationing two at the Y. M. C. A., two at the rear of Mr. Brownscombe's residence, and two at the rear of Mr. Mr. William Yelland's blacksmith shop. Two men were sent down George street and with the aid of chemicals these sub-divisions of the brigade kept the fires in check.

A big spark wrought havoc at the awning in front of the Chinese laundry on George street, opposite Bethany Tabernacle, and the awning was burned up.

P. C. Meagher gave excellent assistance to the regular firemen, who appreciated his services very much. The small crowd present also did what they could to help the fire fighters.

The destroyed building was purchased some time ago by Mr. Robert Nicholls, who had been tearing it down and disposing of the material.

Cinders were carried for a great distance, blowing onto George street and quite a number of them being carried over to Victoria park.

LATEST NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Hotelman Fined.

Kincardine, April 28.—John J. Kelly, hotelman, appeared yesterday before Magistrates Barker and Mackenzie on a charge of permitting disorderly conduct in his hotel. Two men had been swearing and acting badly. A fine of $25 and costs was imposed. Inspector Avearst of Toronto prosecuted and Mr. McPherson of this town defended.

Brickmakers Strike.

Matteawan, N.Y., April 28.—Disorders rapidly followed the declaration yesterday of a strike by employes of many brickyards in this section. About 15 brickyards, employing nearly 2,000 men when running full, are affected, and more than 1,500 are out.

Suffragettes In Commons.

London, April 28.—Four women suffragists succeeded in getting in the outer lobby of the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, and fastened themselves by chains to statues in the lobby.

The police, profiting by their previous experiences, were provided with metal cutting implements, and quickly severed the chains and expelled the four women from the building.

Gas for Port Arthur.

Port Arthur, April 28.—W. A. Baehr, here representing a Chicago capitalist, will ask the city for a franchise to enable them to deliver gas to consumers from a proposed plant.

The joint committee of Port Arthur and Fort William councils yesterday decided to purchase four new pay-as-you-enter street cars.

Family Dynamited.

Montreal, April 28.—Yesterday afternoon at Ville Ray, near Montreal, a quarryman named Belanger was thawing out dynamite and, an explosion taking place, the man's wife and young child were injured so badly that they will probably die, while there are chances of the husband's recovery.

Woman's Masquerade.

Sydney, N.S.W., April 28—A strange story has been unfolded in the arrest here of a person who had been masquerading as a nephew of Archbishop Redwood of Wellington, New Zealand. When arrested the prisoner was found to be a woman of the name of Boch and for whom the police had been searching ever since last January on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences.

The Boch woman last week courted almost certain disaster by marrying the young daughter of her boarding house keeper at Nugget's. The local member of Parliament was among the wedding guests.

Explosion Injures Three.

St. John, N.B., April 28.—As the result of an accident in the roundhouse at Woodstock, yesterday morning Henry Cox, sr., will probably die; John McElvaney is seriously injured, and Harry Allan badly cut. The men were straightening a piston rod from the action of the fire when the rod was struck by the hammer. The compressed air exploded the cylinder-box and it flew in pieces, horribly mangling Cox and breaking McElvaney's leg in three places and cutting Allan.

Losses of Ice Jam.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., April 28.—What is regarded as a conservative estimate places the damage caused by the ice jam at $500,000, about $200,000 of which will be business losses entailed by the Ontario Power Co., the Niagara Navigation Co., and the Gorge trolley road and other interests down the river.

Quarter Fare for Riflemen.

Ottawa, April 28.—Riflemen of Canada who are contemplating shooting in the coming D.R.A. matches will be allowed one-quarter of single fare for coming to the meeting. This means it will cost them a quarter of actual fare only, as the shots now get single fare for the double journey.

THE C.G.E. BENEFIT CONCERT WILL BE HELD ON MAY 6th

The annual concert of the C.G.E. Benefit Society will be held in the Grand Opera House a week from to-night, on Thursday, May 6th. At the Lorain Co's entertainment last night Mr. R. E. Harding made the announcement of the date, saying the Lorain management had very kindly consented to let the Benefit Society have the evening mentioned.

There is no more generously patronized and interesting affair under local auspices than the annual C.G.E. benefit entertainment, and the programme is always one of merit.

This year the committee will secure the best of talent and endeavor to present a more than ordinarily attractive programme.

Detroit to Stanley.

Detroit, Mich., April 28.—Since Port Stanley, Ont., is catering to a large number of residents from this side of the border line, the need of a direct line of steamships from that port to some port on or in the vicinity of Lake Erie, has developed. There is some talk of establishing the needed port here. A. E. Thomas, late general manager of the Eastland Steamship Co., has been in St. Thomas for the last few days promoting the incorporation of a company to operate just such a line of freight and passenger steamers.

An Open Verdict.

Montreal, April 28.—An open verdict was reached late yesterday in the case against William and Aime Houle, held for the murder of Farmer Pelletier of Beauharnois. The brothers, however, will be brought before the magistrate at Valleyfield.

ELMIRA HAVING MANY SUICIDES

Elmira, N.Y., April 28.—Within 48 hours three persons have committed suicide here and a fourth has failed in an attempt to end her life. Sunday Mrs. Carrie Baldwin ended her life by taking laudanum and hanging herself from a bedpost in her room in a local hotel; Monday night Edwin Nichols, aged 28, discouraged in his efforts to support an invalid mother and earn a living, drank laudanum after reading of Mrs. Baldwin's suicide. Yesterday morning Miss Gray Gilbert, aged 27, after brooding over ill-health, drank carbolic acid.

Monday night Miss Lena Stein took morphine and nearly died before the doctors arrive.

Report That 100 Protestant Missionaries Lost Lives in Massacre.

London, April 28.—Consular despatches received to-day at the Foreign Office, state one hundred missionaries lost their lives in the burning of the church in the Adana District, in Asiatic Turkey, in which they had taken refuge from the Moslem mob. The despatches express the wrath of the consuls toward the Governor-General, who, it is declared, was warned of the danger to the missionaries and could easily have prevented the atrocity.

The Governor-General not only refused to act, but encouraged the massacre. No details of the outrage nor even the nationality of the victims are contained in the early despatches.

CONVENTION WILL BE INTERESTING

Toronto, April 28.—Art, education, health and physical training, industrial matters, laws concerning women and children, literature, philanthrophy, professions for women, social work and reform, finance and other such matters affecting women, will be the subjects of addresses and discussions at the congress of the International Council of Women, to be held in Toronto in June next. Her Excellency the Countess Grey is expected to be present, and one of her predecessors at Government House, the Countess of Aberdeen, now of the Vice-Regal Lodge, Dublin, Ireland, will also be present, as president of the International Council.

THE PROTECTION OF THE FORESTS

Ottawa, April 28.—The National Transcontinental Railway Commission does not admit legal liability to indemnify the Province of Ontario for protecting forests along the N.T.R. right of way. The province put on its own fire rangers and sent in a bill to the commission.

This was the information given to the Conservation of Resources Committee by Secretary Ryan yesterday.

In New Brunswick forests are protected entirely by commission, but in Quebec liability is divided between the provincial fire rangers and private owners of timber.

MEN AND WOMEN

The deliberate decision of the Senate of the University of Toronto to do away with co-education and with the admission of women to a man's university, and vice versa, is a sign of the times. Co-education has been a total failure and has emphasized the fact that men and women are by nature different with respect to ideals, tastes and temperament. The question of capacity does not arise, although the desired change back to old conditions has been decided upon by a decisive majority. The change cannot come about at once, owing to the difficulties of bringing about a reconsidered condition such as that decided upon. Co-education has tended to embitter the relations of men and women rather than otherwise. They do not look at the same conditions in at all the same way. Nature has had some mysterious hand in forming the different points of view. The faddists or discoverers of "new and wonderful" remedies which serve to get them into office and rival's out of it, more than anything else, and serve to glorify and make "seeming great" a lot of self-advertising tricksters and charlatans, are getting some well-merited set-backs these days. The President of Toronto University believes where possible in following the lead of Nature of seeking the way of least natural resistance rather than cutting the pupils to fit the garments. That the old "segregation of the sexes" will come in again is doubtless probable and it will do much to protect women, both from men and from themselves. No one supposes that "cooking and scrubbing" are the natural and necessary vocations of women. The point is that women shall be allowed to settle all these things for themselves and by themselves—not in conflict with men.

KEEPING IDLE CLASSES EMPLOYED

Germany has met with so much success in providing outdoor manual labor for the idle classes that Great Britain is modeling its poor law after the German system. The leading German specialist on this subject is Pastor von Bodelschwingh, whose labors have attracted much attention throughout Europe. This work in Germany has been carried on both in the great colony near Bielfeld and in other establishments near Berlin and elsewhere. At Bethel and in its neighborhood dependencies there are different institutions for almost all the different classes of men and women, who by act of fate or their own fault have made shipwreck of their lives. The one method of cure for all these people is manual work in the open air. In Germany it is considered a privilege to work instead of being punished.

Herr von Bodelschwingh is of the opinion that the existing English poor law, and apparently also the commissioners' report has, from the outset, the one characteristic defect that it robs labor of its honorable character by making it a means of punishment. Work, according to the English view of it, is thus made an ignoble thing; according to the German view, on the contrary, work and the offer of work is the one really helpful thing. In the labor colonies organized by Herr von Bodelschwingh are now recognized throughout Germany as model institutions, the one punishment is dismissal. For those who will not work the punishment is refusal of the privilege to work. The second point to which Herr von Bodelschwingh draws attention is the character of those who are entrusted with the supervision of the class of persons who come to the English workhouse. The officers are taskmasters, not helpers, and in the view of the people controlled by them they are potential enemies rather than practical friends.

In the German labor colonies, and even in the stone breaking yards of the Bodelschwingh establishments, the supervisors are, in the pastor's own expressive phrase "worked in front of the others"—men carefully chosen and trained for the task of showing the broken and vagrant "unemployables" the way back to self respect, and the respect of their fellows through honest work. At the stone-yard at Bethel the overseer of the casual laborers himself breaks stones. The overseers or "fore workers" are chosen not for their qualifications as task masters, but for their tact, patience, sympathy, and personal influence. There exist in Germany thirty-four labor colonies which were mainly started with a premium of 125,000 marks, ($62,500) presented by the Crown Prince Frederick Wilhelm (later Emperor Frederick) out of the national collection presented to him on the occasion of his silver wedding. They afford work for about five thousand persons, voluntary, not compulsory laborers.

The result of this institution of these voluntary labor colonies may be seen in the fact that the state houses of correction—an institution standing somewhere between the English workhouses and English houses of correction—have been depopulated and many of them altogether closed. The numbers passing through these houses of correction have shrunk from 24,000 per annum to about 8,000. According to the statistics of the Prussian judicial authorities the number of persons arrested for begging sank, as soon as this offer of work was open by 275,000 in one year. The Germans also think that local committees in charge of this kind of work should consist to the extent of at least one-third of women. It is believed that the influence in this connection is especially desirable, and a large number of them are overseeing the work in German institutions.—Trade Review.

EDITORIAL NOTES

An apple fully matured will keep longer than one picked green. The reason of this is said to be in the protection of a more matured skin.

Hon. Sidney Fisher is reported in the Dairy Commissioner's report to have said that cold storage is useful only for keeping cool, not for cooling.

New Zealand ships frozen mutton and the mere cooling process has nothing to do with it. Yet it is said that their freezing conditions produce better effects than our cooling ones. It is apparently only too true that we in Canada are falling behind in a good many ways.

A noted Englishman says that optimism is the latest form of doing away with the need of being sympathetic. It is impossible to be sympathetic and optimistic at the same time. Optimism and selfishness are not very far apart, according to this authority, who laughingly says that people are always trying some new-fangled way of avoiding the disagreeable.

The article of "The Montreal Star" upon "Whence our political corruption," is well worthy of study, although every right thinking citizen knows it already. The reference to our American cousins, however, is hardly just. They are vastly superior to us in common honesty. There is no getting over that and it is a poor compliment to them merely to put them on our level.

Whatever the prairie farmer may have against him—and he has a good deal—he could not wish for greater advantages in the way of transportation. His produce is carried to market for him at lower rates than any other wheat grower in the world enjoys. It is computed for all along the line from the local elevator to Liverpool. In Manitoba three Canadian and two American railways are after every bushel of wheat sent east.—Trade Review.

Some private individuals have tried to establish a dead meat trade and failed. The William Davies Company some years ago set aside a considerable amount of money—I have forgotten the exact amount, but I think it was $25,000—and said they were prepared to lose it in the hope of establishing a trade. I understand lately that Mr. Flavelle, who is at the head of that concern, was again discussing the possibility of establishing such a trade * * * Report of Dairy Cold Storage Commissioner.

We are indebted to Mr. Cyril Hill for a copy of the Life Insurance Independent, which contains two articles upon possibly coming events in New York State and Massachusetts. In one article the disappearance of the industrial agent is foreshadowed. The Metropolitan Insurance Co. is behind this measure. The proposition now is to issue policies at reduced rates to clubs or unions of 100 or more. The second article deals with the suggestion that increasing suicide is due to the incontestability of policies. Nevertheless, it is maintained that suicide of the insured is not likely to become a new way of making a living for the insured's heirs.

South America and Africa are the coming countries. A half century ago or more the great geographer, Arnold Guyot, predicted that within two or three generations the reaction of the east upon the west would produce an equilibrium, and that then the reaction of the north upon the south would begin in earnest, and the great streams of population and traffic would flow at right angles to those which they have followed during historical times. With the increase of population and a control of mankind over the forces of nature of which Professor Guyot could have had no conception the increase of exchanges between north and south seem likely to begin sooner than he could have anticipated.—San Francisco Chronicle.

ENCOURAGING THE BEAUTIFUL

C.P.R. Sending Out 50,000 Free Packages of Flower Seeds to its Employees

Enthusiasm and success are stamped all over the scheme for making the stations of the Canadian Pacific Railway the links in a flower chain extending across the continent. Mr. N. S. Dunlop, the chief of the C.P.R. claims department, twelve years ago inaugurated the free distribution of flower seeds to station agents and others, and the beautiful flower gardens by which so many of the company's stations are surrounded in the summer months are the direct result. In this direction the company has certainly given an impulse to civic pride all over the Dominion, the full effects of which can never be adequately estimated. It has been noticed wherever the station agent or section men establishes a garden with the seeds supplied free from the company's floral departments, the enthusiasm for flowers invariably extends to the whole community and fosters pride in the beautifying of the homes of the people.

Mr. Dunlop is now sending out the annual packages of seeds. No fewer than 50,000 packages, representing 32 varieties, are being shipped out, to be distributed in 1,500 gardens across the continent.

'The flower fever,' said Mr. Dunlop this morning, 'has spread over 12,000 miles of railway, and the desire for flowers extends to the company's hotels, dining cars, Atlantic and Pacific steamers, as well as the steamers on the Great Lakes, inland waters of British Columbia and the B. C. coast service.

'Agents, sectionmen and employees, together with their wives, vie with each other and make a flowery chain across Canada, and now wherever there is a C. P. R. station, section house or office building, there you will find flowers.

'Later on thousands of plants and shrubs will be sent out, while last fall we distributed 200,000 tulips, hyacinths, lilies, crocuses, iris bulbs. This means that with those sent out in former years there will soon be millions of early spring bulbs in bloom.

'For months I have been receiving hundreds of letters of encouragement and inquiries regarding the flower scheme for the present year, and the indications are that the work will be made greater and broader by the hundreds of amateurs who now vie with each other to brighten their surroundings by the cultivation of flowers during their spare time.'

Mr. Dunlop's office is a regular bureau of information on the subject of floriculture, for large numbers of the employees write to him for pointers. This morning the office was gaily decorated with flowers in honor of the occasion. The varieties of seeds sent out to-day were as follows:—Alyssum, antirrhinum, aster, balsam candytuft, carnation, climbers, dahlia, dianthus, eschscholtzia, everlasting flowers, gaillardia, hibiscus, hyacinth bean, kochia, mignonette, nasturtium, nicotiana, pansy, petunia, phlox, poppy, portulaca, scabious, stocks, sunflower, sweet peas, verbena and zinnia.—The Witness, Montreal.

Electing Lord Mayor.

The picturesque ceremony of electing a new Lord Mayor of London takes place some weeks before Nov. 9 and is preceded by a religious service in St. Lawrence Jewry, the parish church of the civic chamber. This service has been held continuously for more than 500 years. The Lord Mayor, sheriffs, and aldermen, in their glittering chains of office, scarlet robes, and each carrying a nosegay of autumn flowers, assemble at the Guildhall and march to the church in procession. Subsequent to the service the procession returns to the Guildhall, which is strewed with sweet herbs, where the Lord Mayor, aldermen, and officials take their places on the hustings. The business of the election, says The Pall Mall Gazette, is preceded by the Common Crier's proclamation that all persons be uncovered, and that "all those who are not liverymen shall depart the hall, on pain of imprisonment." The name of the alderman eligible for election is then put to the meeting, and after this has been received with applause various questions are put to the newly-elected Lord Mayor, a spirit of good-natured "banter" permeating the whole proceedings.

A DETECTIVE'S RUSE.

Clever Method by Which He Secured Some Evidence.

"I had to resort to a queer ruse once to get an admission from a man I was after," said a private detective. "There had been some trouble at a club between two young men. One threw a glass of wine into the other's face. The other did not resent the insult as he should have done. When his father heard of it he threatened to disinherit his son unless he whipped the man who had thrown the wine in his face. The father was a member of the same club, and he made a wager of a wine supper that his son could and would whip the other fellow. Soon after this the son met the man who had insulted him and whipped him. The fight occurred on a prominent street, and as two of the young man's friends were with him at the time there was talk of an action against them and his father for conspiracy. Our agency was retained to get the evidence needed.

"It was decided that it would be necessary to get an admission from the father of the young man who had made the assault. I was told to get it. I tried many ways and failed. He did not know I was a detective. He had known me for a number of years, but thought I was engaged in other work. I had another plan to get from him what I wanted. I told him a metropolitan publication was having the affair written up and illustrated.

"I said I had seen the picture of the fight which had been prepared for it. He was pleased at the publicity that the fight was to get, for the story of the affair at the club had been printed, and he wanted it known that his son had avenged the insult. I intimated that if he cared to see it I thought I could get him the picture that had been prepared for publication. He was eager to see it.

"I had a friend, a newspaper artist, who made me a picture. He made a faithful copy of the street scene where the fight occurred, and he made a fair likeness of the figures in it. The picture showed one man stealing up behind another and striking him from the rear. Behind him were two other men, who were supposed to have accompanied him to see fair play. The father was thought to have been in the neighborhood, but as he wasn't seen he was left off the picture. He examined it carefully.

"'Who are these two men?' he asked, pointing to the two onlookers.

"'They are the two Blacks, who went along with your son to see that he got fair play,' I told him.

"'That's all right,' he said, 'but who is this?' pointing at the man who was striking at the other from behind.

"'Why, that's your son,' I told him.

"'That's a lie!' he exclaimed. 'My son stood right in front of him and hit him squarely in the face. I told him to do that and stand up in front of him all the time. I was right across the street, and the two men who were with my son were close enough to see all that happened. They will tell you that he did not hit him from behind. He faced him fairly and whipped him fairly. That was the way we made it up to do. If that's printed I'll whip the man who made it!'

"It wasn't printed, nor were there any court proceedings taken on account of the alleged conspiracy. The men concerned in it on both sides got together and settled it out of court."

"The Ghost Bloke."

The writer once overheard an amusing conversation outside the New Bailey, London, England. Prof. Pepper, the great criminal analyst and chemist, had been giving his evidence in a murder case, and a couple of costers were standing on the pavement discussing the chances of the prisoner. "This 'ere bloke Pepper seems to have wrapped it up for 'im (prisoner) orlright," said one. "What Pepper?" replied the other. "Who's 'e?" "Why, the ghost bloke. He sees things what other people carn't; and lor' help the chap he gives evidence agin." Probably Prof. Pepper would not feel very flattered to know that he was confounded with the man who originated the far-famed Pepper's ghosts—that thrilling entertainment of our childhood; but the two costers are not the only people who have credited him with having dealings with the supernatural.

Taken by Surprise.

There are some hospitable creatures who are greatly disturbed if they cannot meet every demand made on them, although there are cases when it is ridiculous to expect them to be able to be equal to the occasion. Recently a barn took fire on a large estate, and the firemen of the village worked hard to put out the flames. After it was all over the husband asked the fire-fighters into the house to partake of coffee and whatever edibles were on hand. His wife welcomed the men with steaming cups of coffee, doughnuts and pies. Then she said apologetically, "Oh, if I had only known this was going to happen, I would have had a lot of things baked up."

An Old-Fashioned Woman.

There was an old-fashioned woman who would blush if company caught her with less than six different kinds of cake and seven different kinds of preserves in the house. If a guest liked coffee for supper, she thought it was right that she should have it. Her pies were always rich, and she used lots of butter and cream. She had never heard of the diet cure and believed in people eating just what they liked. What a pity it is that she isn't alive, so we folks who are tired of dieting could go and visit her!

WHY MOVEMENT WAS STARTED; WHAT IT HAS ACCOMPLISHED

Eight years ago—in March, 1901—the International Anti-Cigarette League was formed in connection with the Sunday School Chronicle, the leading paper for Sunday school teachers in Great Britain. The editor of the Sunday School Chronicle, Rev Frank Johnson, received so many letters from teachers, asking that some help should be given them in dealing with juvenile smoking, that he resolved to form a Boys' Anti-Cigarette League. The league came into existence for the purpose of discouraging and suppressing smoking among boys by moral suasion, special instruction and particularly by legislation.

It singled out the cigarette for special attack because this form of smoking is the one most easily adopted by boys, and because it is through the cigarette that the habit has grown to the dimensions of a national peril.

The league deliberately abstained from any operations which would would give it the appearance of an Anti-Narcotic Society. It limited its aims to the prevention of smoking among young people, upon whom the effects of tobacco are by general consent admitted to be disastrous. The limitation at once defined the league's attitude and enlisted the sympathy of adult smokers and non-smokers alike.

The basis of operations was the following pledge: "I promise, with God's help, to abstain from purchasing and from using tobacco in any form, at least until I reach the age of twenty-one. Not only for my own sake, but for the good of my country."

The league was the first of its kind formed in Great Britain. Its central aim was to secure the passing of an act of Parliament making the sale of tobacco to young people under the age of 16 years, illegal. In the leading article which we wrote on February 21st, 1901, in launching the league, we said: "The true goal is to secure the passing of a bill prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form to young people (who have not attained a certain age."

The money, offices and clerical services necessary for the league were supplied at the beginning by the Business Committee of the Sunday School Union, who vested the direction and control of the league, in the following gentlemen:

ADVISORY BOARD.

The Lord Bishop of Ripon
The Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair, D.D.
Major-General R.S.S. Baden Powell.
Winston L. S. Churchill, Esq., M.P., chairman.
Robert Farquharson, Esq., M.D.
Dr T. J. Macnamara, M.P.
Andrew Melrose, Esq.
Rev J. B. Paton, D.D.
Dr. H. J. Spenser.
Prof. G. Sims Woodhead, M.D., F.R.S.E.
Sir John Kirk.
Rev Frank Johnson, founder and honorary secretary.

The only income to the league was the buttons, and pledge cards sold to the members. Branches have been opened up with public, private and elementary schools, the army and boys' brigades, churches and all other various institutions. It has affiliated with headquarters 1,140 branches, and has enrolled 99,580 members. Literature has been published and circulated to influence boys and their parents. In many ways the league has powerfully influenced public opinion.

It has analysed numbers of special brands of cigarettes and made investigations into the evil of juvenile smoking, as it exists in America, Australia, India, China and other countries.

MAIN RESULT OF PROPAGANDA.

On April 1st the Children Act became law, and by its juvenile smoking clauses the sale of tobacco in any form to young people under the age of 16 has now become illegal.

The local branch of Peterborough invites every boy to attend the meeting at the Y.M.C.A. Hall next Friday, the 30th inst., at 8 o'clock, when Magistrate Dumble, Dr. J. E. Middleton, Inspector Mowat and Mr. J. A. McKone, vice-president of Business College, will speak of the evils of smoking amongst boys. It is expected the hall will be filled, so come early.

WAS BORN IN PETERBOROUGH

Herbert L. Dunn, Prominent Lawyer, Passes Away at Toronto

Toronto, April 28.—After suffering from pneumonia for the past ten days, Mr. Herbert L. Dunn, of the legal firm of Denton, Dunn and Boultbee, died yesterday at his residence, 14 Walmer Road. He is survived by his widow and six small children, five daughters and one son. The funeral will be held to-morrow. Services will be held at the house at 3.15, and at St. Alban's Cathedral at 3.30, after which interment will take place at Mount Pleasant cemetery.

The late Mr. Dunn was one of the most popular lawyers in the city, and had a host of friends. He was 48 years old, having been born in Peterborough in 1861. He was educated at the Welland High School, of which his father, the late J. Murison Dunn, was principal for a number of years. He graduated from Toronto University in 1882, being the gold medalist in classics. Among his classmates were W. H. Blake, K.C.; A. J. Wright, A. E. O'Meara, and E. P. Davis, K.C., of Vancouver. After graduating from the university Mr. Dunn taught school in the Dalhousie High School, until he was called to the bar in 1885. He then became a partner of Mr. H. D. Gamble, K.C., and subsequently joined the firm of Denton, Dunn and Boultbee.

Mr. Dunn was a Conservative in politics, and was a member of the Albany Club, but never took a very active interest in politics. He was examiner in equity at the Law School, and wrote several popular legal text books, one of which is still used in the Law School course. He was a member of St. Alban's Cathedral, and took an active part in the formation of the new St. Alban's school for boys.

On Monday Mr. Dunn received word of the death in Schenectady, N.Y., of his brother, David C. Dunn. Three brothers survive, Wm. R., of the International Harvester Company, Hamilton; Chas. N., of Port Huron, Mich.; and Ernest A., of Wausau, Wis. In 1891 Mr. Dunn married the daughter of Lieut.-Col. Grey.

In addition to being a good lawyer, Mr Dunn was a man of fine literary tastes. He was very modest, but most genial and generous. He had a host of friends in the legal and other professions, and the announcement of his death was received with universal sorrow.

Mr. Dunn's father was the late J. Murison Dunn, who was principal of the old Grammar school here for a number of years, and who will be remembered by many of the older residents of the city.

Tag day at St Thomas yielded $644.03 to wipe the debt off the Y.W.C.A. building.

WILL BE PLACED ON BLACKLIST

At His Own Request—Was Allowed off on Drunk Charge

Fred Irwin was arrested last night and when he appeared in court this morning was charged with being found drunk in a public place. He pleaded guilty and will be "posted."

Chief Roszel states that accused had been on the blacklist before and was in the habit of drinking liquor to excess. Irwin has expressed a wish that he be listed and this will be done.

If the Magistrate should see fit to discharge him he would return to his relatives in the country. This His Worship consented to after the usual sermonette.

VIOLATED THE LORD'S DAY ACT

Fruit Dealer Conveyed Bananas From a Freight Car to His Store Last Sunday

August Longo appeared in police court this morning to answer to the charge of having, on Sunday, April 25th, conveyed two loads of bananas from a freight car to his store on Hunter street. He was fined $5.00, and as he represented his brother, who was charged with the same offence, he parted with another $5.00.

Longo's defence was that had the fruit been left over Sunday in the car it would have been spoiled. He had heard remarks passed by some who had witnessed the affair, and as a result would never do it again. The magistrate, however, thought this a good opportunity to show that the Lord's Day Act must not be violated, and imposed the above fine.

APPEAL WAS ENLARGED

The appeal against the judgment by His Honor Judge Weller in the Douro election protest case came up before Chief Justice Falconbridge in Toronto yesterday. The appeal was enlarged for a week.

WILL ARRANGE FOR CHURCH PARADE

The regular meeting of Court Stanley, AOF, was held in the SOE hall last night and there was a good attendance of members. In the absence of the Chief Ranger the chair was occupied by Bro H Hancell. One member was admitted by clearance card and one application was received for membership. Bro East and Appleton were elected junior and senior woodard for the balance of the term.

A committee was appointed to make arrangements for the annual church parade and considerable business in connection with the welfare of the society was also transacted.

PARISIAN SAGE

Puts Hair on Your Head and Keeps it There

What's the use of being bald? What sense is there in deliberately allowing your hair to turn gray?

Do you want to look old before your time? Give up the thought; old age will come all too soon.

Look after your hair. Parisian Sage will kill the dandruff germs, and is the only preparation, so far as we know, that is guaranteed to do so.

Man or woman, no matter how old you are, Parisian Sage will make you look younger.

Why not go to Wm. Madill, druggist, Peterborough, and get a large bottle today, it only costs 50 cents, and your money back if it does not cure dandruff, stop falling hair, or itching of the scalp. It will make make your hair luxuriant bright and beautiful, and it is the most refreshing, pleasant and invigorating hair dressing made.

View who are served by newsboys should insist on receiving the Review. In any case where this is not done, prove and send message to the Review business office and arrangements will be at once made to supply promptly the Daily Review. Insist on having the paper you want

An Old Superstition.

During stormy weather on the coast of Nova Scotia native skippers clip the hair of beard and head to use them as "oil on the water." It being an ancient belief in those parts that storms are caused by the devil lashing the ocean, the sacrifice of hair thrown into the angry sea is really a sacrifice to the evil one.

FAMOUS GLOVES.

Treasures Preserved In Museums and Once Worn by Royalty.

BOTH RARE AND INTERESTING

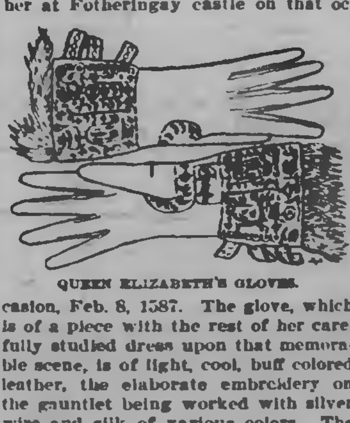
Descriptions of Valuable Specimens. Queen Elizabeth's Pride of Her Hands—Gloves Left as Tokens by Mary, Queen of Scots.

Gloves with jewels set in the center of the back, according to Planche, were a mark of royalty.

Among the New Year's presents to the Princess Mary, afterward Queen Mary, "a payr of gloves embrawret with gold" (privy purse expenses of the Princess Mary) is entered. A year afterward it is "X payr of Spaynishe gloves from a duches in Spayne," and but a month before Mrs. Whellers had sent to her highness "a pair of swete gloves"—perfumed gloves, which appear constantly in Queen Elizabeth's inventories and accounts.

The cuff of one of Lord Darnley's gloves, which is said to have been worked for him by Mary Stuart about the time of their marriage, was exhibited at Glasgow in 1888 and at London in 1889. The cuff, of which the fellow is lost, as well as the gloves they ornamented, is of white satin embroidered with gold and silver thread and worked with roses, tulips and other devices in colored silks. The colors, especially of the tulips, which figure prominently in the design are very brilliant and remarkably well preserved.

Mary, queen of Scots, like Lady Jane Grey, is said to have left a pair of gloves as a token. Hers were given to a certain Mr. Dayrell, and one of these gloves is at present kept in the small local museum at Saffron Walden, England. This curiously embroidered glove was presented by the unfortunate queen on the morning of her execution to a gentleman of the Dayrell family, who was in attendance upon her at Fotheringay castle on that occasion, Feb. 8, 1587. The glove, which is of a piece with the rest of her carefully studied dress upon that memorable scene, is of light, cool, buff colored leather, the elaborate embroidery on the gauntlet being worked with silver wire and silk of various colors. The roses are of pale and dark blue and two shades of a very pale crimson. Elizabeth was, we know, very proud of her hands. Indeed, her long hands with their pointed fingers are arranged with studied elegance and somewhat artificially in almost every one of her portraits, as in that of her with the "Rainbow," by Zucchero. Du Maurier in his "Memoires pour Servir a l'Histoire de Hollande" writes how he had heard from his father "that, having been sent to her, at every audience he had with her majesty she pulled off her gloves more than a hundred times to display her hands, which indeed were very beautiful and very white."



QUEEN ELIZABETH'S GLOVES.

In the Bodleian glove the thumb is five inches long, the palm three and a half inches in width, and the entire glove is close on half a yard long, which does not accord with the evidence of her majesty's portraits. The gloves of that period, however, have in most cases a large and splayed outline. Queen Elizabeth's glove is of excellent material, a very fine white leather worked with gold thread and purl embroidery, edged at the bottom with yellow and lined in the cuff with drab silk.

Fads Shown In Phone Calls.

Women with the telephone habit would keep more careful guard over the little lists of names and numbers that usually lie close beside their instruments if they realized how clear a story these lists can tell to a curious and analytical observer. "It was a German writer who said, 'You can judge a man by what he laughs at,'" remarked one of the inquisitive brigade of drawing room philosophers recently, "and today nothing is easier than to judge a woman by the persons she talks to over the telephone. Just take a glance at the lists of your friends. You will find the timorous old maid has the police and fire departments at the head, followed by one or two doctors and druggists. No such names figure on the card of the bachelor girl. Many of her calls are for men friends and girls in other studio apartments, and if you look far enough you are sure to find one number that connects with a delicatessen or a grocery store in the neighborhood. The girl with frivolous tastes and plenty of time in which to indulge them has most to say to the modistes and the dry goods stores, while the business woman's calls will all center round the neighborhood or the persons among whom her work lies. If a man looked over his fiancee's telephone list before his marriage he often would have a much clearer idea of what to expect after that event."

CAMERA CLUB EXHIBITION FORMALLY OPENED BY MAYOR

His Worship Mayor Rush, formally opened the Camera Club exhibition last night in the presence of a fair sized gathering. The beautiful display of pictures were greatly admired by those in attendance and the occasion was a most auspicious one. The chair was taken by Mr. T. E. Bradburn, M.P.P., who congratulated the officers of the Camera Club on the success of their first exhibit.

In formally opening the exhibition Mayor Rush spoke as follows;

Ladies and Gentlemen,—It gives me pleasure to be present at the formal opening of this exhibition, and I wish to heartily congratulate the Association on its success. An exhibition such as this, with the finished specimens on view, calls attention to the remarkable progress in the art of photography. If we go back in mind to the early days of the art, when the sitters for a portrait had to watch for a bright day and sit perfectly still for what seemed a very long time to obtain a photograph that is now laughed at, and make comparison with the lightning like rapidity of the present operation, either by day or night, and the beautiful product, we can easily recognize and appreciate that photography has advanced. I would also congratulate this club on the number of members it has. Photography as an amusement, or as a hobby as we sometimes say, must afford a great deal of entertainment and pleasure, and this is enhanced by the permanency of the results, which serve to recall friends and scenes that are past. A more interesting recreation than it provides would be very difficult to find. We cannot all be athletes; we may not have either the taste or capacity for that form of recreation, but it is wise to adopt some form of diversion and that which you have adopted combines a maximum of interest with a permanent source of pleasure which you can share with your friends. There is perhaps little in common between the Camera Club of photography and the City Council, yet some things are suggested by associating them. You know the Council does not do things in camera, for all its transactions are open and above board. At the same time the Council does developing—it endeavors to develop the interests of the city, and in its work it sometimes has to do a little retouching. We try to keep the public works in operation for the benefit of the people—that is, the people pay the taxes and we do the rest.

This exhibition augurs well for the success of your club, for when it can do so well after being such a short time in existence it will be able to do much better as the membership increases in numbers and its members have time to reap further advantages to be obtained from associating in an organization. I wish you continued and increasing pleasure in your chosen form of diversion as individuals, and for the Club, success and growth, that it may do still more for its members.

Mr. N. Howard Moore, secretary of the Camera Club, thanked the Mayor and Mr Bradburn for their presence and encouraging words. He referred to the organization of the Camera Club last October and the progress that had been made since that time. Eight demonstrations had been held since the club was organized and the members had been greatly aided. The object of the club was to help the amateur photographers of Peterborough, and good work was being done. Mr. Moore stated that the club would likely have permanent quarters in the near future and had the brightest prospects for the future.

Mr. Moore thanked the newspapers of the city for the support they had given the exhibition.

At the conclusion of the addresses refreshments were served by a number of ladies.

The exhibition will be open every afternoon and evening this week.

SUEING STEAMER OTONABEE IN ADMIRALTY COURT TO-DAY

P. P. Young Claiming $650 for Damage to Tug in Collision in Canal Near Young's Point—Court is Being Held Before Mr. Justice Hodgins.

Mr. P. P. Young, of Young's Point, is suing the Steamer "Otonabee" today in Admiralty Division of the Exchequer Court for $650, which he claims as damages as the result of a collision between the "Otonabee" and one of his tugs. The collision took place last year in the canal just above the lock at Young's Point. The defence is that the accident was due to the negligence of those in charge of the scow.

The court is being held before Mr. Justice Hodgsons, of the Admiralty Court, Toronto.

This morning two witnesses for the plaintiff were examined. They were Matthew Jamieson, in charge of the scow crew at the time of the collision and Wm. Hill, one of the hands on the scow. The judge intimated that if necessary he would take a trip to the scene of the accident, in order that he might examine matters personally.

All the evidence will not be given at to-day's session. Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon are appearing for the plaintiff and Mr. R. F. McWilliams for defendants.

APPEAL OF LOCAL INTEREST WAS DISMISSED YESTERDAY

Toronto. April 28—The Divisional Court dismissed the appeal of Mrs. Matilda J. Denison, wife of a Peterborough hotelkeeper, from the refusal of Chief Justice Mulock to compel by mandamus the license commissioners of Medonte township to consider an application for a hotel license for the incorporated village of Coldwater.

A local option by-law was passed by the township on January 25, 1908, and on January 29 the village was incorporated under a by-law passed by the Simcoe County Council. The claim was made by Mr James Haverson K.C., on behalf of Mrs. Denison, that as the by-law was not to go into effect in the township till May 1st, and that therefore it was not "in force" at the time the village was incorporated and became a separate municipality entitled itself to pass by-laws on local option.

The Divisional Court holds that it is improbable the Legislature intended that an existing by-law was not to affect any new municipality if the time for going into operation had not arrived.

ANOTHER BOOST FOR STOCK OF CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

Toronto, April 27.—That old-time local speculative faintee Canadian General Electric, walked into the limelight this morning with a jump to 120, as against 117 last Saturday, and a close of 112 the week previous. It hasn't sold as high as that since 1907, when it took the plunge to 77 3-4. In the meantime English buyers have taken most of the stock across the pond, and buying orders here, resulting from the improved business the company is doing, and expects to do, and the recent satisfactory annual report, come on a market bare of stock. General Electric for a period taking in its high record price is:

A CHIMNEY SWEEP AT AGE OF 83

The sight of an old man who has reached the age of 83 years cleaning chimneys on top of a two storey dwelling is something that is not brought to the notice of very many, still this is vouched for by a gentleman who in passing the house this morning watched the worker as he walked around the roof with the agility that would keep some younger persons guessing when the fact of there being a stiff, cold wind blowing at the time is taken into consideration. The man in question is a retired farmer and has lived the greater part of his life away from the tear and wear of a busy city and this fact probably is the solution of the affair.

MR. NICHOLLS IS BEREAVED

Special to the Review.

Toronto. April 28—Death came with startling suddenness to Mrs Nicholls wife of Mr. Frederick Nicholls, second vice-president and managing director of the Canadian General Electric Co. at her beautiful home, 13 Homewood Place, last evening. Mrs Nicholls sat down to dinner with the family about 7 p.m. apparently in her usual good health. Shortly after dinner she retired to her room, where she was stricken with apoplexy and died shortly afterwards without recovering consciousness.

Deceased was Miss Florence Greburn of Ottawa, but the greater portion of her married life was spent in Toronto. She was a lady of charming personality, charitable to a degree and greatly beloved by her large circle of friends and acquaintances. The intelligence of her untimely demise will be received with general regret. Besides her husband she leaves a family of four sons and three daughters The sons are Henry G P.; Walter, Frederick, jr. and Norman. One daughter married Mr Ernest Proctor and the other two, Hazel and Bessie, are at home. Mrs Nicholls was a member of the Anglican church.

The funeral which will be private, will take place to Mount Pleasant cemetery on Friday.

ORCHESTRA FOR JUNIPER ISLAND

If plans that are now being discussed are carried out the Juniper Island pavillion at Stony Lake will be a lively spot this summer. It is understood that the Grand Opera House Orchestra may be engaged to play at the pavillion for two weeks during the summer, providing music for the dances and giving several concerts. This will be good news to the Stony Lake cottagers.

The Nova Scotia Legislature is prorogued.

SAFE EYE-GLASS FITTING

Selling eye-glasses out of a stock like scissors or thimbles, is a dangerous practice that is altogether too prevalent.

There should not be the faintest doubt in the mind of any person who finds the need of wearing glasses, that they are identically, scientifically fitted to the eyes.

We offer you safe spectacle fitting. And that is the only kind you should be satisfied to accept. There is nothing on this earth dearer than a cheap pair of spectacles that you have chosen yourself simply because you can see with them.

WEDDING BELLS

KINGSLEY—FOLEY

A quiet but exceedingly pretty wedding took place in St. Peter's Cathedral, at an early hour yesterday morning, when Miss Maye Cecelia Foley, formerly of Lindsay, was united in marriage to Mr. E. J. Kingsley, of Lindsay. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. McColl. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Veronica, and Mr. W. C. Cain, B.A., of Toronto, was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Kingsley left on the morning train for an extended trip to Buffalo, New York and Boston, returning via Quebec and Montreal. On their return they will reside in Lindsay.

COX—FOLEY

The marriage was celebrated by Rev. Father Morrow, of Our Lady of Lourdes, at a quiet ceremony this afternoon at three o'clock, witnessed by only the immediate family and friends of Clara, daughter of Mrs. Mary Foley, Rose avenue, to Mr. Alfred Cox, son of the late Mr. Aaron Cox, of Peterborough. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. Frank Foley, of Pittsburg, and wore her handsome three-piece traveling costume of taupe broadcloth, heavily braided, with grey straw hat with wings and carried a shower of bridal roses and lilies of the valley. Attending her sister was Miss Florence Foley, in a smart grey cloth suit, with rose colored hat, and carrying a bouquet of bridesmaids' roses. Mr. Frank Cox, of Cleveland, was his brother's best man. Shortly afterward Mr. and Mrs. Cox left on a honeymoon trip through the Eastern States. They will occupy their new residence at 142 Balsam avenue, on their return.—Toronto Telegram.

ORGANIZED FOR SUMMER SEASON

Young People of St. John's Church Had Enthusiastic Meeting—Will Play Tennis

A large and representative meeting was held by the young people of St. John's Parish last evening, in the guild room of the church, when reorganization for the summer season was carried into effect.

Mr. R. J. Devey was unanimously elected to the position of president of the society, filling the position formerly held by Mr. Nat Greenhalgh, lately resigned. Mr. Devey has done much to promote the work of the Young People's Society of St. John's in the past, and was elected to the position of president of the society this time by a unanimous vote.

The work of the society during the summer partakes of the form of an active and enthusiastic tennis club, through which means the social life of the church is considerably strengthened and extended.

Affiliation with the Peterborough District Tennis Association was voted by St. John's Society, and Mr. Wm. Coleman was elected as the representative to that association, from St. John's Society.

The fees for membership to St. John's Tennis Club are very reasonable, being 50 cents for the lady members of the church, $1 for gentlemen members, $1 for ladies not members of the church, and $1.50 for gentlemen non-members of the church. There will be a special effort to have the the first opening of the Tennis Club for the season by May 24, when arrangements will be carried into effect to make the opening one of much enjoyment and pleasure to all members of the club. A large number have signified their intention of supporting St. John's Club the coming season, and a very enjoyable and profitable summer is anticipated.

St. John's Glee Club

The St. John's Glee Club meets evening at 8 p.m. at the home of Mrs. R. J. Devey, 285 park street.

An hospital has been established at Mount Forest.

WILL TAKE PART IN PLAY AT LINDSAY

Mr. George Lynch Will Appear in Cast of "All the Comforts of Home"

Lindsay Post says: Mr. Geo. Lynch, of Peterborough, one of the most talented amateur actors of Canada, will play the part of Tom McCaw in the local production next Monday night in the Academy of Music, when the play "All the Comforts of Home" and "The Littlest Girl" will be produced. Mr. Bruce Paton, who played the part here last winter, has moved to Toronto, and it will be impossible for him to play the part on this occasion, consequently Mr. Lynch, who played the part in Peterborough, has kindly consented to take it. Mr. Lynch is a great hockey and lacrosse enthusiast, and has many friends in Lindsay.

HAILEYBURY MAN PURCHASES "MISS FIDGETY"

"Miss Fidgety" of the Schofield-Holden Co., the fastest boat built throughout in Canada, and the Queen of Toronto and surrounding waters in the past three years, was sold this morning to H. J. Baldwin, the well-known mining promoter, of Haileybury, who intends to use her as a pleasure craft during the summer on Lake Temiskaming and surrounding waters. The people of New Liskeard, Haileybury and Cobalt will have a new sensation when this speedy and graceful craft reaches her destination.

The delicious flavour of "Salada" Tea is largely due to the care used in the cultivation and preparation, and to the fact that it is packed in sealed lead packets, which prevents it coming in contact with articles that would affect its flavour.

LORAIN CO. HAS IMPROVED SHOW

The most amusing and cleverest feature of the Lorain Amusement Co's. bill at the Grand last night was the bright comedy work of a miniature Harrigan who both in acting and singing lived up to all the accepted traditions of the entertaining stage Irishman. He was also a scream in the matter of makeup.

The musical specialty of Wagon and Wagon also made a big hit with the audience.

Both the pictures and specialties are considerably better than they were at the Lorain Company's engagement here a short time ago and the entertainment should meet with a popular favor that will warrant a stay of considerable length in Peterborough.

THIEVES ARE BUSY AROUND NORWOOD

One Man Had Articles Bought at Auction Sale Stolen Before He Could Remove Them—Several Other Cases Reported.

Special to the Review

Norwood, April 28.—Norwood and vicinity seems to be under the ban of the common sneak thief, for during the past week several persons have had articles taken from their premises, while no person has been fortunate enough to see the guilty parties. Some people near Norwood report having seen some unknown tramp during some time last week, and County Constable W. Dixon, of Westwood, scoured the country on Sunday last in search of the offender, but without any result.

Last Saturday evening, while Mr. Gordon Girven, who lately bought the O'Shea farm in Asphodel, and who is there now doing his spring work, was at Norwood some person entered his house and helped himself to something to eat, not scorning the best in the house, and on leaving appropriated Mr. Girven's suit case, which contained some valuable articles. Mr. Girven, on returning home, saw that some person had been paying him a visit, and had made himself quite at home, as the table was set and the evidence pointed to someone having enjoyed his (Mr Girven's) hospitality during his absence. On looking around the house Mr. Girven missed his suit case. On Sunday morning the alarm was given and the constable put on the case, but as yet the guilty party is free.

At Mr. A. S. Harrison's auction sale of household furniture, etc., on Saturday afternoon one of our townspeople purchased a spring and mattress, and not having any means at the time of removing it, thought he would leave it until he got his horse and rig to take it home. But before he got back for it in the evening someone had stolen it from in front of Mr. Harrison's residence on Peterborough street. The thief could easily accomplish his designs under the circumstances, as it is only natural to see people removing stuff after an auction sale.

THEIR DEPARTURE MUCH REGRETTED AT LISTOWEL

Mr. & Mrs. J. W. Meyers and Family Honored by Their Friends Before Leaving for Peterborough—Presentation and Address.

The Listowel Standard of April 16, has the following:

It having been learned that Mr. J. W. Meyers and family intended moving to Peterborough this week, where Mr. Meyers has acquired an interest in and taken over the management of the Peterborough Cereal Co., his many friends and the citizens generally felt it was due to him to tender him some slight testimonial as a recognition of the active part he has taken in the business life of Listowel, during the twenty or more years that he had been a resident of the town, as well as in testimony of the community's appreciation of himself and family as citizens. On Tuesday evening Mr. Meyers was invited to be present at the council chamber in the Public Library building, where a score or more of leading citizens had gathered. Mr. O. W. Scott, chairman of the committee having the matter in hand, read the subjoined address, at the same time expressing his high esteem for Mr. Meyers and family, and his regret at losing so good a citizen. Mr. B. Rothwell made the presentation, which consisted of two solid quartered oak chairs, feather lined, an arm chair for Mr. Meyers and a rocker for Mrs. Meyers. Mr. Rothwell accompanied the presentation with some felicitous and appreciative remarks, expressive of his personal friendship and admiration for both Mr. and Mrs. Meyers as citizens of the town and as willing and valued members of the church to which they belonged.

Mr. Myers, although almost overcome with emotion acknowledged the gifts as tokens of friendship which he would ever esteem. He deeply regretted the severance of long-formed ties and the many pleasant associations which had marked his residence here; but particularly he appreciated the kind words which had been said about his family.

The following gentlemen were then called upon, all of whom bore testimony to Mr. Meyers' worth as a citizen, whose uprightness, honest dealings and large heartedness were characteristic of the man. Deserved tributes were also paid to Mrs. Meyers' musical gifts and her generous aid in church, social and other circles. The members of the family were also referred to in kindliest expressions, all regretting to lose them, but wishing them every success in their new home.

The committee subsequently presented Mr. Homer Meyers with a handsome desk clock, and Misses Meyers with jewel cases. On Wednesday evening a number of Mrs. Meyers' lady friends met at the home of Mrs. John Gabel and presented her with a gold-headed silk umbrella, and spent a farewell social evening.

Following is a copy of the address:

To John W. Meyers, Esq.—

Dear Sir,—We have learned with deep regret your intention of leaving town and take this opportunity of expressing to you on the eve of your departure our appreciation of your well merited worth during your long abode amongst us. For years, in addition to your own immediate calling, you have been in close touch with our leading educational and municipal institutions, all of which have been benefitted by your good judgment and open-handed generosity. But above and beyond all these services, so freely and faithfully rendered to your fellow citizens, we esteem you for your moral worth. Your every-day walk and conversation have been such as to command our respect and admiration, and believing, as the poet says, "An honest man is the noblest work of God," we unanimously accord to you, sir, that proud distinction. In conclusion, as a tangible token of our respect and good will towards yourself and Mrs. Meyers, and as a memento of your long residence in Listowel, we wish you to accept this leather arm chair for yourself, and leather rocker for Mrs. Meyers, and with it our united wish for your future prosperity and happiness.

LOOKS LIKE A PROPER MOVE

Bill Introduced in Illinois to Limit Size of a Woman's Hat

Springfield, Ill., April 27th.—Frank C. Hilton, of Chicago, a Representative from the Stock Yards District, introduced a bill in the Legislature to-day, limiting the dimensions and make-up of women's hats. The bill was promptly sent to a committee, the chairman of which is favorable to its passage.

The bill limits the size of hats to "eighteen inches measured from edge of brim to edge of brim along a straight line drawn through the centre of the crown."

Pins, feathers of plumes shall not extend more than six inches outside of the boundary. There is a clause prohibiting the use of "dead bodies, wings, feathers or snakes of other animal or reptile likely to breed filth or disease germs." The penalty is a fine ranging from $100 to $200.

"There is a real necessity for this measure," said Hilton. "A person cannot walk through a store or a street car now without incurring danger of having his eyes put out. These 20 inch hat pins must go."

An emergency clause is tacked on the bill which gives it effect as soon as passed.

At Niagara Falls sixteen Bulgarians were refused admittance to Canada.

SPORTING NEWS

HOAGLAND WILL TRAIN HERE FOR THE MILWAUKEE WALK

W. A. Hoagland writes the Sporting Editor of the Review, as follows:

Auburn, N. Y., April 27, 1909.

Sporting Editor of the Review:

Dear Friend,—Well at last dates have been settled on for a big six-day race in your city, during the week of May 24th. The race will go for three hours each evening, with the exception of Saturday, the last day, which will be nine hours, making a total of twenty-four hours of walking. The limit to insure a contestant to a prize will be 120 miles. That will assure the public of a good race, and as the "cream" of the "heel and toe" walkers of the country will take part some fine racing will be seen. The hours of walking will be from 8 to 11 p. m., and 2 to 11 p. m., on Saturday.

Will be in your city about May 4th and assist in all the arrangements, and at the same time finish my training for the six-day race, which takes place at Milwaukee, Wis., U. S. A., beginning May 10th. I understand that some of the walkers in Canada are to take part in this race. They expect to start at least twelve good men in that contest and all the men entered will be brought to Peterborough for the race week, May 24th.

I am pleased to state that it will be a pleasure for me to bring all the best men there are in the States to compete in your city, and together with the good ones there in Canada, it will make a grand contest. I hope Mr. Stacy will be able to start in this race as I would like to walk against him.

Messrs. Harrison and Spenoley of your city are two good men and no doubt there are others. The race will be open to all good men. I will write you again this week. Regards to my many friends in Peterborough.

Yours truly,

W. A. HOAGLAND.

RELAY RACE FROM LAKEFIELD TO PETERBOROUGH, MAY 29th

The YMCA Business Boys' one mile run that was scheduled to take place last night was postponed until next Tuesday at 7.50 on account of the unfavorable weather.

The wrestling matches will take place on Thursday night at 7.50.

On Saturday afternoon all the boys of the YMCA will go out for a paper chase. All boys invited.

The Business Boys will hold semi-weekly runs on Tuesday and Thursday nights to get in shape for the relay race from Lakefield to Peterborough on May 29th. The school boys will run on Tuesday and Wednesday at 4.30 and on Saturday mornings.

All boys are requested to be in good shape as an attempt will be made to lower the record for the Examiner race which is 55 min. 16 secs, held by Ernie Wilson. That will mean that each mile will have to be run in 5 mins. 30 secs.

The trial races will be held on Thursday, May 20th. School boys at 2.30 and Business Boys at 7.30. The distance will be one mile.

BALL TOSSER'S CORNER

BATSMANS' POSITION.

Rule 38.—Each player of the side at bat shall become the batsman and must take his position with the batsman's lines, in the order that his name appears on his team's batting list.

THE ORDER OF BATTING.

Rule 39, Sec. 1.—The batting order of each team must be delivered before the game by its captain, to the umpire, who shall submit it to the inspection of the captain of the other side. The battery order delivered to the umpire must be followed throughout the game, unless a player be substituted for another, in which case the substitute must take the place on the batting order of the relieved player.

Sec. 2.—When the umpire announces the pitcher prior to commencement of game, the player announced must pitch until the first batsman has either been put out or has reached first base.

JAPANESE BLEACHERS.

Japanese bleachers are like no other bleachers you ever looked at. They are curios in themselves. Instead of tiers upon tiers of seats, the Japanese erect tiers upon tiers of scaffolds. The The rooters sit upon the platforms with legs crossed, four and five deep, and intently watch the games. If they have the extra price they rent seats from vendors who pass among the crowds, otherwise they squat on the hard, bare boards. The scaffolds are built so as to form an amphitheatre and the view is generally unobstructed. The Japanese are ingenious carpenters. Bleachers have been built to seat 8,000 fans and not a nail was used, and yet they were fully as substantial as the American style. Hemp ropes, poles and boards were the material. The framework of the scaffolds are securely fastened by ropes before the boards were placed in condition.

The Lilies apparently will not have a team this year. They were not represented at the meeting last night, when they should have been if they mean business.

Twenty-one innings is the record length of a game set by two amateur baseball teams in Seattle last week. The battle was between a team composed of soldiers from Fort Casey and the Websters of Seattle. In the twenty-first inning a double and two singles drove over one run, the lone tally of the long contest, and the soldier boys were the victors. Each pitcher allowed eight hits, and each struck out 21 men.

Toronto lost to Baltimore yesterday, being six runs short at the finish of the game. The team lived up to the first part of the name of "Hitless Wonders," which one sporting writer has ascribed to them, as hits were very conspicuous by their absence on the part of the losers.

If the Edmonton team does not show up well in the Western Canadian League, Fred Whitcroft can take the bouquets which will be showered at Peterborough, as to this city being a good burg for ball tossers.

There may be some baseball played here this season, and then again there may not. Still, it wouldn't be advisable for any interested fan to attend the next intermediate league meeting and offer a few suggestions.

Midland league players may as well hang up their gloves and be content to watch the games from the grandstand unless they offer big inducements to be allowed to play in the intermediate league.

NOTHING DOING AT THE INTERMEDIATE BALL MEETING

There was nothing doing in the line of business at the intermediate baseball meeting last night, but this organization kept up its reputation of always furnishing some excitement. Of the five teams which were represented last Tuesday night only two showed up last evening and whether they will not have a team or haven't got the $3 could not be ascertained. The president was unavoidably absent as was also the secretary, and it fell on the vice-president to conduct the meeting. The Strathconas and Y.M.C.A. were represented and asked that the minutes of the last meeting be read. This was done, but they did not correspond with what had actually taken place and this led to a warm discussion between the representatives of the four teams. Some one happily moved that the meeting be adjourned to meet again next Tuesday night. Two teams were in favor of this and two against it and it was up to the vice-president to break the tie. The result was that the teams will fight it out again on the evening of May 4th.

SIMPSON TO RUN IN BIG DERBY

Will Start in $10,000 Marathon at New York on May 8th

The Toronto Star says:

"Fred Simpson will positively start in the big $10,000 Marathon in New York May 8," said Tom Eck, the Ojibway Thunderbolt's manager who arrived from New York today with Simpson for the Canadian Marathon here Saturday.

"Simpson has gone to Hiawatha to see his wife and family and will be back tomorrow. If it hadn't been for his bad knee he would have beaten Svanberg easily in New York on April 18. The knee bothered him four miles before he quit. Do you know Appleby has been laid up ever since that race at Rosedale with Simpson. The cold got Simpson in the knees but it struck Appleby inwardly, and he has been in trouble ever since. Simpson is all right for the race Saturday. He will win sure."

FOOTBALL

Special to the Review.

Havelock, April 27— Havelock has been named as the battle ground for the first struggle in the Midland Foot bill League and on Wednesday, May 5th, the season will be opened when Havelock and Norwood will meet on the park grounds here.

It promises to be an exhibition of good football as both teams are about of equal strength and although neither one have had any practise yet this season up to the present, nevertheless the game will be well worth seeing.

With such men in the game as Hitchins, Lancaster, Robinson, Kindred Andrews and McKay, Havelock bids well to make a good showing in the league this year.

SPORTING TALK

A resident of Sydney, Australia, who has just arrived in town, and who saw the Burns-Johnson fight, says the smart sporting element worked a neat trick before the mill, by which they cleaned up a lot of sure money. They engaged a big negro who looked something like Johnson to go about Sydney at night drinking and carousing in leading saloons until the report became prevalent that Texas Jack was in no condition to fight. In this way they made the odds on Burns go up until they were ready to plank down their coin on the black fighter, who they knew was in splendid condition.

This Australian also says that an effort to fix Johnson for $3,000 was well known, and that Burns, aware of the fact that the negro intended to fight on the level, worried himself into such a nervous condition that he was bordering on collapse when he entered the ring.

The rules laid down by the men who score ball games, with a practical knowledge of the game, is to give players base hits whenever there is a doubt. For example, if the player would have made more than an average hard play and missed it, a hit should be credited. Often a ball will be hit straight at a player and take a bad bound. Again a player will try to make a hurried pick-up on a slow grounder. Base hits should be given at all times where there is a doubt, for the fielder has a shade the worst of it on the ball fields, that are not as smooth as billiard tables.

Alfred Shrubb and St. Yves, the winner of Pat Powers' Derby Marathon in New York some time ago, have been matched to run 20 miles at either the Shamrock or National grounds in Montreal on May 16th. The purse for the run is to be $5,000, the largest amount ever put up for an event of this kind in Canada.

Fred Appleby has signed a contract to race Acoose, the Grenfell Indian, in Winnipeg, on May 17th. Appleby will run J. D. Marsh twenty miles on Victoria Day on the same course.

SKIDOO NIGHT AT ROLLER RINK

There was a big crowd at the Auditorium Roller Rink last night, and a big time was spent. It was Skidoo Night, and the band concert and competitions were greatly enjoyed. The winners of the Skidoo prizes were Mr. Brady and Miss E. Bateson. The winners of the couple graceful skating were Mr. Jamieson and Miss G. Mowry. The half-mile skating race created a lot of interest, and was won by R. Smith and B. Clute. The judges were Messrs. Tovey, Staunton and Brown. The next attraction is the band concert on Friday evening. The next event of interest is a big carnival on Tuesday evening.

BUSINESS SLACK ON RAILWAYS

Business is not picking up on the railways as briskly as was hoped for in the past couple of months. It was thought that with the opening of navigation that the railways would have a bigger demand for freight cars, which would necessarily furnish employment to those who have been laid off. A railway official stated to the Review that the amount of business now being transacted does not come up to the figures of last year, and is away behind that of two years ago. Still conditions are likely to take a turn for the better in the course of a few weeks.

IS BEING HEARD THIS AFTERNOON

Toronto, April 28—At one o'clock today the argument before the divisional court on the motion which in effect is to prevent the crown again calling Florence Kinrade as a witness in the famous Hamilton murder case was adjourned until 2 p.m. Mr. George Lynch Staunton having then scarcely gotten over the first part of his case for the quashing of the warrant for Florence Kinrade's arrest. Mr Staunton argued that a coroner is appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor and not by royal warrant and royal proclamation and therefore the coroner's court and the coroner cannot issue a warrant for the compulsory attendance of a witness.

IN CUPID'S GUISE.

By JOHN BARTON OXFORD.

The afternoon session at the dispensary was over. The last waiting patient in the long line which had filed stolidly by the desk for the past two hours had groaned out a recital of her many ailments, received her portion of advice and a bottle of medicine and departed homeward, calling upon numerous saints to shower their blessings upon the weary, white coated young physician behind the rail.

It was a blistering day. Outside the pavement baked in the pitiless sun, and within the little room the air was hot and lifeless.

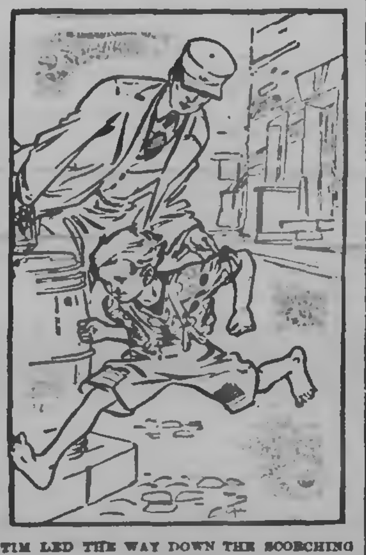
As the street door closed with a bang Dr. Trainor slammed down the cover of his desk, elevated his feet luxuriously upon it and, pulling out his cigarette case, began to smoke with deep inhalations of content.

"Now, then, Sammy, old boy," he called to his assistant, who was arranging the bottles in the laboratory beyond, "let's wash up and go uptown for dinner. I'm starved. Lord, what a day! Whole blamed neighborhood laid up, it would seem. No, never mind those reports. We'll fix 'em up in the morning. We've done enough for one day. Hustle up now, old chap! We need something for the inner man, both of us, and a bit of music while we feast to cheer us up and take the edge off these walls we've been listening to all day."

In the laboratory the assistant quitted the endless rows of bottles with no reluctance whatever. He threw off his coat, grinning expansively.

"That's me," he agreed heartily. "Us for the feed. Be with you in a minute, Billy."

From the room beyond came the sound of running water and a mighty splashing as the assistant laved his perspiring face. Trainor arose from the desk and began pulling down the shades as a gentle hint to any late comers that business for the day was over.



TIM LED THE WAY DOWN THE SCORCHING SIDEWALKS.

Just as he was drawing the last one the street door burst open, and into the room came a panting, barefooted small boy, his eyes shining, his mop of red hair disheveled with heat and haste, his whole bearing that of a messenger with evil tidings, in which he took a certain pride of importance.

Trainor wheeled upon him, and the expression at that moment in his eyes could hardly have been mistaken for cordial welcome.

"Well?" he questioned shortly. "What are you doing here? Don't you know we close at 5?"

"Say," said the youth, no whit abashed by his reception, "I guess you know me, don't you? Me name's Farrell—Tim Farrell of Blossom court—cured me kid sister of the measles last month—remember that, don't you?"

"What's the row? Has she got 'em again?" Trainor growled.

"Got nothin'," was the scornful reply. "Accident this time. Lady's fell down the stairs an' sprained her ankle"—

"You're in the wrong booth, sonny—see?" said Trainor. "You want to go to 86 Carver street. They'll send down a doctor from there. This is where we give out medicine. Don't take any out cases here. So long. Chase yourself now. We're closing up here for the day."

Young Mr. Farrell showed no signs of complying with these delicate hints. A knowing smile curved the corners of his mouth.

"I guess you'll come, all right, all right," said he. "Maybe you think it's me old woman or me kid sister that's took the drop. Nixy, Bill. It's a swell dame this time; that's what. Miss Mortimer, from the settlement, that's who."

"Huh?" said Trainor with sudden interest. "What's this? What's happened to Miss Mortimer?"

"Fell downstairs," the youth repeated. "Missed her footin' at the second landin', where it was dark, an' went down to the bottom of the flight. Twisted her ankle bad. Grogan, the fat grocer, picks her up an' carries her up to the old woman's joint, an'"—

Trainor had doffed his white coat in a flash and, catching up his street coat from a chair and the little back case from the top of his desk, laid a hand on Tim's arm.

"Come on. I'll go with you," said he. "Ho, Sammy," he called to the assistant, "go up and get your dinner at Gettemy's. I'll join you there later if I can."

Tim led the way down the scorching sidewalks, turned into a narrow side street and from there into a yet narrower court. With Trainor at his heels he entered the door of a tumbledown tenement and pattered up the rickety stairs.

At the top of the third flight they entered a doorway, to be greeted by a portly woman with red face and anxious eyes.

"And is it you, doctor?" she cried in relief. "Sure, she's hurted bad. Come into the front room."

She ushered him into the room beyond where on an old haircloth sofa a very pretty girl was propped on pillows. Her eyes widened at the sight of the visitor.

"Billy," she said, "how did you get here?"

Dr. Trainor was a man of considerable decision. He turned to the stout woman, and his manner brooked no delay.

"Mrs. Farrell," said he crisply, "some hot water at once, if you please. You, Tim, hustle back to the dispensary before Dr. Martin leaves and tell him to send me some two inch bandages. Understand?"

The two departed on their errands, and Trainor turned to the girl on the sofa.

"It's nothing—really nothing," she said hastily. "I slipped on the landing and"—

"Helen," said Trainor severely, "don't tell me what it is or what it isn't. That ankle is badly sprained. I'm all out of patience with this settlement work of yours. You've got to leave it!"

"Oh, indeed?" she challenged.

"You certainly have," said he. "There are plenty of others better fitted physically than you are to carry it on. You're to take a rest now. And also you're to have filled this prescription I shall give you."

He tore a prescription blank from the pad in his case and scribbled away for a moment. Then he passed it to the girl.

"It is to be filled at the chapel of the Ascension," he specified.

She took the bit of paper and read it, while a dull red crept into her cheeks. On it was the single word "Matrimony."

Trainor, watching her, saw the color in her face momentarily heighten. Then she crumpled the paper and tossed it to the floor.

"Absurd!" she said, but her eyes were turned away.

"Not in the least," said he calmly. "I think you'll admit I have been patient with a great patience. Let me do the charity work for us both. I can afford it. I have money enough, and, what is more, I have the strength that you haven't."

"Billy, you're a dear, good boy," said she, "but—but"—

"But what?" said he.

She was silent. Trainor reached over and took one of her hands in his own.

"Helen, dear, don't be foolish," he said gently. "I need you far more than these people here. They can find some one else, but I can't. Will you accept that prescription?"

Again she was silent. At length she lifted a pair of radiant eyes to his. There was mockery in them, but tenderness as well.

"You see—you see," she began haltingly—"oh, well, the point is, you're the doctor, I suppose."

He bent quickly toward her, but at that moment the voice of Tim sounded from the hall.

"Hey, doc, here's the bandages!"

"All right," Trainor laughed. "Bring 'em in, Cupid."

Thought Controls Weather.

I certainly do believe we can govern even "the elements"—the weather—by thought power. I believe weather is a reflection of the moods of the race and that as we and our moods evolve the weather changes to match. And I believe it is quite possible for your mental treatment or mine to stem the world tide and change the weather, just as one man's thought sometimes stems the thought tide of a mob and changes its course.

Why not? This is a fluid world made up of thought in motion. All its currents are set by thought, your thought and mine and every man's. Why, then, cannot air currents and thought currents be stemmed by more thought from you and from me? They can be. Nothing is impossible to him who believes and keeps on trying. This sounds like a creed on weather. It is. I've nothing beyond "coincidences" and faith to prove it by. But "faith is the substance of things not seen," and the not seen things are the really real ones. The man who governs his thoughts speaks peace to the weather waves.—Nautilus.

Fox Creek, N.B.—"I have always had pains in the loins and a weakness there, and often after my meals my food would distress me and cause soreness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me much good. I am stronger, digestion is better, and I can walk with ambition. I have encouraged many mothers of families to take it, as it is the best remedy in the world. You can publish this in the papers." — Mrs. WILLIAM BOURQUE, Fox Creek, N.B., Canada.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. THE HOOK

What's the use of writing spring poetry when there's no spring!

Cheer up! According to the calendar summer does not commence till June 21st.

For the sake of propriety it is about time winter was getting out of the lap of spring.

The latest outbreak in Turkey is evidently plagiarized from one of Reginald DeKoven's operas.

A Peterborough man was heard to remark that he had spent a month in Lindsay last Sunday.

The Montreal baseball team has lost four games by one run. This makes us think of how near to victory the Review hockey team often was.

Caruso says he smoked from forty to one hundred cigarettes a day. At this rate he should be about two laps ahead of a certain Peterborough newspaper man.

We are pleased to note that Mr. Gladish of the Toronto News has relapsed to plain "W. M. Gladish" in signing his baseball correspondence.

It looks from here as if Hessan Abdallah, Karkanoff, Yussif Mahmout, Rubberto Cemento and the rest of the Turkish wrestlers with high-sounding titles, were needed at home pretty badly just now.

Claims Perpetual Motion.

A man named James Burroughs, living near Wallaceburg, Ont., claims to have discovered perpetual motion. He has had the power running in his shop for twelve months now, and he says that it has never stopped since he first started it.

Burroughs says that the power of the contrivance which he has built cannot be fathomed, and thinks that it will become one of the wonders of the world before long.

Burroughs has the shop in which his contrivance is located always under lock and key, and he allows no one in lest his secret be discovered by interested parties.

Patents for this invention have been applied for at Ottawa and Washington.

WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD

Mi-o-na Has Reached a Gold Standard, Says Harry Ellis of Fergus, For Stomach Trouble.

Harry Ellis of Fergus, Ont. says: "I believe that Miona for the cure of stomach trouble is worth its weight in gold. It cured me from a stomach difficulty that seemed to puzzle all other prescriptions and remedies. I was unable to eat, the food would ferment and form gas and make a serious pressure on my heart. There were terrible pains in the pit of my stomach. I became weak, drowsy, discouraged and later I got nervous and could not sleep or rest. This disease makes one feel like not wanting to see any human being and produces melancholy and forebodings. I was told to try Miona and when I commenced on the first box I had hardly any faith in it, but the first two days' treatment made the pain in my stomach cease and to make a long story short, the upshot of my using Miona was that it cured me wholly, and I now can eat what I like and when I am hungry. I am an ardent advocate of the use of Miona."

Wm. Medill, Peterborough, sells Mi-o-na Tablets the dyspepsia remedy that is making such surprising cures throughout Canada, for 50 cents a box, guarantees them to cure, or money back.

The Barrier

Rex Beach

"I was afraid you had weakened," he said. "Everything is ready and waiting. I've got the only canoe in the place, a Peterborough, and hired a good oarsman to put you through, instructing him to make as fast time as he can and to board the first steamer that overtakes you. Too bad this freighter that just got in isn't going the other way. However, there's liable to be another any hour, and if one doesn't come along you'll find enough blankets and food in the skiff, so you needn't go ashore. You'll be there before you know it."

Then he led her out into the darkness, and they stumbled down to the river's bank, descending to the gravelly water's edge, where rows of clumsy hand sawed boats and poling skiffs were chafing at their painters. The up river steamer was just clearing.

Stark's low whistle was answered a hundred yards below, and they searched out a darker blot that proved to be a man's figure.

"Is everything ready?" he inquired, at which the shadow grunted unintelligibly. So, holding Necia by the arm, Stark helped her back to a seat in the stern.

"This man will take you through," he said. "You can trust him all right."

The oarsman clambered in and adjusted his sweeps; then Stark laid a hand on the prow and shoved the light boat out into the current, calling softly:

"Goodby and good luck!"

"Goodby, Mr. Stark. Thank you ever so much," the girl replied, too numb and worn out to say much or to notice or care whither she was bound or who was her boatman. She had been swept along too swiftly to reason or fear for herself any more.

Stark did not return to his cabin, but went back instead to his saloon, where he saw Poleon Doret still sprawling with elbows on the table, his hat pulled low above his sullen face. Stark then went out and down toward the barracks. A light behind the drawn curtains of the officer's house told that Burrell was not abed, but he waited a long moment after his summons before the door was opened, during which he heard the occupant moving about and another door close in the rear. When he was allowed entrance at last he found the young man alone in a smoke filled room, with a bottle and two empty glasses on the table.

For at the sound of his voice Gale had whispered to Burrell, "Keep him out!" and the lieutenant had decided to refuse his late visitor admittance when he lighted on the expedient of concealing the trader in the bedroom at the rear. It was only natural, he reasoned, that Gale should dislike to face a man like Stark before he had regained his composure.

"Go in there and wait till I see what he wants," he had said, and, shutting the old man in, he had gone forth to admit Stark. Stark entered and closed the door.

"I've got some work for you, lieutenant. It's got to be done tonight, right now! You represent the law, or at least you've taken every occasion to so declare yourself, so now I've come to you with something big. It's a serious affair, and, being as I'm a peaceful man, I want to go by the law." His eyes mocked the words he uttered. "You seem to carry the weight of this whole community on your shoulders, so I'm here to give you some information."

Burrell said quietly: "It's a little late for polite conversation. Come to the point."

"I've got a murderer for you."

"You've had a killing in your place, eh?"

"No; I've just made a discovery. I found it all out by accident, too—pure accident. By heaven, you can't tell me there isn't a beneficent Providence overlooking our affairs. He's a friend of yours and a highly respected party. He's a glorious example to this whole river. He's everybody's friend. He's the shining mark of this whole country. He's the benevolent renegade, Squaw Man Gale. Gaylord is his name, and I was a fool not to know it sooner."

The disclosure had not affected the soldier as Stark expected, and his anger began to lift itself.

"The man's a murderer. He's wanted in California, where I came from. He's been indicted, and there's a price on his head. He's hidden for fifteen years, but he'll hang as sure as I stand here."

Burrell knew he must gain time for thought. One false step might ruin all. He could not face this on the spur of the moment; so, shrugging his shoulders with an air of polite skepticism, he assumed a tone of good natured raillery.

"Fifteen years? Murder? John Gale a murderer? Why, that's almost—pardon me if I smile—I'm getting sleepy. What proof have you?"

"Proof!" blazed the gambler. "Proof! Ask Gaylord! Proof! Why, the woman he murdered was my wife!"

It was Burrell's turn now to fall incoherent, and not only did his speech forsake him, but his thoughts went madly veering off into a wilderness where there was no trail, no light, no hope. What frightful bones were these he bared? This man was Bennett! This was Necia's father! He raised a pair of eyes that had become furious and bloodshot and suddenly realized that the man before him, who persisted in saddling upon Gale this heinous crime, was the slayer of Necia's mother, for he did not doubt Gale's story for an instant. He found his fingers writhing to feel the creature's throat.

"Proof!" Stark was growling. "How much proof do you need? I've followed him for fifteen years. I've tracked him with men and dogs through woods and deserts and mining camps. I've slept on his trail for 5,000 miles, and now do you think I'm mistaken? He killed my wife, I say, and robbed me of my little girl! That's her in his house. That's her he calls Necia. She's my girl—my girl, do you understand?—and I'll have his life."

Burrell had no inkling yet of the father's well shaped plans nor how farreaching they were and could barely stammer:

"So! You—you know?"

"Yes! She wears the evidence around her neck, and if that isn't enough I can furnish more—evidence enough to smother you. My name isn't Stark at all. I changed it years ago for certain reasons. I've changed it more than once, but that's my privilege and my own affair. Her name is Merridy Bennett."

"I don't suppose you know I'm going to marry her?" said the Kentuckian irrelevantly.

"No," replied the other; "I wasn't aware of the fact."

"Well, I am. I'll be your son-in-law."

"There's a lot of things, Burrell, for you and me to settle up first. For one thing, I want those mines of hers. I'm her father, and she's not of age. I'll take them anyway as her next of kin."

Burrell did not follow up this statement, for its truth was incontrovertible, so he continued:

"We'll adjust that after Gale is attended to. But meanwhile what do you want me to do?"

"I want you to arrest the man who killed my wife. If you don't take him the miners will. I've got a following in this camp, and I'll raise a crowd in fifteen minutes—enough to hang this squaw man or batter down your barracks to get him. But I don't want to do that. I want to go by the law you've talked so much about. I want you to do the trick."

At last Burrell saw the gambler's deviltry. He knew Stark's reputation too well to think that he feared a meeting with Gale. Stark had planned his settlement coldly and with deliberate malice. Moreover, he was strong enough to stand aside and let another take his place and thus deny to Gale the final recourse of a hunted beast, the desperate satisfaction that the trader craved. He tied his enemy's hands and delivered him up with his thirst unsatisfied—to whom? He thrust a weapon into the hand of his other enemy and bade this other enemy use it—worse than that, forced him to strike the man he honored, the man he loved. Burrell never doubted that Stark had carefully weighed the effect of this upon Necia and had reasoned that a girl like her could not understand a soldier's duty if it meant the blood of a parent. If he refused to act the gambler could break him, while every effort he made to protect Gale would but increase the other's satisfaction. There was no chance of the trader's escape. Stark held him in his hand. Was it impossible, the lieutenant wondered, to move this man from his purpose?

"Have you thought of Necia? She loves Gale. What effect will this have on her?"

"D—n her! She's more his brat than mine. I want John Gaylord!"

At this a vicious frenzy overtook Burrell, and he thought of the man behind yonder door, whom he had forgotten. Well, why not? These two men had stalked each other clear into the farthest places, driven by forces that were older than the hills. Who was he to stand between such passions?

The gambler's words rang in his ears—"I want John Gaylord"—and before he knew what he was doing he had answered, "Very well; I'll give him to you," and crossed quickly to the door of his bedroom and flung it open. On the threshold he paused stockstill. The place was empty. A draft sucked through the open window, flirting with the curtain and telling the story of the trader's exit.

"If you're looking for your coat, it's here," he heard Stark say. "Get into it, and we'll go for him."

The lieutenant's mind was working fast enough now, in all conscience, and he saw with clear and fateful eyes whither he was being led, at which a sudden reckless disregard for consequences seized him. He felt a blind fury at being pulled and hauled and driven by this creature and also an unreasoning anger at Gale's defection. But it was the thought of Necia and the horrible net of evil in which this man had ensnared them both that galled him most. He determined to finish this thing here and now.

Meade went to his bureau, took his revolver from the belt where he had hung it and came out into the other room. Stark, seeing the weapon, exclaimed:

"You don't need that. He won't re[illegible] you."

"I've decided not to take him," said Burrell.

"Decided not to take him!" shouted the other. "Have you weakened? Don't you intend to arrest that man?"

"No!" cried the soldier. "I've listened to your lies long enough. Now I'm going to stop them once for all. You're too dangerous to have around."

They faced each other silently a moment; then Stark spoke in a very quiet voice, though his eyes were glittering.

"What's the meaning of this? Are you crazy?"

"Gale was here just before you came and told me who killed your wife. I know."

"Well?"

"It's pretty late. This place is lonely. This is the simplest way."

The gambler fell to studying his antagonist, and when he did not speak Burrell continued:

"Come, brace up! I'm giving you a chance."

But Stark shook his head.

"Don't be afraid," insisted the lieutenant. "There are no witnesses. If you get me, nobody will know, and your word is good. If not, it's much simpler than the other." Then when the gambler still made no move he insisted. "You wouldn't have me kill you like a rattlesnake?"

"You couldn't," said the older man. "You're not that kind, and I'm not the kind to be cheated either. Listen. I've lived over forty years, and I never took less than was coming to me. I won't begin tonight."

"You'll get your share."

"Bah! You don't know what I mean. I don't want you. It's him I'm after, and when I'm done with him I'll take care of you, but I won't run any risk right now. You might put me away, there's the possibility, and I won't let you or any other man—or woman either, not even my girl—cheat me out of Gale. Put up your gun."

The soldier hesitated, then did as he was bidden, for this man knew him better than he knew himself.

"I ought to treat you like a mad dog, but I can't do it while your hands are up. I'm going to fight for John Gale, however, and you can't take him."

"I'll have his carcass hung to my ridgepole before daylight."

Stark turned to go, but paused at the door. "And you think you'll marry Necia, do you?"

"I know it."

"Is that so? Suppose you find her first."

"What do you mean? Wait"—

But his visitor was gone, leaving behind him a lover already sorely vexed and now harassed by a new and sudden apprehension. What venom the man distilled! Could it be that he had sent Necia away?

Stark traced his way back to his cabin in a ten times fiercer mood than he had come, reviling, cursing, hating. Back past the dark trading post he went, pausing to shake his clinched fist and grind out an oath between his teeth; past the door of his own saloon, which was alight and whence came the sound of revelry, through the scattered houses, where he went more by feel than by sight, up to the door of his own shack. He closed the door behind him now and locked it, for he had some thinking to do, then felt through his pockets for a match, and, striking it, bent over his lamp to adjust the wick. It flared up steady and strong at last, flooding the narrow place with its illumination. Then he straightened up and turned toward the bed to throw off his coat, when suddenly every muscle of his body leaped with an uncontrollable spasm, as if he had uncovered a deadly serpent coiled and ready to spring.

John Gale was sitting at his table, barely an arm's length away, his gray blue eyes fixed upon him and the deep seams of his heavy face set as if graven in stone. His huge, knotted hands were upon the table, and between them lay a naked knife.

CHAPTER XVI.

JOHN GALE'S HOUR.

It was a heathenish time of night to arouse the girl, thought Burrell as he left the barracks, but he must allay these fears that were besetting him; he must see Necia at once. The low, drifting clouds obscured what star glow there was in the heavens, and he stepped back to light a lantern.

A few moments later he stood above the squaw, who crouched on the trader's doorstep, wailing her death song into the night.

"What's wrong? Where is Necia? Where is she?" he demanded and at last seized her roughly, facing her to the light, but Alluna only blinked owlishly at his lantern and shook her head.

"Gone away," she finally informed him and began to weave again in her despair, but he held her fiercely.

"Where has she gone? When did she go?" He shook her to quicken her reply.

"I don't know; I don't know. Long time she's gone now." She trailed off into Indian words he could not comprehend, so he pushed past her into the house to see for himself and without knocking flung Necia's door open and stepped into her chamber. Before he had swept the unfamiliar room with his eyes he knew that she had indeed gone, and gone hurriedly, for the signs of disorder betrayed a reckless haste.

"When did she go, Alluna? For God's sake, what does this mean?" he cried.

"I don't know. She come and she go, and I don' see her; mebbe three, four hour ago."

"Where's Gale? He'll know. He's gone after her, eh?"

The upward glow of the lantern heightened the young man's pallor, and again the squaw broke into her sad lament.

"John Gale—he's gone away with the knife of my father. I am afraid; I am afraid."

"Did he come back here just now?"

"No. He went to the jail house, and he would not let me follow. He don' come back no more."

This was confusing, and Meade said angrily:

"Why didn't you give the alarm? Why didn't you come to me instead of yelling your lungs out around the house?"

"He told me to wait," she said simply.

"Go find Poleon, quick!"

"He told me to wait," she repeated stoically, and Burrell knew he was powerless to move her. He saw the image of a great terror in the woman's face. The night suddenly became heavy with the hint of unspeakable things, and he grew fearful, suspecting now that Gale had told him but a part of his story, that all the time he knew Stark's identity and that his quarry was at hand, ready for the kill or, if not, he had learned enough while standing behind that partition. Where was he now? Where was Necia? What part did she play in this? He gave up trying to think and fled for Stark's saloon, reasoning that where one was the other must be near, and there would surely be some word of Necia. He burst through the door. A quick glance over the place showed it empty of those he sought; but, spying Poleon Doret, he dragged him outside, inquiring breathlessly:

"Have you seen Gale?"

"No."

"Have you seen Stark? Has he been about?"

"Yes; wan hour, mebbe two, hour ago. W'y? W'at for you ask?"

"There's the devil to pay. Those two have come together, and Necia is gone."

"Necia gone!" the Canadian jerked out. "W'at you mean by dat? W'ere she's gone to?"

"I don't know. Nobody knows. Heaven! I'm shaking like a leaf."

"Bah! She's feel purty bad. She's go out by herse'f. Dat's all right."

"I tell you something has happened to her! There's h—l to pay! I found her clothes at the house torn to ribbons and all muddy and wet."

Poleon cried out at this.

"We've got to find her and Gale, and we haven't a minute to lose."

"W'ere have you look?"

"I've been to the house, but Alluna is crazy and says Gale has gone to kill Stark, as near as I can make out. Both of them were at my quarters tonight, and I'm afraid the squaw is right."

"But w'ere is Necia?"

"We don't know. Maybe Stark has got her."

The Frenchman cursed horribly. "Have you try hees cabane?"

"No."

Without answer the Frenchman darted away, and the lieutenant sped after him through the deserted rows of log houses.

Burrell gripped his companion's arm with fingers of steel, and together they crept up to the door. But even before they had gained it they heard a voice within. It was Stark's. The walls of the house were of moss chinked logs that deadened every sound, but the door itself was of thin whipsawed pine boards with ample cracks at top and bottom, and they heard plainly. The lieutenant leaned forward, then with difficulty smothered an exclamation, for he heard another voice now—the voice of John Gale. The words came to him muffled, but distinct, and he raised his hand to knock when suddenly he seized Poleon, hissing into his ear:

"Listen! For God's sake, listen!"

For the first time in his tempestuous life Ben Stark lost the iron composure that had made his name a byword in the west, and at sight of his bitterest enemy seated in the dark of his own house waiting for him he became an ordinary, nervous, frightened man. It was the utter unexpectedness of the thing that shook him, and before he could regain his balance Gale spoke:

"I've come to settle, Bennett."

"What are you doing here?" the gambler stammered.

"I was up at the soldier's place just now and heard you. I didn't want any interruptions, so I came here, where we can be alone." He paused and when Stark made no answer continued, "Well, let's get at it." But still the other made no move. "You've had all the best of it for twenty years," Gale went on in his level voice, "but tonight I get even. I've lived for this!"

"That shot in Lee's cabin?" recalled Stark, with the light of new understanding. "You knew me then?"

"Yes."

Stark took a deep breath. "What a d——d fool I've been!"

"Your devil's magic saved you that time, but it won't stop this." The trader rose slowly, with the knife in his hand.

"You'll hang for this!" said the gambler unsteadily, at which Gale's face blazed.

"Ha!" exclaimed the trader exultingly. "You can feel it in you already, eh?"

With an effort Stark began to assemble his wits as the trader continued:

"You saddled your dirty work on me, Ben Stark, and I've carried it for fifteen years, but tonight I put you out the way you put her out. An eye for an eye!"

"I didn't kill her," said the man.

"So? The yellow is showing up at last. I knew you were a coward, but I didn't think you'd be afraid to own it to yourself."

"Look here," said Stark curiously, "do you really think I killed Merridy?"

"I know it. A man who would strike a woman would kill her—if he had the nerve."

Stark had now mastered himself and smiled.

"My hate worked better than I thought. Well, well, that made it hard for you, didn't it?" he chuckled. "I supposed, of course, you knew."

"Knew?" Gale's face showed emotion for the first time. "Knew what?" His hands were quivering slightly.

"She killed herself."

"So help you God?"

"So help me God!"

There was a long pause.

"Why?"

"Say, it's kind of funny our standing here talking about that thing, isn't it? Well, if you want to know, I came home early that night. I guess you hadn't been gone two hours. And the surprise did it more than anything else, I suppose. She hadn't prepared a story. I got suspicious, named you at random and hit the nail on the head."

Gale's face was like chalk, and his voice sounded thin and dry as he said:

"You beat her; that's why she did it."

Stark made no answer.

THE RHINOCEROS.

This Malicious Brute Is the Assassin of the Jungle.

If the genius of hell used up all his mental energy making a devil for the animal kingdom, he could not have created a more uncertain, malicious and ugly brute than the rhinoceros. This animal has buried more hunters than all other big game combined. It seems to be the hired assassin of the jungle.

Its success as a homicide is not due to the fact that it seeks its victim, but because its victim falls over it. If the rhino knows that there is an enemy about, it will try to get away without being seen. If, on the other hand, it thinks that by keeping still it will be passed unnoticed, it stays as silent and motionless as Gibraltar, its little hog eyes watching the direction of the noise and its nose sniffing the air.

Should an enemy show up suddenly in the jungle the rhino charges like a flash, nose down and horns leveled like swords for the thrust, its huge bulk crushing through the brush like an express train. It is always a fight to the death, for a rhinoceros, once in a fight, wins or dies, and it mostly wins if it is not confronted with an express rifle in the hands of a cool, good shot.—Hampton's Magazine.

The Old Time Album.

"The terrors of the autograph album" must have been more general in the middle of the last century than they are now. The volume had embossed pages of various colors and showed alternate literature and art—original verses and drawings of ruins and bridges heightened with white chalk. Girls presented it for contributions so universally that Charles Dickens was on one occasion much astonished to find none forthcoming. He had actually brought with him some verses addressed to a beautiful maiden, on whose parents he was calling, and he carried them away again. Sending them to her by post, he wrote, "I had meant to put these lines into your album, but you, who do nothing like anybody else, did not produce one."—London Standard.

In Morocco.

In Morocco the prevailing tone is grayish white, men's clothes and houses, towns, bushes, tall umbelliferae, nodding like ghosts in autumn—all are white; white sands upon the shore and in the Sahara and over all a white and saddening light, as if the sun was tired of shining down forever on the unchanging life. In no part of Morocco I have visited does the phrase "gorgeous east" have the least meaning, and this is always noted by the wandering easterners, who find the country dull and lacking in color, compared with Asia, or, as the Arabs call it, "Blad Es Schark."—"A Journey to Morocco."

PE-RU-NA PROMPTLY RELIEVES

A Case of Dreadful Suffering Which Had Continued For Months.

An Account of a Remarkable Recovery Given By Mr. Alfred Wood, Teacher of a Private School at Launceston, Tasmania.

MR. AND MRS. ALFRED WOOD.

Mr. Alfred Wood, who has a private school at 23 Frederick street, Launceston, Tasmania, (Australia), has been a teacher for 37 years under the Educational Department of Tasmania. He writes, concerning his wife's case, as follows:

"My wife was suffering for months from gastro-enteritis, and was given up by her medical attendant.

"By good fortune I was induced to try Peruna in her case, and I can truthfully state that from the first dose her dreadful suffering ceased; and after taking five bottles she is permanently cured."

HOW does Peruna make such extraordinary cures as above recited?

By simply arousing the forces of Nature to throw off the diseased action.

Peruna contains no magic and does not operate in any mysterious way, but it does help Nature to combat disease, and thus many times comes to the rescue of the patient in some important crisis.

There is always a time in the course of any disease when a little help goes a great way.

Just as the scales are beginning to descend, when one ounce more would determine the fate of the patient, a little lift will turn the scales in favor of the patient.

Peruna is a handy medicine to have in the household.

It helps many diseases by imparting a natural vigor to the whole system.

As a tonic or catarrh remedy, its reputation is well established all over the world.

As a remedy for stomach and bowel disease, the fame of Peruna is undoubtedly destined to become greater than that of any other medicine in the world.

A great many cases like that above referred to have found Peruna of untold value when no other help seemed of any avail.

Pe-ru-na For Indigestion.

Mr. Donald Robb, Jr., 16 Wrights Ave., Halifax, Nova Scotia, member Independent Order of Forresters, writes:

"While on a visit to Boston, I must have eaten something that did not agree with my stomach, as a terrible case of indigestion followed.

"Peruna was recommended to me and after using three bottles I was entirely cured.

"I therefore recommend Peruna to any one suffering with stomach trouble."

Mr. Chas. Brown, Rogersville, Tenn., writes:

"A friend advised me to take Peruna for indigestion and it cured me in a short time."

BAD "FIVERS" SAID TO BE CIRCULATING

Peterborough People are Warned to be on the Lookout for Them --Traders Bank Imitations

Peterborough people are warned to the look out for worthless $5 notes on the Traders' Bank which are reported to be in circulation hereabouts. Several Ottawa people have already been "stuck."

The notes are of the $5 denomination and are almost perfect, lacking only the signature of the manager of the branch bank issuing them. This makes the situation all the more serious as about a month ago a package of $20,000 worth of Traders' Bank notes went astray while in charge of the Dominion Express Company and have not been found though the Express company have detectives on the case searching for the package.

The $20,000 package was sent from the British American Bank Note Co. of Ottawa, which made them, to the head office of the Traders' Bank at Toronto.

The parcel never reached the Toronto office apparently being stolen or lost in transit.

But the notes were valueless unless put off on careless people as they were not countersigned. The countersignature is put on in the branch bank issuing the notes to the public.

THE KINRADE CASE IS AGAIN DELAYED

Decision in Appeal Against Kinrade Warrant is Reserved—George Lynch-Staunton, K.C., Advances Six Reasons Why Coroner Anderson's Warrant to Force Florence Kinrade to Testify Again Should Not Be Executed.

Toronto, April 29.—Six points were made by George Lynch-Staunton, K.C., before the Divisional Court yesterday in the effort to have the coroner's warrant quashed, which summons Florence Kinrade as a witness in the inquest on her sister's murder. Judgment was reserved by the court on another point altogether, and it may be some days before a decision is given.

Later in the afternoon Chancellor Boyd expressed the view that the crown should state upon what matters it was sought to re-examine the witness. This was eagerly supported by Mr. Lynch-Staunton, who recalled the point to the court just before adjournment.

Mr. Cartwright said that Florence Kinrade had not been examined for four weeks, and that meanwhile additional information had been found.

"Well, you may put in an affidavit setting forth your reasons for recalling her. Can you not disclose to the court this new information? Don't you think the crown ought to condescend to say upon which points they wish to question her?"

"Not at all, my lord," said Mr. Cartwright.

"Well, you see there is an affidavit put in saying she has told all she knows. Don't you think you ought to put in an affidavit. You know the custom is that when a witness is examined and counsel wishes to recall the witness, the custom is to explain to the trial judge upon what point or points you wish the witness to be recalled?"

"Surely," returned Mr. Cartwright, "we cannot be expected to disclose our information as yet to the defence."

Mr. Lynch-Staunton's points were that no coroner has power to issue a warrant for a witness; nor outside the jurisdiction of his own court; that a coroner's court is statutory, and not a court of record and that the statutes give a coroner no power to arrest for contempt of court; that no questions of an incriminating nature may be asked of a witness where the liberty of the witness is in jeopardy; that Miss Kinrade, having told all she knew, cannot be called again; and that no one outside the crown attorney has authority to cross-examine witnesses at a coroner's inquest.

Mr. Lynch-Staunton reiterated his statement that Mr. Blackstock had accused Florence Kinrade of murdering her sister. The court desired proof of this, and a full copy of the evidence taken at the inquest will be supplied if this point is regarded as important.

Chancellor Boyd, Justice Magee and Justice Latchford composed the court.

J. R. Cartwright, K.C., Deputy Attorney-General, and J. B. Mackenzie appeared for the crown, and Mr. Lynch-Staunton, T. C. Robinette, K.C., and Thomas Hobson, for the family.

THEY HELPED SALOON MEN

Montreal Aldermen Shown to Have Very Been Very Friendly in Their Attitude

Montreal, April 29.—The royal commission investigating the city administration got going in good shape yesterday.

Developments began when T. A. Gauthier, chief clerk of the Recorder's court, took the stand. His examination drifted along until Mr. Perron suddenly asked him if the habit of allowing liquor cases to be settled upon payment of the costs had not shown great development about the time of the municipal elections of 1907. Gauthier admitted that it had. He had been forced to act as collecting agent for the election fund of Ald. Proulx, chairman of the police committee, and had called upon a number of the saloon-keepers who had been accommodated by the dismissal of cases entered against them on payment of the costs. These saloonkeepers he had found willing to do the right thing by the alderman who had befriended them.

Several of the saloon men told of more or less generous contributions to the Proulx campaign fund. One F. J. Cavanagh confessed that he was so impressed with the good work of the chairman of the police committee in getting him out of the trouble that he spent $800 or $900 in securing his re-election, and that his efforts on election day were so enthusiastic that he actually killed his horse.

It is likely that a number of other aldermen will be implicated in the same way. Names were mentioned yesterday, but no evidence was given in support.

The New Brunswick Legislature defeated a woman suffrage bill.

There was eight inches of snow at Blind River after Sunday's storm.

John Wyman, a Swede miner, was killed by dynamite at Gold Rock, Ont.

New York City aldermen will attempt to legislate for a standard loaf of bread.

William Hawkes, engineer, Brantford, was probably fatally scalded yesterday.

Fire did $125,000 damage at the Clark Leather Manufacturing plant at Peabody, Mass.

Six persons had their ankles broken in the fall of an elevator in the Wanamakers' store, New York.

A party of Australian journalists en route to the imperial conference will be escorted through Canada by George Ham of the C.P.R.

THE PROGRESS OF THE G.T.P.

Montreal, April 29.—E. J. Chamberlain, vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific, who returned yesterday from the west, makes the official announcement that the company's line will be wholly steeled from Lake Superior to a point 130 miles west of Edmonton by Dominion Day, or a straight track of 1,365 miles. They will also build 200 miles this year in Alberta and Saskatchewan, to move the wheat crop.

All the bridges between Winnipeg and Edmonton are completed and a gap of fifty miles is all that is left of the track laying from Manitoba to Edmonton. The McArthur contract of 275 miles from Prince Arthur Junction to Winnipeg will be all graded in a few weeks.

BRITAIN HAS BIG DEFICIT

Revenues Are Down and Expenditures up in the Old Country

London, April 29.—David Lloyd-George, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, last night issued an explanatory memorandum on the revenue and expenditure for the year.

He estimates the revenues in 1909-10 as $741,950,000 and the expenditure $820,760,000, showing a deficit of $78,810,000. The bulget will be presented in the House of Commons today.

It is pointed out that the increased expenditure is due mainly to old-age pensions and appropriations for the navy.

Dealing with the past year's finances the Chancellor says that nearly all branches of trade and industry suffered serious depression, the foreign trade returns showing diminution in value to the amount of nearly $570,000,000, as compared with 1907.

The Chancellor adds that it is impossible to prophesy any immediate rapid recovery, but he is of the opinion that there are some indications that foreign trade is beginning to improve.

The revenue for 1908 fell short of the budget estimate of $7,510,000, and the interesting fact is noted that in that year for the first time the gross revenue dealt with exceeded $5,000,000,000.

The national debt now amounts to £3,770,606,545.

Boy Shoots Playmate.

Kispey, Sask., April 29.—At noon yesterday while playing with a rifle, the six-year-old son of John Sandler accidentally shot Ross Randall, aged 14, in the side, causing almost instant death.

RAILWAYS SAY BOARD CANNOT PUT STOP TO DISCRIMINATION

In Hearing of City of Toronto's Argument for Suburban Fares, Counsel for Roads Maintain That Act Gives Railway Commissioners No Right to Prevent Companies From Giving Special Rates.

Toronto, April 29.—For an interpretation of two sections of the Dominion Railway Act the lawyers for the C.P.R. and G.T.R. will send a stated case to the Supreme Court to determine whether section 341 is in any way controlled or affected by section 77, and if it is so controlled, to what extent and in what particulars.

The point is raised in the application for an extension of commutation rates to certain places in the neighborhood of Toronto. The railways dispute the jurisdiction of the board and contend that there is no control and that they are perfectly free in the matter of commutation, mileage or excursion tickets to discriminate in whatever way seems good to them.

This contention was clearly brought out by E. W. Beatty of the C.P.R., who quoted the decision of the interstate commission in a case against the Southern Pacific Railway, in which the latter had issued excursion tickets to the Republican and Democratic conventions, but had refused them to the convention of the People's party. It had been held that no unjust discrimination had taken place.

"My contention," said Mr. Beatty, "is that we have the right to give or withhold as we see fit, and that where we have given we have the right to withdraw as we see fit."

"Do you mean to say," interjected Judge Mabee, chairman, "that in the case of commercial travelers, for instance, you could give special rates to the Grits and withhold them from the Tories? Or, take the case of the Legislature, could you give them to the Government side and withhold them from those against the Government?"

Mr. Beatty: "I think we could, my lord, but of course it wouldn't be done."

The chairman: "If your contention were to hold, you could lay out a town plot near another town, build a large hotel, issue commutation tickets to your resort and refuse it to the other towns. I would take issue with you when you say you have power to exercise all sorts of discrimination under the act. Suppose you built an hotel on a beach, would you have the right to issue commutation tickets to all who came to your hotel and not to others in the vicinity?"

Mr. Beatty: "The act gives us power to give free transport to some and withhold it from others."

H. L. Drayton, K.C., appearing for the city, said that the application was also in the interests of an outside population of 200,000 within a radius of 60 miles. There were 80 stations within a radius of 42 miles of Toronto and 47 within a radius of 22 miles. Of these 47 stations, 26 were given commutation rates. Here was obvious discrimination.

In comparison with the Montreal suburban district the difference was still more apparent. In that district 75 stations, all of those within a radius of 60 miles, were receiving commutation rates.

WILL HARBOTTLE SECURE PAROLE

Toronto, April 29.—A petition in circulation which is being largely signed, asking the Department of Justice to grant parole to Colin C. Harbottle, formerly secretary of the Toronto Club, who was sent to Kingston Penitentiary for four years on April 4, 1908, for the theft of over $18,000 of the club funds.

Many members of the Toronto Club are signatories to the petition, which will be presented by T. C. Robinette, K.C., who was Harbottle's counsel, next week.

Should have warmer weather now.

STRIKE SITUATION IS UNCHANGED

Lethbridge, Alta., April 29.—The strike situation remains unchanged, though it is claimed it will be settled inside of a week. One authority stated yesterday that it was a question of the authority of Lewis or Sherman.

Outside of the C.P.R. reserve there is no coal here whatever, and schools are closed because of lack of coal. The district board meets at Fernie Thursday. The Lethbridge Daily Herald and other papers have frequent letters from miners expressing dissatisfaction with Sherman's actions.

AWFUL DEATH OF THOUSANDS

The Turkish Regiments Resumed Slaughter of Armenians at Adana

London, April 29.—A Daily Mail special sent from Mersina, Asia Minor, on Monday night, via Cyprus, says: Two Turkish regiments, landing here on Saturday, proceeded to Adana, where the massacres of Christians began on April 14, and resumed, late Tuesday night, the wholesale murdering of Armenians and the burning of their property. Thousands of Armenians were burnt alive, those attempting to escape being shot down by the troops. The destruction of Adana was completed. The loss of life in the whole province of Adana is estimated at 30,000. The material losses of Europeans is enormous. The British and foreign warships here are inactive. In Hadjin, a town of 15,000 people, thousands of Armenians and three American ladies are besieged by Moslem troops and irregulars. Four Germans, previously reported killed at Bakdjeh, have arrived at Mersina safely. The Armenian population of that town perished.

MR. BORDEN MAKES PLEA AGAINST THE G.T.P. LOAN

Enters Protest at Second Reading of Bill Against Canada Putting Up So Large a Part of the Expense of the Railroad and Getting Nothing in Return.

Ottawa, April 29.—The second reading of the G.T.P. ten million dollar loan bill was reached yesterday afternoon.

R. L. Borden offered an elaborate criticism of the Government's handling of the enterprise and made the suggestion that before any more favors are granted the company, the Government should demand some return in the handing over of ten million dollars of the preference stock. For the small amount that the old Grand Trunk Co. had put into the enterprise, the shareholders had been given $25,000,000 worth of common stock. The country, the other partner, gets nothing.

It appeared from the contract that the G.T.P. could not be forced to take over the eastern section till the Quebec Bridge was ready, in which case there would be a loss in interest and depreciation of ten million dollars or more.

Hon. Mr. Graham, Minister of Railways, did not answer the observations of Mr. Borden, but he dwelt at some length on the absolute necessity of going ahead with the railway.

The discussion will likely be concluded this afternoon, and the House will go into committee on the bill, when Mr. Borden will offer a couple of resolutions, one demanding that the company hand over the preference stock for the loan.

Mr. Borden did not recede from the position he took in 1904, that the country should build the other one-tenth and own the whole road. Government operation of the I.C.R. had not been successful, but he believes it could be demonstrated that a Government-owned road could be operated just as economically and efficiently as any corporation-owned railway.

How was it that the Grand Trunk had been able to complete the Lake Superior branch without additional assistance from the Government? This was a most important branch of the road and it was fair to assume that the company would never give up the control of this line. Could this be the reason the company was building the portion of the road.

Mr. Borden asked the Minister if he was sure that this would be the last request of the G.T.P. for aid.

Mr. Graham did not think Mr. Borden was quite right in making the proportion contributed by the country to the construction of the railway as 90 per cent. However, whatever the proportion might be, Canada was still the partner of the Grand Trunk in this enterprise.

He believed in a few years the G.T.P. would be pressed to accommodate the traffic that would be created in the West. He believed dollar and a half wheat was in sight.

The projection of the Grand Trunk Pacific had forced other railways to construct branch lines that never would have been built. Already 15,389 homesteads had been located within 12 miles on either side of the G.T.P., or 2,461,928 acres.

His answer to the Borden request that the Grand Trunk be compelled to give the country stock for the loan, was that the Conservatives did not get any stock from the C.P.R.

Hon. John Haggart, F. D. Monk and Mr. Nantel (Terrebonne) continued the debate till 6 o'clock, when the House adjourned.

The House went into committee of ways and means when Mr. Fielding's resolution extending to Canadian sugar refiners the privilege of importing foreign raw sugar at the preferential rate in the proportion of two tons to one manufactured by them, were taken up. The sugar refiners had represented to the Government that on account of the combine in the West Indies, they had to pay the higher duties.

Mr. Ames questioned the wisdom of penalizing the West Indies on the eve of a conference, the object of which was to develop trade with those islands.

Mr. Fielding answered that we had granted them the preference and got nothing in return. The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. Foster enquired if there had been any negotiations with the United States with reference to reciprocity in pulp wood and logs. Answer, "No."

Mr. Borden asked if the Government had considered what its policy would be, and Mr. Fielding replied that after the tariff bill was passed by Congress it might be necessary to take action.

The unusual spectacle was seen yesterday morning of a member of the Opposition presiding over the public accounts committee. The chairman, A. H. Clarke, was absent, and C. J. Doherty, a former judge, replaced him.

T. H. Johnson of Winnipeg was examined by Mr. Meighen with reference to the purchase of the Transcontinental right of way. Mr. Johnson, who is a solicitor, had attended to getting the title for the right of way, and charged a fee for each parcel of land whose title he passed.

A specific instance cited by Mr. Meighen was when a whole section was held by the Province of Manitoba under one certificate, the right of way traversed all four quarter sections, and four transfers were made out and charged for.

Elevators In the West.

Ottawa, April 29.—A deputation representing the Western Grain Growers' Association waited on Sir Richard Cartwright yesterday morning and presented a petition signed by 10,000 Manitoba farmers asking the Government to take over all the terminal and transfer elevators between Port Arthur and the Atlantic coast. The matter will be further discussed on Monday next, when representatives of the Dominion Millers' Association will be present.

Objected to Deportation.

Belleville, April 29.—It seems that the six English families who were to be deported from Picton and did not go, after disposing of all their effects, were let remain because the British Government had complained to the Canadian Government that there had been too many deportations from Canada without cause, and only one of the six families will now be deported.

Cold Snap Saves Peaches.

St. Catharines, April 29.—The welcome intelligence was received from the peach growers generally yesterday morning that the cold weather all this month no doubt saved the peach crop, as the buds were not far enough advanced to be harmed by Tuesday night's heavy frost. A quarter of an inch of ice formed.

New Lake Steamer.

Halifax, N.S., April 29.—The steamer Simcoe, constructed in Newcastle-on-Tyne for the Dominion Government, to be used on the great lakes, arrived here Tuesday night. She is 200 feet over all, and will be used in the lighthouse service. Capt. McNab of Owen Sound will take the steamer up the lakes.

Dinner Pail Exploded.

Budget Gambling at Lloyd's.

London, April 29.—The trend of public opinion regarding the sources that Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George is likely to tap to secure the increased revenues necessary to balance the budget is evidenced in the business being done to-day at Lloyd's. Enormous amounts of insurance are being taken against increasing the taxation on sugar and tea at premiums respectively of 35 and 40 guineas. Insurance done on a lesser scale at premiums ranging from 30 to 35 guineas. The budget will be presented to-day.

Brantford Has a Complaint.

Brantford, April 29.—Brantford Board of Trade has decided to appeal to the Railway Commission for the removal of alleged discrimination in rates by local railways. Both the Grand Trunk and T. H. & B. offer lower rates from Lynden and Jerseyville and other places to Hamilton than to Brantford, although these places are near this city. The board will also make an effort to have the coal-carrying service to Port Dover West abolished.

Halifax Mayoralty Election.

Halifax, April 29.—In the civic elections here yesterday Ald. J. A. Chisholm, K.C., was elected mayor of Halifax over Ald. A. Hubley by a majority of 498.

China and Japan.

Victoria, B.C., April 29.—News was brought by the Shinarno Maru that Japan is preparing to enforce her hold on Manchuria. An agitation was under way for a "stronger policy toward China." The Chinese Herald of Yokohama says the impression is gaining ground that Japan, taking advantage of the heavy difficulties, diplomatic and domestic, confronting China's executive, is trying delicately, but none the less relentlessly, to force that country into a diplomatic quandary.

CORONER'S WARRANT NOT GOOD OUTSIDE OF WENTWORTH CO.

This is the Ruling of Chancellor Boyd—Inquest Will Not Likely Be Continued Till Next Monday Night.

Special to the Review.

Toronto, April 29— Chancellor Boyd gave an oral decision in respect to the Kinrade warrant this morning, which in effect is that Coroner Anderson's warrant while perfectly good in the county of Wentworth is not executable here. Comment was made by the Chancellor on the unusual length of the sittings of the Coroner's jury and the hope was expressed that this practice would not continue.

What course the Crown authorities will pursue now is not yet known but it is reported it has been practically decided to call off the inquest until Monday night. In the meantime the Crown may ask for a Crown officer subpoena. This would be applied for personally by the Attorney-General at Osgoode hall under an old law and would be executable anywhere.

ROUGH AND TUMBLE IN COURT ROOM

Midland, April 29.—W. O. Fisher of Orillia, license inspector for East Simcoe, had a rough and tumble fight in the court-room yesterday morning with Joseph Peake, barber, of this town, who had been summoned on charges of illegal sale of liquor. On April 10 the inspector, with Chief of Police Bell, searched the premises occupied by Peake as a barber shop and discovered one bottle of whisky in a cheese box in a hallway back of the shop, and in the cellar 20 empty bottles. Last week the hearing was postponed, when it was found that two of 13 prominent citizens to be summoned as witnesses had not been properly served. None were called yesterday.

Peake has charged Fisher with assault, and this will be heard next Monday.

THE MUSICIANS MUST BE PAID

Ottawa, April 29.—Local 180 of the American Federation of Musicians, has taken action forbidding any of its members from henceforth playing in any of the city churches without remuneration. It has been the custom to allow union men to play free in their own churches, but it is alleged that some have extended their services without cost to other churches, hence the drastic ruling of the union. It will result in the abolition of a number of local church orchestras.

NEWFOUNDLAND

The issue in the present-day political boiling-pot of the ancient colony seems to be, as everywhere in Canada, one of corruption. The taint seems in the air. The standard of morals is money. From the political position of the "representatives" of the people down to the white slave traffic all is shameless and anarchical. The remedy usually comes with the disease. It burns itself out. Crookedness in alleged "high places" as they are somewhat amusingly called, has roused the Newfoundlanders to a pitch of fury never before known. The question of being an honorable representative of a trusting people who expect from a human being better results than from a jaguar or hyaena, seems to "cut no ice" with many people. It would look from the treachery charged as if Canadians were right back to the condition of palaeolithic man who knew no God but his belly, and no faith but his appetite. That lawlessness in the Western States has brought vigilance committees and an ignoring of the forms and courts of so-called law, is suggestive of the future there. The contempt for that trust and confidence one man should have in another is producing a rising in the throat in Canada which will result in a reform one of these days whether or no. The basis of all uprisings is the convenience of the people who, apart from all considerations of honesty, will not stand for being robbed to death. If one class has a right to make everything subservient to a dishonouring of the name of "business" and to a selfish vanity that both disgusts and amuses, so has every other class, and it then becomes "dog eat dog," a form of "civilization" that has produced a rebellion and an overturning in the past and will do so again in the future. In the meantime the "traitors to principle and humanity" grin and keep on. But their time will come when they will be buried in the dishonour which it seemed their mission to create. It is conceivable that political and business morality should be so far beneath that of the amateur sport little boys indulge, in that it has become a saying of the latter that "You can't do that here. This is no House of Parliament." If the fake methods of these traitors and grinning corruptionists were introduced into the smallest playground in the country they would straightway produce a protest as effective as edifying. Shall our children become our teachers, then?

CANADIAN TRADE

The only market Canada has for the products of the farm is the British market. Germany buys immense quantities of farm produce, but we supply none of it. This is the penalty of the Preference. A brief survey of the imports of the German Empire is well worth the making. In 1907 the imports by Germany were as follows:

Australia	$ 42,075,000
British East Indies	108,010,000
South Africa	11,016,000
Brazil	47,000,000
Argentine Republic	106,200,000
Chili	24,000,000
United States	316,000,000
Great Britain	294,200,000
Canada	1,859,891

The trade and navigation returns for the same year show that we exported to Germany in farm products:

Cheese	$ 5
Barley	628
Oats	1,894
Apples	62
Flour of wheat	1,743
Wheat	none
Rye, hay, pease, flax, butter, horses, cattle, swine, sheep, beef, ham, mutton, bacon, poultry	none

But Germany imported from other countries in the same year $50,000,000 worth of horses. She imported about the same value in barley. The Germans imported $18,000,000 worth of oats. They imported $85,000,000 of wheat. They bought 2,000,000 barrels of foreign apples. In fact, Germany imports $300,000,000 worth of agricultural produce, and the table shows what Canadians supply of it. This is lamentable. The handling of the German surtax has been like the Quebec bridge—a complete failure—or a fatuous railway and immigration policy. We sent to Great Britain about $80,000,000 worth of farm products in the same year. Why is it that out of $300,000,000 imported by Germany we send an insignificant trifle? And it must be remembered our exports to Britain are on the wane. How much better it would be to pay attention to the interests of the people already there than thus to ignore them in order that a great shout of triumph may be raised over an increase of population or the construction of the G. T. P.

CIGARETTE SMOKING

Any league that will secure the abolition of cigarette smoking amongst lads under 16 years of age is surely doing a good work. We would venture to recommend to the YMCA, which is holding a meeting to discourage smoking on Friday night that athletes be asked to give their opinions as well as doctors, since while the latter can tell of intensified heart's action, etc. as it appears to the expert, the former can testify to its disastrous effects upon an aspiring athlete. Smoking, like most other things is a form of amusement or occupation and as such forms if not excessive, a part even if small in the general make-up of a man's existence but excessive smoking ruins the heart and nervous system and cigarette smoking, for some reason, above all others is injurious in the extreme. Surely it only needs to have this pointed out by competent authorities to secure its abolition amongst the young.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed the opinion on Monday that parliament would prorogue on May 15th.

The Review extends its condolence to Mr Frederick Nicholls, manager of the Canadian General Electric Co. in Toronto, upon the sad and sudden death of his esteemed wife.

Mr. Fraser—I know that after Mr. Foster left the province it was reported outside that he had promised the tunnel at a cost of $150,000,000. But I never heard him make that statement; it was never reported in any paper in our province that he had said such a thing.—Hansard. April 26th, 1909.

But it makes no difference. Attacks like these to convey the impression that such bribes are not peculiar to the Liberals, will continue and with just about as much truth in them.

In an interview with Rear-Admiral Robley D Evans, Admiral H E Ijiht, commander of the Japanese training squadron now at San Pedro, Cal, stated that the sunken Russian battleships at Port Arthur were raised with little difficulty, owing to the fact that they were not sunk by shell fire, as has been generally supposed, but were sunk by the Russians themselves by opening the sea cocks. The Japanese found that the projectiles had penetrated the wooden decks, but had flattened out against the steel, and were lying there. It evidently would not have been possible, the Admiral thought, to sink the ships, by the fire from the heights.

UGLY SKIN SORES
Zam-Buk Removes Them

It is just at this season that pimples, blotches, sores, scrofulous ailment and eruptions generally, make themselves most felt. Zam-Buk will be found of wonderful use wherever there is skin eruption or deep-seated ulceration. Pimples, blotches and irritating rashes on the face and other parts of the body indicate a disturbance of the functions of the skin. Impure matter, which the blood should discharge by means of the skin, is allowed to remain in the pores, the process of "exhalation" is interrupted, and just where the bad matter collects, there pimples, ulcers, and sores quickly appear, and the skin tissue suffers. To be complete, the treatment must be of two kinds. The sufferer may help to diminish the supply of impurities by taking no rich, greasy and indigestible foods; but, to remove the impurities themselves, the pores must be opened and the skin made healthier by the vigorous application of Zam-Buk, morning and night, and washing frequently with some pure soap. There is none better than the antiseptic Zam-Buk Medicinal and Toilet Soap. Zam-Buk Balm stimulates the functions of the skin by the penetration of its refined herbal essences, and thus reaches the root of the disease.

Mr. Arthur B. Griffin, of 191 Picton Street, E. Hamilton, says:—"I was greatly troubled with pimples and blotches breaking out on my face. I tried a number of remedies, and also specially dieted, yet the pimples and blotches remained. Acting on the suggestion of a friend, I began using Zam-Buk, and was much pleased to find an improvement after several applications. The itching was alleviated and the inflammation seemed less. As I continued the Zam-Buk treatment, the pimples and blotches became less sore, the itching was cured altogether, and inflammation banished. In the course of a short time every blotch and pimple was removed."

Zam-Buk is also a sure cure for cuts, lacerations, burns, eczema, ringworm, poisoned wounds, festering sores, bad leg and all skin injuries and diseases. It is also a sure cure for piles. Stores and druggists everywhere sell at 50c. a box, or post-free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, on receipt of price. [illegible]

WINTER WOOD.

It Makes the Best and Most Lasting Kind of Timber.

It has long been known that winter was the best time of the year for cutting down trees for their timber, but until the American bureau of forestry published the results of some experiments no one was sure why. The bureau of forestry selected four pine trees of the same age and of equal vigor, growing in the same soil, and felled them, the first at the end of December, the second at the end of January, the third at the end of February and the fourth at the end of March. They were hewn into logs of the same size and dried at the same place. Then the logs were tested.

The December log resisted a flexile strain twice as strong as that which the March log resisted. It furnished piles which were still perfect and undecayed sixteen years later, while the piles made from the March log had rotted within three or four years.

Wood that is felled in December is less porous than that cut at other times. It has been proved that oak felled in the spring allowed water to percolate through it in from two to three hours, while similar wood cut in December was seemingly impermeable.

There is a very simple method of as three hours, while similar wood cut in winter or in spring. The former contains floury particles, which turn blue when tincture of iodine is poured upon them. The latter preserves its natural tint or merely becomes a little darker at the contact of iodine.

COPIED NAPOLEON.

South American Dictators Who Imitated the French Despot.

The dictatorship of Castro in Venezuela has been compared with that of President Francia, who terrorized Paraguay for over thirty years. Francia was a worshiper of Napoleon, whom he endeavored to imitate in every possible way. He possesses only one portrait of his idol, a German caricature, which depicted the emperor wearing an exaggerated version of the famous gray overcoat. Francia took this picture seriously and for many years paraded the streets of Asuncion clad in a gray dressing gown and a cocked hat, which he fondly believed to be the habitual garb of the French despot.

Castro's most distinguished predecessor was also a Napoleon devotee, but Bolivar had seen his idol and could thus imitate him more faithfully. He managed to acquire the emperor's brusque speech and other mannerisms, pulled people's ears when in a good humor and dictated dispatches to several secretaries at once. He founded an order closely modeled on the Legion of Honor; surrounded himself with a guard of negroes from Haiti, after the style of Napoleon's mamelukes, and endeavored to codify the laws of his country. When he returned to America after witnessing Napoleon's coronation Bolivar entered Caracas standing in a Roman chariot drawn by twelve maidens belonging to the first families of the town.—London Chronicle.

A Narrow Escape.

When Mr. Hartman returned an hour later than usual, Mrs. Hartman asked him the reason, and his good natured face was solemn as he answered her. "I haf had one narrow escape from drowning, Katchen," he said.

"How was that happen?" asked his wife as she helped him unwind the knitted scarf from his neck. "Tell to me it at once, Hans."

"It was at the ferry that I came late," said Mr. Hartman, "from the blocked cars, and the boat she was just starting. A man he called me out, 'Joomp, joomp!' and for one moment I thought to make as he said. But I reminded myself to be cautious and wait, and in one minute more, Katchen, came a great patch of water showing! Then I took holt of the post whereby I stood and said to myself, 'Hans, you were the wise man that you joomped not at first when that man advised.'"

Cracked Furniture.

Ugly marks caused by splits or cracked places in furniture are easily filled in with beeswax, and the mark is never detected. In fact, this is how furniture dealers cover such blemishes. First slightly soften the beeswax until it is like putty, then press firmly into the cracks and smooth evenly with a thin knife. Sandpaper over the surrounding wood and work the dust into the beeswax. This gives a wood finish or color, and when the furniture is varnished you will look in vain for the blemishes. It is better than putty, since putty soon dries, crumbles and falls out, while beeswax will remain forever just where it is placed.

They Needed Prayers.

A member of parliament tells a good story of an out of the way country clergyman who did not keep up to date in what was going on in the world. One Sunday he asked his sexton: "Is the prayer for parliament to be used today? Is parliament still sitting?"

The sexton's reply came promptly, "Well, sir, I don't know; but, anyhow, better pray for them, for they're a precious bad lot!"—London Standard.

Truthful.

He—Give me a kiss. She (decidedly) —I won't. He—You shouldn't say "I won't" to me; you should say, "I prefer not." She—But that wouldn't be true.

The greatest firmness is the greatest mercy.—Longfellow.

OF INTEREST

The people of Kansas know that spring days are near when the flight of wild geese from their Southern winter home to the northern nesting place begins but the ranks of this once mighty aerial army have been thinned by the sportsmen.

Thirty years ago the army of wild geese contained millions. In addition to the slaughter of the birds in their flight from summer to winter home they have been pursued in North Dakota and Canada and in their winter home along the shores of the Gulf of Mexico.

The path of the wild geese over Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas, many persons believe a selected because of the directness of the route. This is not the reason. The States named comprise the great wheat belt of the continent, upon the fields of which the geese feed on their journeys.

When they go south in the late fall the scattered grain from the season's harvest on the stubbed fields provides them with food. When they return in March the green fields are inviting all the way from the Red River to their Canadian home.

When flying the wild geese maintain an altitude of from 500 to 1000 feet. The peculiarity of their flight is the V shaped line with the apex forward, and the uniform distance apart which is preserved by the flyers.

The flocks are invariably led by a stout hearted gander who maintains his post at the extreme point of the V and whose clarion toned honk conveys his orders which are responded to by his converging lines of followers. The old residents of Kansas who have watched the habits of the birds agree on one point. When the V is rigidly maintained and moves directly and placidly across the sky it is certain that the flock is made up of the more elderly and experienced fowl but when the V scatters, breaks and the birds indulge in unusual vociferation it is almost sure to be the younger birds that are making the journey.

These cannot repress the inquisitiveness that the novelty of the situation inspires; they gaze with wonder on the panorama underneath, to the neglect of decorum in flight, and without a doubt the patience of the leader is sorely taxed. It is like getting raw recruits to preserve even ranks, and when once the V is shattered the troop is rattled, and most vigorous is the honking before they are again in order.

To rest and refresh themselves in their flight across the continent the wild geese alight in the great wheat fields which practically stretch from Texas to the Canadian boundary. They select their ground carefully, choosing a spot as remote from human habitation as possible, and so situated that they may see all the country round about, and thus be warned of the approach of danger.

While feeding every family posts a sentinel who stands in the midst of the feeding flock, his neck stretched high in the air, fixed and rigid as a statue.

With favorable wind currents they make eighty miles an hour, and sometimes they may reach one hundred miles an hour. This may drop to forty or fifty miles, and in stress of ugly weather they may be compelled to seek the ground.

The cold spring rains interfere with the flight. The birds get wet. There is not only the additional weight to carry, but the vanes of the feathers do not act with the usual precision, and when to this is added snow, a freezing rain or sleet to the earth they must come.

In their flight during a dark, damp night wild geese lose their bearing often and may be heard jabbering and quacking a few feet above the housetops. If flying over a town or city lighted with electricity they frequently dart against the lamps swinging in the street, as was the case in Topeka a few years ago. On this occasion sportsmen and boys with clubs despatched a dozen or more geese that had been drawn to the lights and stunned.

On another occasion citizens rushed out with shot guns and killed a dozen wild geese as they were flying just above the roofs of houses. The night was foggy and damp and the brilliant street lights so bewildered them that they could not remain at their accustomed altitude.

HE INHERITED HIS ILL-HEALTH
But Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured J. Baillargeon's Rheumatism.
Further Proof That no Case of Kidney Disease Can Stand Before the Old Reliable Kidney Remedy.

Monto Bello, Labelle Co., Quebec, April 28.—Special.—That a man may be cured even of inherited ill-health if he keeps his blood pure and his body toned up by using Dodd's Kidney Pills is the experience of John Baillargeon, of this place.

"I inherited poor health from my parents," Mr. Baillargeon says: "I was bothered with Rheumatism, Lumbago and Gravel. I was always tired and nervous. In fact I was a total wreck. I tried all kinds of medicines but I got no relief till I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. They did me good and no mistake. I took fifteen boxes in all, but I am cured.

"My wife also has taken Dodd's Kidney Pills and received great benefit from them."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. Cured kidneys strain all impurities, all that disease feeds on, out of the blood. That is why they always cure Rheumatism, Lumbago, Dropsy and Heart Disease.

LONDON, April 28.—London cables for cattle are steady, at 12½c to 13½c per pound for Canadians steers, dressed weight; refrigerator beef is quoted at 9¾c to 10c per pound.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 28.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning, the offerings were 600 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 535 hogs and 1100 calves. Owing to the limited supply of cattle, there was a stronger undertone to market, and, considering the quality of stock, prices were higher than on Monday.

The demand was fairly good from local buyers, and there was also some enquiry from exporters, but, as there were no cattle suitable for the latter trade, buyers did not make any purchases. On the whole, however, a fairly active trade was done, and a good clearance was made. A few very choice steers sold at as high as 6c per lb., but the bulk of the sales of the best stock were made at 5¼c to 5¾c; fairly good at 5c to 5¼c; fair at 4½c to 4¾c, and lower grades at 3c to 4c per lb. A few loads of rough ranchers brought $4.50 per 100 lbs. Supplies of sheep and lambs were small, for which the demand was good, and prices ruled firm. Old sheep sold at 5c to 5½c per lb., and 145 spring lambs at $4 to $6.50 each, as to size. Calves were very plentiful and cheap. The demand was good and an active trade was done in this line at prices ranging from $1.75 to $6 each, as to size and quality. A good trade was done in hogs, and prices were firm, with sales of selected lots at $8.25 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market there were offered 140 cattle, 60 sheep and lambs, 600 hogs and 1200 calves. The trade in cattle was quiet on account of small supplies, and prices were firm, with sales at from 4c to 6c per lb., as to quality; old sheep met with a good demand at 5c to 5½c per lb., and spring lambs brought from $4 to $6.50 each. Selected lots of hogs were in demand, and prices were strong, at $8.25 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. Calves were in good supply at from $1.75 to $6 each.

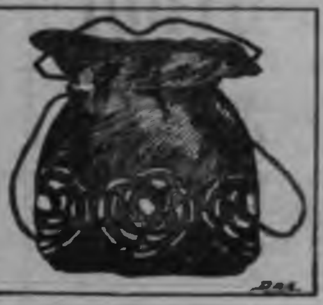
CUT LEATHER WORK.

A Fascinating Occupation For the Clever, Artistic Girl.

The old saying "There is nothing like leather" certainly holds good today, judging from the important part this durable material plays at present both in the furnishings of the home and the small accessories of the toilet.

The decoration of leather articles is an extremely fascinating occupation and can be carried out in many different ways, the style most in vogue at the moment being cut work, a simple and effective process, by means of which handsome and elaborate creations are produced with a minimum of labor.

There are many standard kinds of skins prepared for fancy leather work in varying degrees of texture, grain and thickness and in a wide range of beautiful colorings, from thick, pliable, velvety leathers to the softest suede or kid skins. Ooze and bark calf, Brazilian sheep, morocco and kid finished lambskin are generally employed.



BAG IN TAN LEATHER.

Formerly it was possible to purchase whole skins only, this entailing great expense upon the fancy worker, but now owing to the ever increasing demand for this popular form of decorative work many firms are supplying leather in all sizes.

Perforated patterns may be obtained, which only require transferring on to the article to be ornamented. It will be seen at a glance that designs for cut leather work bear a strong resemblance to stencil patterns, many of which may be utilized in this connection, especially when large pieces, such as chair seats, screen panels, etc., are attempted. A tiny pair of sharp embroidery scissors and a small, keen bladed penknife are all the instruments required. When the latter is employed the leather should be firmly fastened to a drawing board. Clear, clean cuts are absolutely essential, as mistakes cannot be rectified. Accuracy and neat finish are the keynotes of the whole.

Under the cut part satin or silk is pasted, usually of some contrasting shade. In the case of bags a separate lining is made and fitted to the leather. Thus an opera glass bag of tan leather is lined with deep cream satin. The cord, which is the exact color of the leather, is run through slashes cut a few inches below the top. A green cut leather cushion showing an intricate Celtic design has an underlay of satin of a little lighter shade than the cover. In some instances where conventional floral subjects are selected a scrap of gold colored silk may be arranged under the petals and art green beneath the leaves.

FRICTION IN THE HOME.

Ignorance of Cooking Cause of Much Domestic Unhappiness.

"Food is one of the chief sources of friction in married life," says Maud Churton Braby.

If this is true, the pity of it is that through the ignorance of the young homemaker in regard to the everyday homely duties of the kitchen much of this friction comes.

Many young girls know how to make splendid candies, desserts and dainties of many kinds, but of the requirements of a hearty appetite have little knowledge.

Mothers who are fortunate (?) enough to keep a maid do not spend much time teaching their girls how to cook plain foods and how to clear away the necessary dirty dishes, a most needful part of a girl's training. The maid is there —why bother?

And there lies the secret of so much ignorance among newly married girls. It is a great deal of bother to fuss over a girl, awkward and unhandy as she is bound to be. It is so much easier to do it yourself. How many times I have shut my teeth hard when my girls were learning.

It seems to me that the mothers need to go into training and learn the importance of teaching their girls how to do the little everyday things which "seem so easy to mother" and not leave this part of the training of their girls to come after they are settled in their own homes with mothers far away.

It is not the food which causes the friction, but the little details of labor before it appears on the table. The tearful, tired little homemaker gets on her husband's nerves. Impatient words, based on very little when sifted down to the bottom, would not have been uttered if before the little girl was married she had learned her lesson.

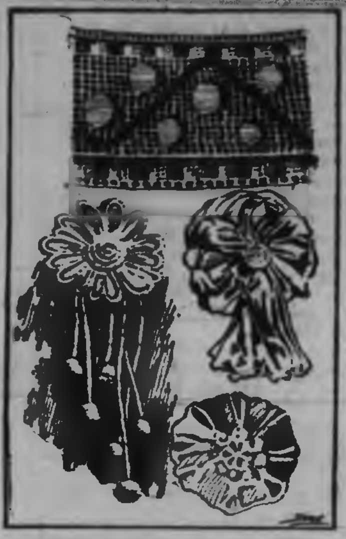
Designs on Net That Can Be Made by Amateur Needleworker.

Not for years have the modish trimmings been so easy to reproduce at home.

One of the trimmings most used this season, both on odd blouses and gowns, is embroidered net.

It is easy to fashion bands of embroidered net, as the stitches used for this work are very simple, being for the most part confined to the simple darning stitch. It is also possible to get excellent effects by the use of the satin stitch and the long and short stitch. The net bands shown in the illustration could easily be copied. They are worked in satin stitch with the outline darned in. A combination of the darning and satin stitches in a simple leaf and dot design is good.

These are not the only forms of hand work seen on the smart blouses and gowns. It is a great year for odd motifs in crochet or braid. Little ornaments made of braid, either with or without pendants or drop ends, are also popular. In the illustration a pleasing little motif of knotted soutache is shown which would make an effective finish for a soutache trimming.



HANDMADE BANDS AND ORNAMENTS.

The button shown is covered with satin and then trimmed with loops of fine cord.

In working with the net it is well to baste it over stiff paper before beginning to embroider the pattern; otherwise it will be hard to keep from puckering. For this work either Roman floss or soft mercerized cotton floss may be used. The best results will be obtained from the silk floss probably, and a rather heavy grade will be found more effective than a finer one. Silver or gold thread is easily combined with the floss and is very stylish and well suited to this work. In view of the popularity of gold and silver embroideries this would be a distinct addition to a trimming of this kind.

CHARLOTTE ROLL.

A Dessert That May Be Made Early in the Morning.

Take a piece of cardboard the size of the pan in which you are to bake your cake, allowing one inch more to lap over. Sew this in shape for your roll.

To make the sponge cake take one egg, beat the yolk and white separately, add one-half cupful of sugar and beat again. Sift together twice one-half cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Fold into the beaten egg and sugar. Add one-quarter cupful of boiling water and one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in a hot oven in a flat, shallow pan until browned a little, but not crisp. Roll and put in cardboard frame while hot.

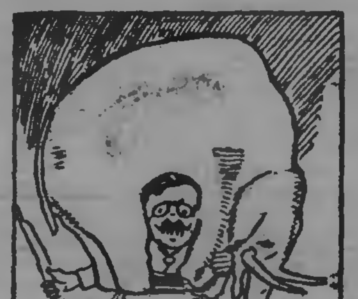
For the charlotte filling take a teaspoonful of minute gelatin and dissolve with two tablespoonfuls of boiling water. It may be necessary to beat still more to completely dissolve the gelatin, but do not add any more water.

Whip half a pint of cream till stiff, add two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and half a teaspoonful of vanilla. Have your dish standing in ice water while beating. Add the gelatin and beat till it is set. Pour it into the sponge cake mold and set in ice chest till needed.

This is a good dessert to use, for it may be made early in the morning.

Roosevelt in Pastry.

The woman who makes her own gingercakes has at some time or other taken pride in the clever shapes in which she turned them out as men, women, dolls and animals. It is most interesting to know that the Germans, who are adepts in this art, have made one like the picture here, representing President Roosevelt hunting in Africa and bringing in his own game.



W. Pressy of South Yarmouth, had his breast bone broken by a kick from a colt.

LUCKY MR. BROWN.

If it had not been for "Fruit-a-tives," Mr. Lemuel Brown, of Avondale, N.B., would still be living on stale bread and porridge, and suffering tortures with Indigestion.

His stomach was so weak that he had to give up all kinds of meats, potatoes and other vegetables, and even deny himself the comforts of a cup of tea. Fortunately, Mr. Brown read about "Fruit-a-tives," bought a box and was so much improved by taking the tablets, that he used four boxes altogether. "I have been a great sufferer from Indigestion for fifteen years. About two years ago, I read about Fruit-a-tives and concluded to give them a trial. I used nearly four boxes of "Fruit-a-tives" and they have made me feel like a new man. I can eat all kinds of hearty foods and enjoy tea and coffee." This is not a rare case, but the regular experience of everyone who uses "Fruit-a-tives" for Weak Stomach, Indigestion and Dyspepsia. Try them. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. ART OF ANAGRAMS.

Two Thousand Years Ago Were Juggled Letters In Words.

The art of anagramming is at least two thousand years old, for it was the custom of the ancient Jewish soothsayers to discover words within words for the purpose of their craft, and many an event was foretold by the simple means of an anagram. Then, the Greeks and Romans were fond of the same pastime. In the Middle Ages the craze was at its highest, and in the sixteenth century a French writer composed a poem of over one thousand lines, each one of which contained an anagram.

An author who began his labors just after the death of Queen Elizabeth, wishing to win the favor of James, the first of the Stuart line, hit upon the happy thought of evolving an anagram out of the words "James Stuart," his version being "a just master." But this gentleman was not without rivals, and one of these composed the words, "Claims Arthur's seat" out of "Charles James Stuart." As the King was then very anxious to impress upon the public the fact that he was descended from the ancient kings of England, he was particularly struck by this artful, but wrongful, anagram.

An anagram was once the means of convicting a false prophetess. The lady in question was known as Eleanor Davies, and out of this she made "Reveal, O Daniel"—there is an "l" too many, and an "s" which is not included, but it sufficed for those days; and this seemed such a remarkable thing to her that when arraigned before the judges she claimed that it proved direct inspiration. The court was in a quandary, until a quick-witted dean took a pen, and wrote what he considered a much better anagram upon her name. By prefixing "dam" (or mother) he obtained "Never so mad a ladie," and it was sufficient to convict the dame.

Anagrams on the names of kings and princes used to be very popular. When Charles II. came to the throne a courtier wit took the name "Charles Steurt," and manufactured "Calls true hearts" out of it. Another imperfect anagram on royalty is "Will choose France's Pearl," made from "Charles, Prince of Wales." The English heir at the time was hesitating between a Spanish and a French wife, hence the appositeness of the anagram. Of a warlike queen, whose name was Mary, a poet wrote "Army."

A FLOWER LEGEND.

How the Myosotis Came to Be Called Forgetmenot.

Dr. A. F. Thomson communicated to Mills' "History of Chivalry" the following romantic account of the origin of the popular name, forgetmenot, of the favorite little flower myosotis: "Two lovers were loitering on the margin of a lake on a fine summer's evening when the maiden espied some of the flowers of myosotis growing on the water close to the bank of an island at some distance from the shore. She expressed a desire to possess them, when the knight, in the true spirit of chivalry, plunged into the water and, swimming to the spot, cropped the wished for plant, but his strength was unable to fulfill the object of his achievement, and, feeling that he could not regain the shore, although very near it, he threw the flowers upon the bank, and, casting a last affectionate look upon his ladylove, he cried 'Forget me not!' and was buried in the waters. As the world insists upon a reason, this story is as good as another, but the worthy knight must have been sadly out of his element not to have been able to return from a bank on which his mistress could discern so minute a blossom, unless, indeed, we suppose him to have been clad in armor, which was a habiliment ill adapted for a lover by land or water."

What's My Thought Like?

A variation of the old guessing game, "What's my thought like?" may be arranged with the moralists. To play it the leader begins by saying, "I am thinking of a proverb which illustrates," for example, "the tendency of inferior characters to take advantage of any relation of authority." The other players are allowed to ask questions concerning it thus:

A—How many words does this proverb contain?

Answer—Nine.

B—Is it a familiar saying?

Answer—Among the most familiar.

C—How many times does the word "the" occur in it?

Answer—Twice.

D—Does it begin with the word "when?"

Answer—Yes.

E—And end with the word "play?"

Answer—It does.

F—Is there a mention of certain animals in it?

Answer—There is.

G—Is it "When the cat's away the mice will play?"

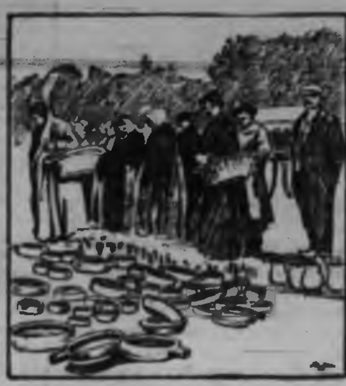
Answer—That is it.

ARTISTIC CASSEROLES.

Made at the Pottery Works of Clement Massier.

This is the time of the year when all eyes are turned toward the Riviera. But how many among those birds of passage who throng the hotels of Nice and Cannes ever take the trouble to make an excursion to Vallauris, the head center for the manufacture of these baked clay casseroles, known wherever the best traditions of the French cuisine are recognized?

The art pottery establishments of Clement Massier and his fellows at Golfe Jouan and on the orange and olive tree covered hillsides roundabout are as far as the seekers of souvenirs of the "Cote d'Azure" ever go in their quest. Massier is a great artist no doubt, though he might still have been a simple journeyman potter had he not years ago attracted the attention of Gerome, Cabanal, Puvis de Chavannes and the world of art at Paris, who prevailed upon him to devote his undeniable talents to the making of these exquisite forms and colorings which have made his jugs and vases and plates famous the world over.



WHERE THE CASSEROLES COME FROM.

Massier's work is to be found in the museums, but where one example is to be seen closely guarded in a glass case in a museum hundreds of the casseroles of Vallauris are to be found among the chefs' pots and pans of neighboring hotels and restaurants.

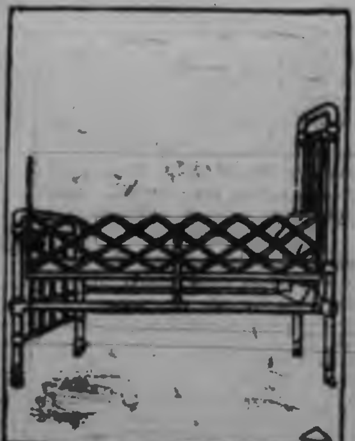
Almost within sight of Massier's establishment on the shores of the Mediterranean rises the tall stack of an industrial community of some 6,000 souls who here in the Vallis Aurea, the golden valley of the Romans, turn out each year countless thousands, perhaps millions, of these rough, shallow pots in terre cuite, which are exported to the ends of the earth. At least half the population of Vallauris gains its daily bread in the potteries, whose chief productions are marmites, poelons and casseroles, those faithful handmaidens of the masters of cookery, the French chefs. To Barcelona, to Marseilles, to Genoa, to Naples, to Alexandria and to Trieste are shipped daily from the little seaport a few miles distant on the shore of the Golfe Jouan shiploads of these rough made pottery cooking utensils and from thence are reshipped in great liners to all the ports of the seven seas.

Fifty establishments at least at Vallauris continue the old traditions, unaffected by the rise of prosperity and the art potters of the neighborhood, who produce more aesthetic forms out of the same plastic material.

A GATE FOR BEDS.

Crossbars Can Be Closed Up When Not In Use.

No cribs are required in households which are equipped with one of the bed gates recently invented, nor need adults worry about tumbling out on the floor during nightmares. The gate is of metal and is composed of crossbars pivoted at their points of intersection so that the whole can be stretched out to the length of a bed or folded up in a small compass at the head or foot.



NO CRIBS ARE NEEDED.

In the center is a vertical bar to hold the gate against outward movement. Parents who have small children sleeping with them will find the contrivance a great convenience. This device means a considerable saving in money to families who do not have enough little members to make a crib a paying and more or less permanent investment. A crib is of no use after a child is old enough to sleep without accident, and the gate here described solves the problem of how to get along without them—without cribs, that is.

When Japanese Wash.

The Japanese rip their garments apart for every washing, and they iron their clothes by spreading them on a flat board and leaning this up against the house to dry. The sun takes the wrinkles out of the clothes, and some of them have quite a luster. The Japanese woman does her washing out of doors. Her washtub is not more than six inches high.

A tramp who slept in the union school, Cedar Springs, over night, burned school books for fuel.

Sheriff James Tibbet, of Andover, N.B., thinks Radcliffe's charges as hangman are high, and may act as executioner himself.
